Nine clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1551, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four watchmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1551, before the word "laborers," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1552, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for the force in the Office of the Paymaster-General from $49,820 to $69,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Office of the Chief of Engineers, to increase the appropriation for compensation of one chief clerk, in line 1556, from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1557, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1557, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1558, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1558, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Two clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1560, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the force in the Office of the Chief of Engineers from $23,050 to $28,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1568, to increase the appropriation for compensation of one engineer in the War Department building from $1,200 to $1,400; in line 1569, to increase the number of watchmen from two to four, and to change the total amount from $4,080 to $5,720; so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of one engineer in the War Department building, $1,400; and for four watchmen and two laborers; in all, $5,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1574, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" before the word "laborer" to strike out the word "one" and insert "two;" strike out "laborer" and insert "laborers;" and in lines 1577 and 1578, to strike out "$12,160" and insert "$15,040;" so as to read:

For five watchmen and two laborers in the building occupied by the Paymaster-General, and for rent of the building, and fuel, and miscellaneous items, $10,000; in all, $15,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1579, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" before the word "laborer" to strike out "one" and insert "two;" to strike out "laborer" and insert "laborers;" and in line 1585, to strike out "$8,160" and insert "$10,320;" so as to read:

For four watchmen and two laborers in the building at the corner of Seventeenth and F streets, and for fuel for warming the entire building, including the Ordnance Office, and for operating the ventilating fan in summer, repairs of steam-warming and ventilating apparatus, pay of steam engineer and fireman, and for general repairs and miscellaneous items, $6,000; in all, $10,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, in lines 1593 and 1594, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the chief clerk of the Navy Department from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1594 and 1595, to increase the appropriation for compensation of one disbursing clerk from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1596, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1596, to strike out the words "one clerk," and insert "two clerks;" so as to read:

Two clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1597, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1597, to strike out "one messenger" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Two messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1598 and 1599, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the office of the Secretary of the Navy from $28,780 to $35,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1604 and 1605, in the appropriations for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, to insert after the word "dollars" the words "one draughtsman, $1,800;" and in lines 1607 and 1608, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the Bureau of Yards and Docks from $10,360 to $12,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1616, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting from $11,410 to $11,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1623, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the Bureau of Navigation from $6,110 to $6,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1629, in the appropriations for the Bureau of Ordnance, to increase the appropriation for compensation of draughtsmen from $1,600 to $1,800; in lines 1629 and 1630, to provide for two clerks instead of one clerk of class two; and in line 1631, to increase the total from $7,710 to $9,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Bureau of Construction and Repair, to increase the appropriation, in line 1637, for compensation of draughtsmen from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1638, to strike out the words "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" so as to read:

Two clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1638, before the word "clerk," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" so as to read:

Two clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1639 and 1640, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the Bureau of Construction and Repair from $9,310 to $12,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Bureau of Steam Engineering, to insert after the word "dollars, in line 1645, the words "one draughtsman, at $1,800; one assistant draughtsman, at $1,600;" and in lines 1648 and 1649, to increase the total from $4,660 to $7,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, to strike out the words "one clerk," in line 1655, and insert "two clerks;" so as to read: "Two clerks of class three;" in line 1656, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read: "Three clerks of class one;" and in lines 1657 and 1658, to increase the total from $11,410 to $14,760.

The next amendment was in lines 1661 and 1662, to strike out the words "one clerk of class four" and insert "chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of class three;" in line 1663, after the word "messenger," to insert "and one laborer;" and in line 1664, after the word "all," to strike out "2,440" and insert "4,960;" so that the clause will read:

Bureau of Medicine and Surgery:

For chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of class three, one messenger, and one laborer, in all, $4,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1668, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" before the word "laborer," to strike out "one" and insert "two," and to strike out "laborer" and insert "laborers," and after the word "all," in line 1669, to strike out "two thousand one hundred and sixty" and insert "five thousand and forty;" so as to read:

For five watchmen and two laborers for the building occupied by the Navy Department; in all, $5,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate is certainly wearied, as I know I am. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and eighteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 3, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WHISKY FRAUDS.

Mr. CATE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CASWELL. I reserve the right to object to the resolution after I shall have heard it read.

Mr. PAGE. I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CATE. I offer the following resolution for action now:

Resolved, That the special committee of the House of Representatives appointed to investigate the so-called whisky frauds in Saint Louis, Missouri, are authorized and directed to investigate the question of frauds on the revenue in the manufacture of whisky and high wines in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and whether any officers of the United States were concerned therein.

Mr. HURLBUT. I object to that resolution.

PRODUCTS OF GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. BLAND. I ask to have printed a bill to utilize the products of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes, being a substitute for the bill H. R. No. 3363, as amended by the committee. The bill comes from the Committee on Mines and Mining with a favorable recommendation, and I ask to have the usual number of copies printed, and also to have it printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is it an original bill or is it a substitute?

Mr. BLAND. This is a substitute for the bill, reported back with amendments and with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. KELLEY. Will it not be time enough when the committee is called?

Mr. BLAND. I wish to have it printed.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand that the substance of the bill is such that it is a bill that should properly come from the Banking and Currency Committee; that it is a bill that is not within the legitimate scope of the Committee on Mines and Mining, but proposes to utilize the products of gold and silver mines by giving us a new system of currency. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BLAND. The bill was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and they reported a substitute, and now they report amendments to that substitute. It seems to me the motion of the gentleman comes too late.

Mr. KELLEY. Let the bill be read, and we can then see whether or not it is a bill appropriately belonging to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman having charge of the bill to print and recommit will not do any harm.

Mr. KELLEY. But he does not ask to have it recommitted.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the request to print, if granted, will be to leave the bill in the hands of the committee. If the request was that the bill be printed and some order of the House made in regard to it, that would be another thing.

Mr. KELLEY. When the Chair asked the gentleman if he wished to have the bill recommitted, he said "no."

Mr. HURLBUT. Let the bill be printed and recommitted.

Mr. BLAND. No, I do not ask that.

Mr. HURLBUT. It cannot well be printed without recommittal, unless it is to be acted upon now.

The SPEAKER. The effect of ordering the bill to be printed will be to leave it with the committee; it amounts simply to an order that the bill be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. If it is simply a question of printing, then let it go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLAND. I simply ask to have the bill printed.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move to amend by adding "and recommitted."

Mr. BLAND. There is no necessity to recommit it.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman evidently reports this bill contemplating some action upon it. It has not been read; it is a bill that should come from another committee; it relates to business not within the range of business confided to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is stating what he does not know precisely, though it may be the fact. The bill has not been read yet; and how can the gentleman state what is in a bill that has not been read. I desire to have the bill printed.

Mr. KELLEY. Let the bill be read, and then we will see whether I have not properly stated its contents.

Mr. RANDALL. How is this bill before the House?

Mr. BLAND. It is reported by order of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] to the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.] The gentleman from Missouri moves that the bill be printed; the gentleman from Illinois moves to amend by adding the words "and recommitted."

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 59, noes 34.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for tellers, no quorum having voted.

Mr. O'NEILL. Will a call for the regular order stop this? I want to help the majority of this House to adjourn before the 1st day of September, and to do that I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to take this matter from before the House by calling for the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to printing and recommitting the bill.

The SPEAKER. Then, unless there be objection, the bill will be printed and recommitted.

Mr. KELLEY. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. It will be so ordered.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3635) was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

WHISKY FRAUDS.

Mr. HURLBUT. I withdraw my objection to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CATE.]

Mr. CATE. I have modified the resolution, and I think there will now be no objection to it.

The resolution, as modified, was as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee of the House of Representatives appointed to investigate the so-called whisky frauds in Saint Louis, Missouri, are authorized and directed to investigate the question of frauds on the revenue in the manufacture of whisky and high wines in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and whether any officers of the United States were concerned therein; to include the transactions and contributions of the whisky ring in the year 1873 in influencing the elections.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There being no further objection, the resolution was adopted.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 115) granting the use of artillery, blankets, &c., at the national soldiers' reunion at Caldwell, Ohio.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a House resolution of May 25, 1876, a copy of the report of Hon. Isaac N. Morris relative to the condition of the Union Pacific Railroad between Omaha and the summit of the Rocky Mountains; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HURLBUT. I now call for the regular order if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] is ready to go on.

Mr. RANDALL. I am always ready to do that. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Before that motion is submitted the Chair will ask if there is objection to referring the bills now upon the Speaker's table to their appropriate committees?

There was no objection.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and severally referred, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 155) to amend sections 533, 556, 571, and 572, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to courts in Arkansas and other States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 599) granting a pension to Catharine A. Winslow, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Winslow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A bill (S. No. 728) for the relief of Martha J. Coston—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

An act (S. No. 808) for the relief of Charles B. Varney, of Portland, Maine—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (S. No. 863) to change the name of the steamship City of Brashear to Lone Star—to the Committee on Commerce.

An act (S. No. 105) for the relief of Dickson Shinault, late assistant keeper of the light-vessel at Wolf Trap light-station, in the State of Virginia—to the same committee.

An act (S. No. 118) granting a pension to James H. Woodard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (S. No. 294) for the relief of Charles E. Hedges—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

An act (S. No. 369) to exempt vessels engaged in navigating the Mississippi River and its tributaries above the port of New Orleans from entries and clearances—to the Committee on Commerce.

An act (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisal—to the same committee.

An act (S. No. 471) to re-open the lands of the Fort Sedgwick military reservation to settlement and occupation as public lands—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (S. No. 539) to provide for an increase of pension in favor of Martin Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (S. No. 558) making a further appropriation for the erection of Government buildings in Dover, Delaware—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

An act (S. No. 634) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the joint-stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington," approved March 2, 1867—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

An act (S. No. 675) to enable Horace L. Emery to make an application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improvement in cotton-ginning machines—to the Committee on Patents.

An act (S. No. 676) authorizing the construction of a light-house and fog-bell on Round Island, Straits of Mackinac—to the Committee on Commerce.

An act (S. No. 678) for the relief of Ephraim P. Abbott—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (S. No. 769) to alter and appoint the time for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

An act (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (S. No. 825) to provide for the more speedy adjustment of the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

An act (S. No. 872) for the relief of the family of the late John T. King, and of L. B. Cutler—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following House bills, returned from the Senate with amendments, were severally taken from the Speaker's table and referred as indicated:

A bill (H. R. No. 339) for the relief of E. D. Franz—to the Committee of Claims.

A bill (H. R. No. 341) for the relief of Louis Rosenbaum—to the same committee.

A bill (H. R. No. 1071) for the relief of Lieutenant James B. Sinclair, United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 1803) to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, &c., for the courts of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider the various votes by which these bills have been referred; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RICHARD S. KINNEY AND WILLIAM R. JONES.

Mr. HANCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3636) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Richard S. Kinney and William R. Jones; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that, with the concurrence of two-thirds of each House of Congress, the legal and political disabilities of Richard S. Kinney, of San Antonio, Texas, and William R. Jones, of Laredo, Texas, imposed by reason of their participation in the late war, be removed.

Mr. HURLBUT. Has the customary petition been filed?

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes, sir; there are petitions on file in both cases.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest that the phraseology of the bill be varied so as to provide in the usual form for the removal of disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have no objection to such an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to modifying the bill in the manner indicated?

There being no objection, the bill was modified accordingly.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN OHIO RIVER.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1636) to re-imburse certain citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, for money paid to remove obstructions in the Ohio River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the expenses of a general council of certain Indians in the Indian Territory, as provided by the twelfth article of the treaty with the Cherokees of July 19, 1866, the tenth article of the treaty with the Creeks of June 14, 1866, the seventh article of the treaty with the Seminoles of March 21, 1866, and the eighth article of the treaty with the Choctaws and Chickasaws of April 28, 1866, $5,000.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move in line 1185 to strike out "5" and insert "1;" so it will read "$1,000."

Mr. RANDALL. This subject was considered in the committee, and $5,000 was agreed to. This money is expended in the Indian Territory. Certain representatives of the various Indian tribes met in a congress, as it were, to recommend certain laws or regulations which shall govern the Indians in that Territory. The amount appropriated last year was $3,000. The estimate this year was for $7,000 because of increased representation. We heard representatives on the one side, and on the other side we heard through the gentleman from Missouri, who now offers the amendment. After due consideration the committee agreed to $5,000, which is $2,000 more than they had last year, but $2,000 less than was deemed adequate by the Department.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. In my opinion there is no necessity for the expenditure of any money for the purpose indicated by this clause of the bill. It has heretofore accomplished no good and will not hereafter. There is no provision of law requiring any such appropriation. The treaty of 1866 provides the different tribes may meet in council from year to year. This appropriation has accomplished no good whatever. I understand there are but five tribes in the Indian Territory which send representatives to this council, and the only object seems to be to expend money. I have a letter from Mr. Boudinot which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14, 1876.

SIR: An appropriation for the general council of the Indian Territory is, in my judgment, unnecessary.

This council was organized six or seven years ago, under the treaties of 1866, with the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles.

The first section of the eighth article of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1866 provides that such a council "may be annually convened." The other treaties above mentioned contain the same provision.

The general council was designed by these treaties to be a legislative assembly, as the following from the fourth section of the eighth article of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1866 will show:

"The general assembly (or general council) shall have power to legislate upon all subjects and matters pertaining to the intercourse and relations of the Indian tribes and nations resident in the said Territory, the arrest and extradition of criminals escaping from one tribe to another, the administration of justice between members of the several tribes of the said Territory, and persons other than Indians, and members of said tribes or nations, the construction of works of internal improvement, and the common defense and safety of the nations of the said Territory. All laws enacted by said council shall take effect at the times therein provided, unless suspended by the Secretary of the Interior or the President of the United States. No law shall be enacted inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the laws of Congress, or existing treaty stipulations with the United States; nor shall said council legislate upon matters pertaining to the legislative, judicial, or other organization, laws, or customs of the several tribes or nations, except as herein provided for."

It will be seen that this general council or assembly is empowered to enact laws. This implies that there should be in this Territory a judiciary to expound and an executive to execute such laws as might be enacted. Neither of these branches of a government has as yet been granted by Congress to this Territory, and until they are granted the legislative council is entirely nugatory.

There are thirty-four tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, all having treaty relations with the United States; out of this number only five have made any stipulation, by treaty or otherwise, for the organization of this council, namely, the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, Cherokee, and Seminole; and of these the Chickasaws have refused to send delegates to the council for the last four or five years.

The council can be productive of no possible good until the other departments of a territorial government are provided for by act of Congress, as is contemplated by the treaties of 1866 with the five civilized nations.

If it is argued that the commingling of representatives of the civilized with the savage Indians has a good effect upon the latter, then I suggest, instead of this stupendous farce annually convened at the expense of thousands of dollars, that an appropriation of $500, to enable a few wise men from the five civilized nations before mentioned to visit Fort Sill, where the wild Indians are mostly gathered, would be much more economical and effective. No attempt to enact any law has yet been made by this council.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELIAS C. BOUDINOT.

Hon. ERASTUS WELLS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the committee will not strike out this proposed appropriation or that my friend from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] will not press his amendment. A very intelligent gentleman belonging to one of these five civilized tribes came before the Committee on Appropriations and presented absolutely conclusive reasons why this Government should encourage this legislative assembly composed of representatives of the various tribes which have been gathered together in this Indian Territory. We are furnished the last opportunity on the face of this continent for the Indian to achieve whatever he can in the progress of civilization. And, sir, I hold it to be the very highest duty of this Government to encourage these tribes that have been progressing for years in the pathways of civilization in accomplishing whatever they can in the betterment and improvement of their condition.

I hold in my hand a journal purporting to be the journal of the sixth annual session of the General Council of the Indian Territory, composed of delegates duly elected from the Indian tribes legally resident therein, assembled in council at Ocmulgee, Indian Territory, from the 3d to the 15th, inclusive, of May, 1875. I have run over with great interest the proceedings of that council, that legislative body, that congress of these Indians, and I felt strongly impressed with confidence that such an assemblage of the representatives of these Indian tribes cannot fail to be beneficial not only to them, but to the wild Indian tribes who will be assembled within the limits of that Territory, because it is the policy of the Government to bring them all there in the course of time.

Now the amount proposed to be appropriated is trivial. This congress up to the present time, up to its sixth assemblage, has displayed the capacity of these Indians for self-government. They have a constitution of government somewhat similar to our own, the various tribes constituting separate states as it were, and this council enacts legislation upon many subjects common to them all. They meet together, discuss whatever affects them as individual tribes and whatever concerns their kindred, the Indians scattered over the wide wastes of this country from its northern to its southern boundary.

I do not know any stronger appeal which can be made to Congress for a reasonable appropriation of money, and especially for the small appropriation here provided, than the fact that these very intelligent Indians are seeking to improve in the science of government of their own people and the people of other tribes brought into that Territory under their influence. I do not see why we should not encourage the exercise of self-government among these Indian tribes. It is in the interest of peace this small appropriation is sought to be made; it is with a view to develop all the capacity for government of these Indian tribes.

I trust this committee with absolute unanimity will consent that this appropriation shall be made. I am aware that there are powerful motives now operating upon this Government to break in upon this territory and destroy whatever is left of these fast-fading-away tribes of Indians, who are disappearing steadily, hopelessly, from the face of the earth; that there are powerful motives for rendering their attempt at free government a failure, so that the great corporations which have been permitted to occupy that territory shall the more effectually accomplish their rapacious purposes. I know that my friend from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] has no sympathy with these schemes. But he doubts the capacity of these tribes for self-government, and therefore thinks this appropriation should not be made. I have great hopes of their capacity for self-government, and desire to encourage them.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman what are the purposes which the corporations to which he refers desire to accomplish?

Mr. HOLMAN. They desire to secure that vast empire of land within the limits of that territory which, on the condition of the Government of the United States acquiring control of that territory, they are entitled to receive.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I wish to say to the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. I move to strike out the last word.

I think that no proposition like that now pending could have been made by the authority either of the Indian Committee or of the Appropriations Committee, unless they have come to a very different conclusion upon reading the annual journal of proceedings of these tribes from that to which I have come. No document has been laid upon the tables of members during this or a preceding Congress that has more interest in connection with the peaceful civilization of the Indians than has the document which contains the proceedings of this assemblage of the representatives of the various Indian tribes. It reminds me in some respects of the recitals of experiences at a Methodist camp-meeting. From all grades of tribes, under various grades of civilization, there come representatives talking with those who have attained a higher degree of civilization and showing that they are endeavoring to imitate the most advanced in the progress of their civilization. They tell how they are planting crops or raising cattle, and what success they have had; their talk in this respect being like that at our county agricultural meetings in the West. One recites his advantageous experience and shows how he arrived at success. The others listen, and hope, as they express it, to get where their brothers have already arrived in the course of a few years. Another says, "We have schools of such and such a character among our tribes and so many of our children are being educated." Others say, "We have not got so far, but hope to arrive there soon."

The exchange of facts and theories of civilization among these Indians themselves in their own language is doing more than your Indian agents are able to do for the direct promotion of their civilization; for an Indian believes that what another Indian has done he will some time be able to do.

This also has a direct influence upon the peace maintained by these tribes. Every few years there comes some addition to the tribes settled in the Indian Territory. Representatives of the wild tribes come in and see what the Choctaws and Chickasaws and other advanced tribes have done, and pledge themselves to proceed in the same direction.

I agree with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and am very glad that on this part of the appropriations he represents some Quakers in his district. It is the only instance, I believe, in which he has been heard in favor of maintaining these appropriations for civilizing purposes. A Quaker is the actual governor of these tribes in the Indian Territory, and addresses annually their representatives in council. The whole direction in which they are moving is that of peace, of progress, of religion, and of that gradual education which is adapted to the Indian character.

I hope, sir, that this clause will not be stricken out. The appropriation is small in amount, and the good that is done by these meetings is almost incalculable. I beg gentlemen, if they have not read the annual proceedings of this council, to take up any one of the numbers and read the speeches, made with all the characteristics of Indian eloquence, and they will become satisfied, as I have been, that this is one of the most useful organizations connected with the progress of the Indians. I not only hope that this appropriation will not be stricken out, but also that the gentleman from Indiana will give his attention to increasing in some particulars the amounts appropriated for what are known as civilizing purposes in the Indian Territory and at distant agencies. My objection to the bill is that it leaves this class of appropriations too small.

A single word touching the letter which has been read. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I presume knows, as I do, that the gentleman who writes that letter is not on good terms with the ruling tribes and authorities in these Indian councils. There have been serious differences between him and them. And I do not think, therefore, that his counsel upon this subject ought to be received by the House as they would receive an expression of the wishes of the great majority of the Indian tribes that are represented in council.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very glad to find the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] feeling some little interest in this bill.

I am glad to hear him raise his voice in behalf of these civilized tribes who are struggling to establish a government of their own, and I trust, sir, that in common with myself he represents a Christian people—I have no doubt he does—who feel an interest in all efforts, however humble, of these tribes as they do in those of the common race of mankind to accomplish whatever they may do in progress and civilization.

But, sir, why strike out this appropriation? I have heard no objection to it heretofore. It has been made I believe every year since the treaty authorized it to be made for a period I think of six years.

Mr. FRANKLIN. But why increase it this year $2,000 over what you appropriated last year?

Mr. HOLMAN. For the reason given by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] which my friend knows is unanswerable, and that is that the humanizing and elevating influence of this council has gradually extended to the more savage tribes of Indians westward from the territory of the civilized tribes. It has been our policy to throw under this civilizing influence of these tribes the wilder Indians within the limits of that same territory, and they are being gradually represented in this council. This council is growing in interest and importance, and now it is proposed that we shall go back on this policy instead of advancing on this line of encouraging the Indians in the line of civilization.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Was not this council established for the purpose of legislation in that territory and of bringing within its influence the wilder tribes? Now, I will ask the gentleman if he has the proceedings there of the sixth annual council, and I desire him to point out to the House where they have enacted a single law of any kind whatsoever?

Mr. HOLMAN. Among the delegates in council last year there were represented—

Creeks: J. R. Moore, C. Micco, N. B. Moore, P. Porter, D. W. McIntosh, Frieland McIntosh, J. M. Perryman, James Larney, C. McIntosh, Joe Sells, W. Coachman, T. Adams, W. F. McIntosh, and J. Haynes.

Cherokees: S. Lebell, R. Bunch, James Ketchum, B. H. Sixkiller, C. Hicks, and J. W. Markham.

Choctaws: F. Anderson, James King, T. Holman, Me-ha-tubbee, Mish-a-ma-tubbee, William Johnson, N. McCoy, J. W. Lawrence, and John Williams.

Seminoles: L. Cloud, E. J. Brown, and New King.

Pawnees: Good Chief, Tur-se-le-con-waw-ho, Sun Chief, and Captain Chief.

Keechies, Confederated Peorias, Eastern Shawnees, Absentee Shawnees, Black Bob Shawnees, Ottawas, Modocs, Sacs and Foxes, Mexican Kickapoos, Wichitas, Wacoes, Comanches, Tawacarroes, Caddoes, Anadarkoes, Delawares, Kaws, Osages, Pottawatomies, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Wyandotts, Quapaws, and Senecas.

Mr. FRANKLIN. That is not answering my question.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must see the difficulty that I have in pronouncing these names and should not embarrass me by interruptions. I answer his question by showing this large representation from these numerous tribes in this council.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I ask you to show a single law they have enacted.

Mr. HOLMAN. They have adopted a constitution and I have not read their code of laws.

Mr. FRANKLIN. You cannot find it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have their constitution, and if they have met there for no other purpose but for the adoption of a constitution and government similar to our own in which the several tribes are organized as states, if they have accomplished nothing more than the organization of a government and bringing together these various tribes from the far south up to the English line for no other purpose than to exchange views in regard to the progress they are making under the influence of peace and under the influence of harmony, why then this little bagatelle of $5,000 a year is nothing.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. WELLS] will receive the sanction of this House. When I ask the gentleman from Indiana who is championing this five-thousand-dollar appropriation to point to a single law, to a single statute, or anything that this general council has done in pursuance of the law that established that general council, what does he say in reply to my question? Why, he commences reading the journal of the sixth annual session and reads a list of delegates and the tribes they represent, but neglects to answer the question.

I will send to the Clerk's desk to have read section 3 of article 10 of the treaty with the Creek Indians, as I want the House to know the purpose for which this general council was established.

The Clerk read as follows:

Said general council shall have power to legislate upon all rightful subjects and matters pertaining to the intercourse and relations of the Indian tribes and nations resident in said territory, the arrest and extradition of criminals and offenders escaping from one tribe to another, the administration of justice between members of the several tribes of said territory and persons other than Indians and members of said tribes or nations, the construction of works of internal improvement, and the common defense and safety of the nations of said territory. All laws enacted by said general council shall take effect at such time as shall therein be provided, unless suspended by direction of the Secretary of the Interior or the President of the United States. No law shall be enacted inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the laws of Congress, or existing treaty stipulations with the United States, nor shall said council legislate upon matters pertaining to the organization, laws, or customs of the several tribes, except as herein provided for.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that that general council has failed in the object for which it was established, and that it not only does not deserve an appropriation of $1,000 but that it does not deserve an appropriation of one cent at the hands of this House. Listen to me while I read from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made in 1875, and hear what he says in reference to the consolidated government of the Indians in that Territory. I read from page 13:

Further effort has been made by leading men among these different tribes of the Indian Territory to procure the establishment of a consolidated government of Indians by Indians; but it has not succeeded, and this large population becomes more and more helpless under the increasing lawlessness among themselves and the alarming intrusion of outlawed white men.

Now, sir, although the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that there has been an increase in crime in that Territory this council has not enacted one solitary law to suppress it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FRANKLIN. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has not my friend recently believed that the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs was eager to adopt a line of policy which would give to two great railroad corporations a strip of land twenty miles wide on each side of the road, which is secured to them under the treaty of 1866, as soon as the Government has obtained control of the lands? Does not my friend believe that the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs was in complicity with a movement to accomplish a purpose which involved millions of money to those two railroad corporations?

Mr. FRANKLIN. I will state that I have no reason to believe that any such state of facts existed as the gentleman states.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it did.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Now, I will further state, in reply to the assertion of the gentleman that there were corporations seeking to grasp the lands in this Territory, in vindication of my position that at an early day in the session I introduced a bill, No. 943, which, if adopted by this House, will tell these Indians that the lands shall in no event become the property of any corporation, or of anybody else other than the Indians. It will all belong to them—these Indians. Under its provisions each and every person who is at the time of the passage of the act a member of any tribe or nation occupying a reservation in the Territory of Oklahoma shall be entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land. The bill also provides that, after the entry and selection of such homesteads, patents shall be issued therefor, vesting in the parties entitled thereto a full and complete title in fee simple; and further, sir, the bill requires that the patent shall contain a provision prohibiting the sale or alienation or sale of the same by the patentees or their heirs for a period of twenty years.

And in addition to this, Mr. Chairman, the bill to which I refer divides all the balance of the land in the territory among the Indians therein. It gives the Indians every acre of it. Not one foot of land is left to be grasped by corporations.

There is also a section in the bill which repeals all acts granting lands in said territory to railroads. For information on this point I will ask that sections 17, 18, 19, 20, and 23 be incorporated in my remarks.

They read as follows:

SEC. 17. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands in said Territory of Oklahoma to be surveyed; and that each and every person who at the passage of this act is a member of any tribe or nation, occupying a reservation in said territory, by birth, marriage, or adoption, including adults, minors, males and females, shall be entitled to a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the land embraced in said reservation of the tribe of which said person is now a member; and if in actual possession or occupancy of land, improved or cultivated by him or her, shall have a prior right to the quarter section upon which such improvements are situated. The homesteads of adults shall be selected by themselves, and those of minors by their respective fathers, if living, and if not, by their mothers or guardians. The Secretary shall prescribe the manner in which these selections shall be made, and shall prescribe the rules therefor. All persons entitled to homesteads, as aforesaid, shall cause entry to be made of the same in the office of the register and receiver of lands, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the entries of said homesteads shall be made by legal subdivisions.

SEC. 18. That as soon as practicable after the selection and entry of such homesteads in manner as aforesaid the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patents therefor, vesting in the respective parties entitled thereto a full and complete title in fee-simple to each of said homesteads so selected, including the possessory rights of said tribes and the ultimate fee of the United States: Provided, however, That such patents shall contain a condition prohibiting the alienation or sale of the same by the patentees or their heirs for the period of twenty years.

SEC. 19. That as soon as may be after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be made an enumeration of all the members of the different tribes of Indians now occupying reservations in the Territory of Oklahoma; and in making said enumeration each and every person entitled to select a homestead under the provisions of this act shall be enumerated. He shall then ascertain the number of acres of land in each of said reservations, after deducting therefrom the number of acres subject to be selected as homesteads under the provisions of this act, and the lands reserved for school purposes; and, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, shall cause said lands to be allotted in severalty to said members of said tribes, and in making said allotments due reference shall be had to the number of members of said tribes, to the number of acres of land in said reservation, and the quality of the soil.

SEC. 20. That as soon as may be after the said allotment or division of said land has been made, the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patents for the same to the persons entitled thereto, vesting in said parties a full and complete title to the same, including the possessory rights of the Indians, and the ultimate fee of the United States, and no condition restricting the alienation or sale of said lands shall be contained in said patent, except that any sale made by the patentee shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 23. That all acts granting lands in said Territory of Oklahoma to railroads, conditioned upon the extinguishment of the Indian title, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and that the lands of any Indian reservation in said Territory shall remain the common property of all the Indians rightfully occupying the same, until such time as said lands shall be selected as homesteads or allotted in severalty as hereinbefore provided.

A fair and impartial examination of its provisions will clearly show that it measures out full and complete justice to the Indian. It gives them the whole country. It makes them the largest landed proprietors in the United States. Point me to the State whose citizens own as much land per capita as this bill gives them.

The condition of affairs there, Mr. Chairman, must soon change. The change will come, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not be able to prevent it. As well might he attempt with the motion of his hand to quell the terrors of the tempest. The public mind is awakening to the true solution of this Indian problem. You cannot arrest the tide of civilization and progress in this direction.

What would the gentleman say in addressing himself to this question if the Indian Territory occupied the same geographical position to his State that it does to the State of Missouri? Would he then see in the provisions of every bill introduced here for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma the grasping hand of some corporation? Ah, I think not. He would then look at it in its proper light. His voice would be heard here, demanding that this wall of exclusion surrounding this Eden-like land be torn down.

As I have said before in the course of this debate, Mr. Chairman, a new state of affairs presents itself in the discussion of this question. The condition of the country has greatly changed since those tribes were placed in this Indian country. The wildest enthusiast in depicting the glorious future of his country would not have painted it as glorious as it exists to-day. Why, sir, Texas then belonged to Mexico, Arkansas was a Territory, Missouri did not contain 150,000 inhabitants, and her frontier was the scene of predatory warfare. Kansas, now with her million of people, with her garden-like farms and beautiful cities dotting her grand prairies like jewels in the crown of a young princess, with her universities and colleges, and her almost thousand miles of railroad, was then the hunting-ground of the untutored savage.

Does it not become us to meet this question as its magnitude and importance demand? We should throw aside the arts of the demagogue in its consideration. Let each bill introduced here for the organization of a territorial government for this Indian country be closely scanned and calmly and impartially considered. Let each stand or fall according to its own merits. But let us not in the zeal of sectional feeling unjustly denounce a just measure.

I know that bills have been introduced here for the organization of Oklahoma Territory that did not deal with the Indians in the spirit of equity and good faith, and there may have been the hand of some corporation behind; but I defy those who are declaiming so much about the rights of the Indian to point to one line or sentence of the bill to which I have referred, and which I had the honor to introduce for the consideration of this House—let them point to one single line or clause that deals unfairly with the Indian. I defy them to do it.

Now this debate has taken a wide range. Questions have been injected in this discussion that are somewhat foreign to the amendment under consideration. And I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that, had it not been for the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] concerning the organization of a territorial government for the Indian Territory, I should not have digressed in this debate; I should have confined myself directly to the question at issue. But after the remarks that have been made, after the covert insinuations that have been uttered, I have deemed it but justice to myself to thus briefly notice some of the features of the bill to which I have referred. I know it will bear the test of scrutiny; and in the light that the future will throw upon it, nothing but justice and fair dealing with the Indian will be discovered in its provisions.

The solution of the Indian problem so far as it relates to the organization of the proposed Territory of Oklahoma is one in which the people I have the honor to represent feel a deep interest. Looking to our future commercially, we almost feel that it is the paramount question.

At some future day, at the proper time, and upon the proper occasion, it is my intention to address myself to the consideration of this question at length, for it is one in which not only the people of my own district, but it is one in the proper solution of which the entire country west of the Mississippi feel a deep concern.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] should be adopted. We should either strike out the entire amount and break up this council altogether, or give what is adequate to the payment of the Indians who meet in their representative capacity under treaty stipulations. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANKLIN] is mistaken when he states that this council is not authorized by law; it is authorized by treaty stipulations.

Mr. FRANKLIN. With how many tribes?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are three different treaty stipulations under which the council is held.

Mr. FRANKLIN. There are twenty-five or thirty tribes in the Indian Territory who have not agreed by treaty to any such council being established. If they have agreed to it, I want the gentleman to point to the treaty stipulation.

Mr. RANDALL. Here is where the first council was authorized. It was authorized first by article 10 of the treaty with the Creeks, and again on the 14th of June, 1866, a further stipulation was made; and if we are going to pay any respect to this treaty we should give them an adequate appropriation to pay for the expenses of the council.

Mr. FRANKLIN. You say it is authorized by law. Now I ask you if there are not thirty tribes in the Territory, and if it is authorized in any treaty with more than four or five tribes?

Mr. RANDALL. These four or five, as I understand it, form the original basis of this council, but they are allowed to, or at any rate the practice is to bring in representatives of other tribes from time to time.

The fact is, as far as I can see, that this general council runs counter to the effort to be made to form an Indian Territory there. There are a portion of the Indians there who desire to have a territorial government with admission as a Territory and a Delegate on this floor, just as other Territories are organized. I must therefore ask the House either to strike out the whole appropriation and to break up this council and vitiate the terms of the treaty, or else make an adequate appropriation to pay the representatives from the Indian tribes who come to the council under the stipulations of the treaty.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I renew it. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] will not prevail, and I hope that the appropriation will not be stricken out which provides for the continuance of this council, because, sir, this council is one of the means of protection to our people. The Comanche Indians and the Kiowa Indians meet with the Choctaws and the Chickasaws and the Creeks, and all the friendly civilized and half-civilized Indians in council together, and I know, for I have personally conferred with those gentlemen, that they do continually exercise persuasive power with the Comanches to keep them from outrages and from predatory warfare upon our borders.

Now, sir, we have to keep troops on the confines of the Mexican border to keep the peace. It is the young Comanche and Kiowa warriors who violate the treaties against the persuasions of the older men of the tribes.

Mr. FRANKLIN. These are the ones you want to put upon the borders of Missouri.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman did not listen to me yesterday. I stated to the House that it was proved from history of the past that these tribes have a special enmity against the people of Texas, and against them alone, not against the people of Missouri and Arkansas, and I call upon the gentleman to state if he knows of a single solitary instance where a scalp has been taken in his State?

Mr. FRANKLIN. When the Indian meets the white man in battle he does not hold up his hair before scalping him and take time to ask him whether he is from Texas or Missouri. I know to be a Missourian is a great honor, but this is the first time I ever heard that it shielded any one from the scalping-knife of the wild Comanche.

Mr. MILLS. No; but the Indian in Texas finds the white man on the soil which he holds belonged to his fathers.

Mr. FRANKLIN. His hatred extends to the whole white race, and not to the people of Texas alone.

Mr. MILLS. Has the Indian killed any of your people in Missouri?

Mr. FRANKLIN. No; because he cannot get there.

Mr. MILLS. And we want to keep him from coming into Texas.

Mr. FRANKLIN. We do not intend that you shall place him on the border of Missouri.

Mr. MILLS. But the gentleman is carrying me away from this question. The amendments provide that one of the auxiliaries for the civilization of the Indians and the protection of the white people shall be taken away from us, and I oppose it as I would oppose the taking away of the troops that guard the frontier or as I would oppose the disbandment of our State troops. I oppose it because this is one of the civilizing influences of the Indians. Now, sir, I was talking to General McIntosh, who is known to most gentlemen here and who is as intelligent a gentleman as there is in this House, a gentleman who belongs to an Indian tribe and who knows what I say to be true, that it is the young warriors that create these disturbances on the frontier and that the old Indians are all the time persuading them to refrain from depredations. Take away this council, this persuasive body which protects us to some extent——

Mr. FRANKLIN. What does it accomplish?

Mr. MILLS. A great deal.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I would like the gentleman to state it.

Mr. MILLS. If it had not been for this council, instead of one hundred people being killed on our frontier there would have been five hundred.

Mr. FRANKLIN. That is a mere theory.

Mr. MILLS. Instead of our frontier having been driven back, as General Sherman says, two hundred miles, it would have been driven back four hundred.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Does the gentleman say that but for this council the frontier would have been driven back four hundred miles?

Mr. MILLS. I say that General Sherman tells you a fact, that our frontier has been driven back two hundred miles. And I say that if you deprive us of any of these means of protecting our frontier, take away your forts, take away any means of defense and protection which we now have, and the calamities that come upon us will be increased.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. This Indian question seems to excite considerable discussion. It seems that our Indian policy ever since we have been a Government has been a policy of errors. We first make treaties with the Indians; they break the treaties and we break the treaties. We feed them and bribe them into making treaties, and then we fight them and kill them.

In my opinion there is but one way in which to deal with the Indians, and that is to deal with them the same as we deal with other inhabitants and people of this country. We should place them under territorial governments, organize governments for them in subordination to the Federal Government, as other territorial governments are organized, and then compel them to obey our laws, as other people in this country are compelled to do. When we place them under our laws, make them subject to the jurisdiction both of our courts and of the military, then this policy of errors will cease, and we will have a policy based upon common sense.

Here is this Indian Territory lying between Missouri and Texas; it may be called the garden-spot of this country; it is fertile, beautiful, capable of being made a vast empire of commerce, civilization, science, and art. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or any other gentleman upon this floor propose that the Indians shall be allowed perpetually to remain there; that that country shall be an asylum for State convicts and a place where riot, bloodshed, and lawbreaking shall continue forever? Are we to have Salt Lake and Mormondom twice over in this Indian Territory, and are both of those evils to be perpetuated in this Government?

I say that the sooner this Government adopts the policy of making territorial governments for the Indians, placing them under the jurisdiction of Congress, the better it will be for the Indian and for the Government. This system of things cannot last always as it is. No one will contend that that Territory shall be forever inhabited by Indians, with a so-called government, antagonistic to ours, reared in the very heart of this country.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says that these great railroad corporations will be benefited by the establishment of a territorial government for the Indians. Congress can pass such laws as will prevent that; can establish a territorial government for the Indians and keep them under our jurisdiction. That must of necessity be done sooner or later, and the sooner it is done the better it will be for the Indians and for us, not only in respect to these tribes, but in respect to all the Indian tribes.

We will have to come to such a policy at last, for it is the only policy that will keep peace in this country between the Indians and the whites; it is the only policy that we can pursue in good faith toward the Indians; because, however many treaties we make with them, as for instance we have made with the Black Hill Indians and with other Indians, we will break them as soon as it becomes to our interest to break them, or the Indians will break them as soon as they think it is for their interest to do so. Hence it is that the only good faith we can show toward the whites and the Indians is to establish territorial governments over the Indians and govern them as we do other people in this country.

This amendment may look to that end or it may not; I care not for that particularly, as it is for a small amount. Still if we are to appropriate money for their councils to carry on their territorial governments, why should we not place them under our jurisdiction; why not impose upon them some obligation to this Government; why not require that their laws, if they make any, shall be subject to our revision, as the laws of other Territories are?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I renew it. The purpose of this amendment is to destroy the Indian council. Efforts have been made to establish a territorial government over these Indians. Whether that be wise or not is for this House to determine. This amendment is intended to destroy the Indian council and to pave the way for a territorial government over the Indians.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Are you opposed to a territorial government being organized over the Indians?

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. When that question is presented——

Mr. FRANKLIN. Has not the State of Kansas, which the gentleman has the honor in part to represent on this floor, through its Legislature memorialized this House to organize a territorial government over the Indian Territory?

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Whenever a bill for a territorial government over the Indians shall come before this House, I will judge it by its merits.

Mr. FRANKLIN. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I say to the gentleman that no territorial bill to invade the rights of these people will ever receive my vote.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I hope not; nor will it receive mine either.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. No form of government which will destroy their tribal relations and invade their territorial rights and give their country to railroad corporations will ever receive my vote.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Do you know——

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Do not interrupt me further. This territorial government for the Indians will require officers who can understand twenty different Indian languages. Every bill before its legislature must be printed in twenty different languages. I know something about that, for I had something to do with them during the war.

What is sought is a territorial government for the whites. Time will bring that about all well enough. But if you want to maintain the rights guaranteed to these people, you will do nothing of that kind until their interests will permit. I say that the purpose, and the only purpose, of the gentleman from Missouri is to destroy these intertribal relations, which educate these people up to a capacity for self-government. The purpose is to destroy these relations and establish a government hostile to them and to their interests, and to destroy their governments and with them their titles.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Mr. Chairman, I concur with that remark of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] in which he said that no bill for the organization of a territorial government in the Indian country would receive his vote if it invades the property rights of those people. I say that I would vote for no measure that would take from them in any manner one acre of their land or one dollar of their property.

I asked the gentleman a question, which he evaded, contrary to his usual frank, open, and candid manner. I asked him whether the State of Kansas had not memorialized this Congress to organize a territorial government for the Indian country. He evaded the question.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I will answer.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Well, let the gentleman answer it now.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I will say to the gentleman that the Legislature of my State the winter before last memorialized Congress against a territorial government for that country, and they memorialized this winter the other way.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I did not ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I say that as soon as an intelligent form of government can be established and as soon as an appropriate bill for that end is presented, I will vote for it; not until then.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Does the gentleman believe in the right of instruction?

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I will reply by my vote when a measure on that subject, worthy of support, is presented.

Mr. FRANKLIN. The gentleman has evaded the question again. He could answer very readily yes or no. He knows full well that his State has memorialized Congress in favor of the organization of this territorial government.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says that it is the policy of this Government to congregate all the wild tribes of the plain in that Territory. Why, sir, as a western man, devoted to western interests, devoted to the good order, the peace and prosperity of the section whence I come, I denounce such a policy as an outrage upon four of the great States of this Union, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, and Texas. The gentleman happens to represent a district that is not at all affected by this matter; and I have sometimes wondered whether it is affected by anything in the world.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a single remark?

Mr. FRANKLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend remember that by treaty stipulations and by legislation based upon those treaties, from 1822 to 1836, that territory was especially assigned to the then comparatively civilized tribes, with the distinct agreement that the Government should gather together there the various fragments of the Indian tribes, for the purpose of making that territory the home of these Indians? That was the policy of the Government then; and I believe it has never changed; for it was crystallized in the form of a treaty.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I do not understand that any such agreement was had at that time; and the gentleman knows very well (for he is a lawyer and has been a judge) that we can annul a treaty by an act of Congress. He knows that the Supreme Court has decided that where an act of Congress passed subsequent to the date of the treaty in contravention of an Indian treaty, the act of Congress prevails; and he knows further as a vigilant and working member of this body that this House two or three years ago passed an act declaring that there should be no more treaties with the Indian tribes of this country.

The Indian Territory in its present condition is standing as a great barrier to the progress and commerce of that great country west of the Mississippi River. The gentleman must understand that to-day there exists there an entirely different condition of affairs from what existed at the time these Indians were removed from Georgia and North Carolina and placed in the Territory. He knows that since that time gold has been discovered upon the Pacific coast, and that we have incorporated Texas into our Union as one of the members of this American family of States. He knows that great States have grown up all the way from the Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains, and from there to the Pacific coast. He knows very well that it is within the discretion of Congress to deal with these people as we think will best subserve their interests and the interests of all the people of this country. The people who inhabit that Territory are not the only persons whose interests are to be taken into consideration. Forty millions of people are interested in this question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I will withdraw my amendment, that it may be renewed.

Mr. RANDALL. I must object to any further withdrawal of amendments.

The question being taken on the pro forma amendment of Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. WELLS, of Missouri.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. From the information which I have been able to obtain in regard to this grand council that is so much spoken of, it amounted to simply nothing. It did some years ago adopt a constitution, which was submitted to the different tribes and rejected by a very large vote. My friend from Indiana is mistaken in saying that this constitution was adopted.

He displayed before the House the journal of that council. It is the only one which has been produced. Probably it is the only labor in the way of legislation we have ever had from that council. I understand the representatives of these different tribes come together, smoke their pipes, drink their whisky, draw their $4 a day for thirty days, and then return home. They never have accomplished anything and probably never will, except to spend the money we annually appropriate for their meeting.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to appropriate $1,000 for the purpose of calling those people together for a few days for the purposes of consultation, and that is about all the good they can accomplish, and then return home; but if those Indians are to meet together in their tribal relations as a legislative body, it will be farcical, for so far they have done nothing. Their acts in the past have shown this council has accomplished no good, and, as I have already said, the probability is that it never will.

To be sure the journal which has been presented here is well prepared. It is quite extensive in its character. The constitution of government reads very well. I know they have a few educated Indians in the principal tribes, but the large number have no intelligence, and simply go to the council to be feasted and spend the money appropriated in this bill.

In regard to a territorial government for these Indians, it was not in my mind when I suggested this amendment originally. I had no reference to it whatever. I thought it to be my duty as a member of the House to move the amendment. I believe in my conscience more will be accomplished by the appropriation of $1,000 than by the appropriation of $5,000 provided in the bill, to be distributed as I have stated among these people.

Mr. RANDALL. One thousand dollars is not enough. It ought to be $5,000, or the appropriation should be entirely stricken out.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. This is simply a provision to call them together for a few days, and no good can be accomplished by it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I confess to positive astonishment at the position which the State of Missouri seems to have assumed this morning. I do not know what hurt these Indians have done the State of Missouri; I do not know what means "this great commotion—otion—otion—Missouri through." [Laughter.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman this question——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Wait until I get through.

Mr. BLAND. It will be too late when you get through.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. These Indians have never raided since they have been in the Indian Territory on the State of Missouri, unless I have misread history, and what objection can Missouri have to giving to these Indians the means of acquiring knowledge of civilization and knowledge of legislation?

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman let me answer?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, when I am through.

It is said by gentlemen, "Give the Indians of the Indian Territory a territorial government." Very well. We have not given them a territorial government, and until we do give them a territorial government certainly we should do everything in our power to civilize and enlighten these men of the forest.

One gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FRANKLIN] asks whether the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] would vote for a territorial government. I answer him for myself, I will vote for a territorial government in which the Indians shall participate, but I will not vote for a territorial government that shall enable a few white men, who have no right in the territory, to control the Indians, and give away the rights of the Indians—give away the lands of that beautiful territory to a set of corporations which are hungering and thirsting to-day for the possession of that territory. When a bill comes that shall enable the Indian to participate in self-government in that territory I will vote for it, but until then I shall not be dragooned even into assenting to a proposition that will rob the red man.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Do you know of any such bill before the House?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. There has been one, and I am afraid it will come again.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Let the gentleman state what bill he refers to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I have no time to talk about a particular bill. If the gentleman's bill was before the House I would talk about it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. What bill do you refer to?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. The gentleman talked about confining the various Indian tribes to their reservations. I think we will have to pass an act to confine the Missouri tribe to their reservation. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRANKLIN. And the New York tribe to its location. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will not say the discussion of this council of Indians in the Indian Territory has been conducted with any purposed unfairness to the Indians. My colleague from Missouri on the Committee on Appropriations has just stated to the House they had enacted no legislation; that they had no constitution; that they merely met there to drink and smoke, and pass away the time. I have the journal of that council, and I find in it many speeches made by various Indians discussing the interest of their several tribes with a great deal of intelligence, setting forth in a most excellent manner the advantages resulting from the council. I find the draught of a constitution which would do credit to any people, and which is now being submitted to the Indians for ratification.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope I will not be interrupted.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I say the council adopted a constitution but the people did not ratify it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. It has never been ratified.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am talking about what is now proposed to be done. The gentleman is attempting to turn attention from what is in progress now among the people to another constitution which failed to be ratified. There may have been proper and just reasons on the part of these people for rejecting that constitution, but they have not stopped in their efforts to organize a government.

There is in this journal a draught of a constitution which, as I have already said, would do credit to any people, drawn and being submitted, or to be submitted hereafter to those people.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I would like the gentleman to read——

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Missouri has taken up the time of almost every member who has spoken on this question. I decline to be interrupted.

I say that this amendment is utterly unfair. The proposition in this amendment is not to strike out the entire appropriation; it is simply to reduce it. Now I say if we are to continue this policy let us give an ample appropriation; let us provide the means for all of these delegates assembling there for intercourse and for counsel. If the policy is wrong let us strike out the appropriation entirely. But I submit that an appropriation in support of a policy which has been adopted, and which has in many instances been ingrafted upon treaties, should not be stricken out without the House having a chance to examine the question more fully.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] refused to allow me to answer his question. He wanted to know why Missouri had so much to say about these Indians. Missouri, sir, has no enmity toward these Indians, or toward the gentleman from New York, or any one else. But she is opposed to the policy which is advocated here, and which was embraced in the amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] of colonizing every Indian in America right on the borders of Missouri, Kansas, and Arkansas.

I tell the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] that whether he would or not, his people would have objections to a policy of that kind if applied to themselves. And if a proposition was made to take all the Indians in America and colonize them around the State of New York, so as to prohibit in a manner all communication with other States, I think he would be the first to rise in his seat here and object to it. And the gentleman cannot "confine" Missouri in this matter. The gentleman may suggest that Missouri ought to be confined, but I tell him it is a State he will hear from in November next, and he may then wish it was confined. But it cannot be confined. The State of Missouri has rights on this floor equal to those of New York or of any other State, and proposes to assert them here before this body.

I have no particular objection to this appropriation, or to any bill proposing to establish a territory for those Indians. And I would not vote for a bill that would give the lands to a railroad company; but I would only vote for a proposition that would give the lands to the Indians and at the same time bring them under the jurisdiction of this Government. As I said before, not only these Indians, but all the Indians in this country, will sooner or later have to be governed in that manner and brought within the pale of our jurisdiction and our law. It is the only policy that can be inaugurated now with a due regard to common sense, and that will be just both to the Indians and to the white people.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask unanimous consent that debate close on this paragraph.

There was no objection.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,000," it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $15,000.

Mr. SEELYE. I offer the following amendment:

After line 1293 insert the following paragraph:

Support and civilization of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the support and civilization of Indians at the Colorado River, Moquis Pueblo, and Pima and Maricopa agencies, in Arizona; and Abiquiu, Cimarron, and Pueblo agencies, in New Mexico, $116,287.50.

Mr. RANDALL. We have passed the paragraph which relates to the Indians in Arizona and in New Mexico.

Mr. SEELYE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is nothing in this bill, as I understand, which provides for these Indians. The appropriation for the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico is for the Apaches. This relates to the Mohaves and the Pueblos, and various other tribes, numbering some six agencies, amounting to 24,000 Indians, for whom not a dollar has been appropriated in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Nor an estimate made, so far as I know.

Mr. SEELYE. The remark of the gentleman illustrates how carefully the Committee on Appropriations have considered the bill now reported by them. The estimates for these same Indians were made or included in the incidental expenses, which the gentleman might very easily have discovered had he inquired, and which has come to the knowledge of the Committee on Indian Affairs in their consideration of the matter. There is not a dollar otherwise appropriated in this bill or otherwise recommended in the bill for these Indians.

These Indians, as I have said, number some 24,000. There are some six agencies, and there is some work going on in these agencies very desirable for their good, and such that it is very undesirable that it should be stopped. For instance, there is an irrigating canal at the Colorado agency, where there are some eleven hundred and seventy Indians; an irrigating canal almost finished, capable of irrigating and bringing under cultivation some 50,000 acres, sufficient for the support of all the Indians in Arizona, could it be completed. Without this appropriation that work must stop, and everything else at these agencies.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say to the gentleman that we did examine all those items, and the next paragraph relates to them. When we reach it we will discuss the question as to those Indians.

Mr. SEELYE. I would like to inquire if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations means us to understand that in the next paragraph he has included anything in behalf of these Indians contemplated by the amendment I have offered?

Mr. RANDALL. When we come to the paragraph I will explain what we do provide for.

Mr. SEELYE. I shall have some things to state on the matter of incidental expenses when we come to that; but this matter does not relate to incidental expenses, but it relates to Indians for whom not a dollar is appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. Now the gentleman knows, and I am sure he does not indorse that action, that under the head of incidental expenses enormous sums of money are used for the purchase of goods, transportation, and advertising which do not belong to incidental expenses, and which, if they are to be appropriated for, should be appropriated for separately.

Mr. SEELYE. That is precisely the end I seek to accomplish, and for that purpose I offer this amendment to provide separately for these tribes.

Mr. REAGAN. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to accept as an amendment the words "Alabamas, Muscogees, and Cochattes." These are the remnants of tribes who have long been living in Polk County, Texas. Before annexation, the republic of Texas, in view of their fidelity to the white man, gave them twelve hundred and eighty acres of land, and what little they now receive comes from the State of Texas. They are to a large extent uninstructed in the arts of peace, and want that education which it is desirable that they should receive. As I understand, the aim of this amendment is to encourage that object. As to certain of those Indian tribes in New Mexico and Arizona, for whom the Government has made no appropriation, if agreeable, I would like to have these small bands who live together put under the guardianship and control of the Federal Government.

Mr. SEELYE. The Indians in Texas to whom the gentleman from Texas refers are not brought under special agencies as those are who are embraced in my amendment, but it seems to me that his suggestion is worthy of consideration, and I very cheerfully embrace the names of the tribes he mentioned in my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to allow these items of his amendment to be embraced in the next paragraph as we reach the items for the Territories under the heading of "incidental expenses." I can show that the extravagance of the Bureau has been enormous, and I want to confine whatever appropriations I have given them here to the legitimate purposes for which they are designed, so that they may do good to the Indians who are supposed to reap the benefit of them.

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman and I are entirely agreed as to that, and it is for the purpose of taking these items out of the incidental expenses that I offer the amendment, and he will certainly agree with me that this is the only proper place where the amendment can be considered.

Mr. RANDALL. In reference to the Indians in Arizona the amount appropriated for them was $64,918.10, and of that amount the sum of $3,441.46 was paid for goods, the sum of $4,133.12 was paid for supplies, and $12,002.46 was paid for transportation. There was $4,342.08 paid for advertising; there was paid for telegraphing $141.60; for agriculture, $7,168.13, and the enormous sum of $7,000 for schools, while but $2,520.17 was expended.

Now, as one member of the Committee on Appropriations, I suggest that instead of $60,000 there be appropriated $20,000 which covers the entire amount on the basis of a statement which I have made for legitimate purposes. If the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will cut down under that $20,000 for incidentals, I have no objection that it shall individualize the appropriations to the tribes; otherwise I must object to more than $20,000 being contributed to what has been used for incidental purposes.

Mr. SEELYE. The vehemence with which the gentleman emphasizes advertisements illustrates again the very great care with which this bill has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations. This matter of advertising is done, as you may say, in gross. It is the advertising for all the agencies, for the entire Indian supplies. It is the custom in the Indian Bureau in charging over the advertising to put it on the funds of the agencies where it may be most easily borne. In this business of supplying the Indians some agencies would be very much pinched to get their supplies, while in others there would be an excess, and it has been the custom of the Indian Bureau, a custom I think perfectly justified, to charge the advertising where the cost may be most easily borne.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman knows perfectly well that that is not a legitimate mode of doing business. He certainly does not intend to commend that kind of legislation.

Mr. SEELYE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not know but that it is a perfectly legitimate mode of doing business. I do not understand why it is not perfectly legitimate. The advertising is done in gross. Why should it not be charged where it can be most economically paid? There has been no transgression of law and no transgression of a proper mode of doing business.

Mr. RANDALL. This item for advertising runs through nearly every appropriation. For California the amount is $270; for Colorado, $550; for Dakota, $2,816; for Idaho, $1,751; Montana, $1,805. For Nevada there is nothing charged. For New Mexico it is $2,918 for advertising; for Utah, $1,952; for Wyoming, $1,661.

Now, I declare here to this House that this is an extravagant expenditure of money, and I do not see why this advertising for the Government should not be estimated for and appropriated for just as the estimates for flour, beef, &c., and not scatter it through eight or ten appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SEELYE. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that the gentleman has made no provision for advertising, and what impropriety can there be in charging the amount for advertising for supplies for the several agencies to the account which can most easily bear it?

Mr. RANDALL. I say that these expenditures for advertising are enormous and wasteful. Here is another of nearly $2,000, out of the Arapaho appropriation. The aggregate of the items which I have enumerated is far beyond all necessity. It is well known to the people who supply Indian goods when those goods are required, and they would all go to the Indian Bureau without any advertising, I believe. If they did not they ought to be at the three or four centers where the business of the country is done, such as New York, Philadelphia, &c. I find these sums for advertising scattered through in every direction.

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman surely is able to see this point, that this is exactly what is done, and the reason the advertising costs so much is that it is done in the great centers, where the supplies would naturally be furnished.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; it is merely giving patronage to political newspapers; that is the whole of it. It is one of the abuses that I have attempted to break up by the reduction of these incidental expenses. I maintain that the cost for advertising is altogether too much, that the amount of money paid for advertising is outrageously extravagant; and as far as I am able I propose to cut it off in the incidental expenses.

Mr. SEELYE. I have no desire to discuss this question further.

Mr. LUTTRELL. One word in support of what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said. On the Pacific coast the advertising has been done in papers that have scarcely any circulation, while the Daily Call and the Daily Chronicle, each having a circulation of thirty thousand or forty thousand daily, received none of this advertising. Most every man on the coast reads those papers, but you will find none of these advertisements in them.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask what the question of advertising has to do with the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE?]

Mr. RANDALL. His amendment is in lieu of part of the incidental expenses of Arizona Territory.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all; it is a specific appropriation for a certain purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. It has a direct bearing upon an item in the next paragraph, the incidental item for Arizona, heretofore amounting to $65,000, and now, upon the recommendation of the committee, put at $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Sixteen thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee have modified it and made it $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot see what the item of printing has to do with this amendment at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Nearly $20,000 have been expended altogether for advertising.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted. The question is upon the amendment moved by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.]

Mr. REAGAN. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] to accept the amendment which I suggested.

Mr. SEELYE. I did accept it, and I thought the gentleman prepared the modification he suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment as modified.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 42, noes 68.

The CHAIRMAN. If no further count is demanded, the amendment will be consided as rejected.

There was no further count asked, and the amendment was accordingly not agreed to.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to insert after line 1203 of the printed bill that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support and civilization of Indians in California; for this amount, or so much as may be necessary to be expended in the support and civilization of Indians at the Hooper Valley, Round Valley, Tule River, and Mission agencies in California, $45,500.

Mr. SEELYE. I do not desire to protract the discussion of this question. I offer this amendment, because I think it my duty to do so, as there is not any provision in this bill for these Indians in California, embracing between seven thousand and eight thousand Indians, some of whom are partially subsisted, full rations for whom would cost very much more than this, and some of whom are aided in processes of education.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I rise to oppose the amendment. In my district there are two occupied Indian reservations. When the gentleman says there are seven or eight thousand Indians there, he is very much mistaken. I happen to know all about the Indians on the reservations, because I have resided there in the immediate vicinity for nearly twenty years. I know that to-day on those reservations there are not exceeding twelve or fifteen hundred Indians all told. They have the best farming lands in our State upon which they can make and earn their own living.

I have a proposition sent from that section by Mr. John Matthews, one of the best citizens in my district, who offers to execute a bond of $100,000 to $500,000 to take these Indians for the next five or ten years, clothe and educate them, furnish physicians and ministers for them, and care for them, and for that he will ask only the privilege of grazing and cultivating their lands. I also call attention to the following proposition from Dr. Spring:

ROUND VALLEY, January 23, 1876.

DEAR SIR: Hearing that there is likely to be some change in the management of Round Valley Indian reservation, I desire to submit the following proposition in relation thereto:

First. I hereby agree to take charge of the Indians, clothe and subsist them—that is to say, furnish the same rations of food and the same amount of clothing each year that they have been provided with during the past year; also to provide medical attendance and maintain one school on the reservation for the education of Indian children—all free of charge to the Government.

As compensation therefor I am to have the use and control of the reservation lands, stock, tools, and agricultural implements; also the saw and grist mills; all of which to be returned at the expiration of the time in like condition as when received, reasonable wear and tear excepted.

The Government to appoint an agent to reside on the reservation and see that all the terms of the contract are complied with. I am ready to enter into contract as above indicated at any time, and to give a bond, with good security, in any amount that may be required, for the faithful performance of my obligations.

The contract to be in force for any term of years not less than five nor more than ten.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. S. SPRING.

Hon. J. K. LUTTRELL,
Washington, D. C.

I have here the indorsement of Hon. George W. Henley, one of the very best citizens of my State, a member of the State Legislature; and also the indorsement of a number of other eminent gentlemen in my district, who certify to the good character of Dr. Spring and Mr. John Matthews.

I have also the proposition of George E. White and many other good citizens of my State residing in that immediate vicinity, offering to take charge of these Indians, to feed, clothe, maintain, and educate them; and all they ask is the privilege of using the land for farming and grazing purposes. Many of these Indians are good farmers; they perform good work. The trouble is that the agents have been plundering and robbing them, and hundreds of them have left the reservation and refuse to go back.

I wish also to call attention to some extracts which I have taken from papers published in that county. One is as follows:

On Monday, November 29, Rev. J. L. Burchard—

That is the Indian agent there—was bound over in the sum of $5,000 to await the action of the United States grand jury in San Francisco, which we learn from a Covelo correspondent.

The charge against him was embezzlement—using the Indian property.

Here is another extract, which I have taken from a Mendocino paper, published in that county:

We understand that a severe personal encounter took place in Round Valley last Monday, the 6th, between Rev. Mr. Kellogg, the pastor and school-teacher of the reservation, and Dr. E. B. Bateman. It appears that ill-feeling existed, and on casually meeting hard words were followed by hard blows. Mr. Kellogg was fined $5 for assault, but we understand more serious charges will be preferred against him.

That is the way your Christian ministers have been managing affairs in my district; that is the way they have been plundering the poor Indians. And now they come here and ask us to appropriate thousands of dollars for those Indians, when God in heaven knows the Indians do not receive 20 per cent. of the amount appropriated. We do not ask a dollar of appropriation for them. They have the best lands, in the highest state of cultivation; and if you will allow a military company to go there and take charge of them, under good, honest officials, there will be no occasion to appropriate one dollar.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is in favor of reducing the Army.

Mr. LUTTRELL. No, sir; I am opposed to reducing the Army on the frontier. I hope this amendment will not prevail. These gentlemen to whom I have referred stand ready to contract with the Interior Department to take all the Indians in my district and keep them free of charge to the Government, to feed, clothe, and educate them, furnishing also physicians and ministers.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to amend by striking out the last word. The general treatment to which the Indians of California have been subjected by the Californians themselves would not favorably dispose me to any such proposition as the gentleman has stated for farming out that reservation.

Mr. LUTTRELL. What does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. SEELYE. In reference to the remark of the gentleman respecting the agent I will say that while it is undoubtedly a considerable calamity to be bound over to a grand jury, I do not know that it is a crime, and I do not know that it is in any particular disparaging to the party who suffers it, though when the facts are known it might appear quite disparaging to the party who procured it to be done.

But, Mr. Chairman, without discussing the matter, I will say that the gentleman from California ought to know more than he does know about this Round Valley agency, and about the agent there. Realizing my responsibility, and feeling fully able to prove the fact, I say that there is hardly a more creditable agency or a more praiseworthy agent than the agency and agent referred to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The gentleman from Massachusetts has said that he understands the treatment which Indians receive from Californians. I would like to know what he refers to in that remark. I desire to say to the gentleman that I was one of the first to go into California; and I wish to say further that the Californians as a mass are friendly to the Indians, and desire to protect them. Petitions have come to me signed by hundreds of the very best citizens, and the extracts which I have quoted were published in the leading republican papers of that State; not organs of the democratic party. One of these papers is the San Francisco Daily Chronicle, which has a daily circulation of thirty to forty thousand. That paper has published the facts in regard to that reservation, and shown the frauds and abuses existing there.

I wish to say further to the gentleman that I have in my possession testimony showing that the agent there tied up Indians and whipped them upon the bare back. I have a written confession of the agent himself to that fact. If that is the Christian system which the gentleman advocates, God deliver me from his Christianity!

I know of what I am speaking. I reside within a few miles of that reservation. Mr. Matthews, the gentleman to whom I have referred, is one of the leading church members in the district, and a more pious and upright man does not reside there. He will be indorsed by every man in that whole community as a fit man to take charge of those Indians.

Now, all we ask is that the Indians shall be let alone to mark off the land and to farm it their own way. Several hundred of those Indians have left the reservation and are now away from it; and I have now on my desk letters from leading citizens—republicans, if you please—asking me to use my influence with the Department, if I possess any, that these Indians may be allowed to remain away from the reservation, because they are doing much better than they can on the reservation.

The Indians from that reservation have organized what they call a grange society in opposition to the grangers; they have fixed prices of wages; they charge so much for their labor, and hundreds of them are getting work to-day. Not only that, but those Indians living away from the reservation chartered a steamer last year and invited the whites to go on an excursion with them.

They are enterprising and industrious, and if you will allow them to have their own way, without being influenced by the Christian minister of whom the gentleman from Massachusetts has spoken so kindly, who whips them one day and takes them to worship the next; if you will allow them to go on in their own way they will make good citizens, and our people will educate their children; for, sir, we provide in the State of California under our laws that Indian children may be educated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If the amendment is withdrawn I will renew it.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask my colleague a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to the withdrawal of the amendment, the question must be taken.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I should like to answer any question put to me by my colleague, who has of course the best interests of the Indian at heart.

Mr. SEELYE. I will withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought all discussion was through, and will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will yield to the gentleman from California to ask his colleague a question.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to ask my colleague whether, when charges were made against Rev. Mr. Burchard, the agent at Round Valley, a commissioner was not appointed to make investigation as to the truth or falsity of the charge, and whether the report which has since been made has not completely exonerated that agent?

Mr. LUTTRELL. In one sense of the word that may be so. This man Vandever, a man who lives upon the bread and butter he receives, went there. He agreed with me to go and investigate the matter. He agreed to meet me and go upon the reservation. I gave him a list of witnesses. Instead of calling the witnesses whose names I gave him, such men as Hon. George W. Henley, George E. White, and men of that class, he went on the reservation without meeting me, although, as I have said, he agreed to meet me at a certain point and then with me go to the reservation. He went upon the reservation without my knowing or being advised of the fact. Indeed I did not know he had been upon the reservation until after he had left. I have letters from Hon. George W. Henley and others, protesting against the investigation made by Vandever. He called none of the witnesses whose names I gave him. He called other witnesses, put questions to them, and put down such answers as he pleased. They all say the investigation was unfair, that they honestly believe he had entered into the Indian ring and was one of them.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, one word, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.] I do not desire to discuss this amendment, but I want to say to the gentleman from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL,] upon this matter as well as upon divers other matters since my acquaintance with him upon the floor of the House, that to hear him talk about the people in his district and his interest in that part of California, I have come to the conclusion there is more fraud, there is more rascality, there is more scoundrelism, there is more dishonesty there than anywhere else upon God's green earth; and taking the gentleman's statements as true, that if you want to locate the infernal regions, it ought to be done right there in his part of California. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUTTRELL. I admit, so far as the republican party management is concerned upon the Indian reservation, and also in reference to the Mare Island navy-yard, there have been fraud and dishonesty, for which the gentleman from Illinois and others on the republican side of the House are responsible.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not rise, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the merits of this proposition. I have been edified, as well as other gentlemen, by hearing my friend from California telling about the best families and best citizens of California. There is one remark, however, he made which has brought me to my feet, and that is the disreputable connection in which he brought the name of General Vandever into this debate. General Vandever's name must not be mentioned here in that connection while I am here.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I referred to the fact that the letters which I received from reputable citizens in California stated that General Vandever had acted in bad faith in the investigation of Rev. Mr. Burchard.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. You have used his name in a connection which I cannot allow to pass without comment.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Certainly. I charge, on the basis of the letters to which I have referred, that General Vandever did not act in good faith.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Those letters must have been written by irresponsible persons. General Vandever was a member of this House. When the rebellion began he left his seat, went into the Army and served faithfully. When superintendents or commissioners were appointed to look after the interests of the Indians and make a report to the Department upon everything they saw, without solicitation, so far as I can learn, on his behalf, he was selected by the President of the United States. If it is anything in favor of a man to speak of him as one of the first citizens of a State, I must testify that General Vandever is one of the best citizens of the State of Iowa.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I have no doubt he is one of the best citizens of Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then you must not bring in letters by irresponsible parties smirching the name of an honest man.

Mr. LUTTRELL. They come to me from the best men, for no better man can be found than George W. Henly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Give the name of the man.

Mr. LUTTRELL. His name is Hon. George W. Henly, and he is as honorable and as truthful a man as ever drew the breath of life.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Who is he?

Mr. LUTTRELL. He is a member of the Legislature from Mendocino County, where this Round Valley reservation is located.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What are his politics?

Mr. LUTTRELL. He is, thank God, a good democrat. I wish to say that Charles Eberly, a republican, and a good and honest man, with others, makes the same charge against General Vandever, that his investigation was an unfair one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move, by unanimous consent, debate be closed on this paragraph.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the withdrawal of the formal amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. SEELYE's amendment; which was rejected.

Mr. SEELYE. I now move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support and civilization of Indians in Oregon and Washington:
For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the support and civilization of Indians at the Grand Ronde and Siletz agencies, in Oregon, and the Colville and Puyallup agencies, in Washington Territory, $49,000.

Mr. SEELYE. Those are four agencies for which no appropriation is made in the bill.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEELYE. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after line 1203 as follows:

Support and civilization of Indians in Nevada:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the support and civilization of Indians in Nevada, $23,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SEELYE. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after line 1203 as follows:

Support and civilization of Indians in Utah:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the support and civilization of Indians in Utah, $25,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after line 1203, as follows:

For buildings at agencies and repairs of the same, $20,000.

There are now three hundred and forty buildings of all kinds at these Indian agencies, and not one dollar is appropriated by this bill for their maintenance or repair. There are at least seventy-five mills, two of which are unable to run at this time for want of funds to repair a dam. The appropriation is deemed absolutely necessary whether the Indian Bureau is transferred to the War Department or not. I think the chairman of the committee should agree to this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. We will put it in at its proper place, but not that amount.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I offer the following amendment:

After line 1203, insert the following:

For payment of expenses incurred by Silas H. Swetland, special agent sent by the Indian Department to make a per capita payment to the North Carolina Cherokees in 1869, to the following-named persons, to wit: Samuel W. Davidson, $213.30; Henry Smith, $554.66; do. do., $201; N. J. Smith, $100; James W. Terrell, $60; A. McCallum, $100; John Gray Bynum, $867.50; J. D. Abbott, $165; M. C. King, $212.03; M. L. Brittain, $232; Scroop Enloe, $125.35: Provided, That the amounts due J. D. Abbott, M. C. King, M. L. Brittain, and Scroop Enloe be charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I was about to say, before the gentleman from Ohio rose, that this is in the nature of a re-appropriation. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will be allowed to make a statement in explanation of the amendment.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. In 1869, Silas H. Swetland was sent into Western North Carolina to make the payment to the Cherokee Indians. He incurred certain expenses which have not been settled. The Forty-third Congress in the deficiency bill made an appropriation of $3,503.65 to pay this claim. But owing to the wording of the paragraph which was in these words: "for payment to the North Carolina Cherokee, $3,503.65," instead of the parties being named to whom the money is to go, the Secretary declined to make the payments. I hold in my hand a letter from Hon. John Q. Smith, which shows the necessity of re-appropriating the money which was actually appropriated by the Forty-third Congress. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3d instant in which you state, in reply to a communication from this Office, bearing the same date, that you do not feel authorized to disturb the decision of your predecessor, made April 5, 1875, relative to the applicability of the appropriation of $3,503.65 "for payment to North Carolina Cherokees," in the deficiency act of June 22, 1874, (18 Statutes, 144,) and, in compliance with your recommendation, to submit the following statement of facts showing the objects for which the said amount was estimated by this Bureau for presentation to Congress, with a view to further legislation.

In 1869 S. H. Swetland, now deceased, was appointed special agent of this Bureau to make per capita payments to the North Carolina Cherokee Indians under the act of July 29, 1848. (9 Statutes, pages 264, 265.)

At the time this appointment was made no funds had been appropriated, nor were there any at the disposal of the Department applicable to the payment of the expenses incident to this special agency. It appears, however, that Mr. Swetland, having signified his willingness to defray these expenses out of his own resources, and rely upon Congress to re-imburse him for his outlay, proceeded upon the duties to which he was assigned.

Upon examination of his account, the discovery was made that he used a portion of the money placed in his hands for the Indians in part payment of his expenses, and that vouchers rendered with his account to the amount of about $2,000 were settled by checks on the National Metropolitan Bank of this city. On the presentation of these checks for payment they were protested, and the claimants are still without their money.

It was the intent of the Office in making the estimate in question to secure funds for the purpose of defraying the expenses of Mr. Swetland while making the said per capita payments; but through some misunderstanding, or, perhaps, clerical error, the appropriation was made for "payment to the North Carolina Cherokees."

In view of this prior action by the Department and by Congress, these facts are respectfully submitted to the Department, with the recommendation that they be laid before Congress for its favorable consideration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I do.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think it cannot be said that this is new legislation. It is for expenses incurred in carrying out a treaty which was entered into with the North Carolina Cherokees in 1836, and is carrying out the order of the Indian Bureau. The payment of this money is recommended by the Indian Bureau—I see the Commissioner present now—and meets the approval of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. We looked upon this as a re-appropriation of money which was designed by the last Congress to be expended for this purpose as now stated. The difficulty was that there was a mistake in the paragraph making the appropriation, and the money is now to be re-appropriated, with the names inserted of the individuals who are to receive the amounts.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I look upon this in the light of a claim, and so far the Committee on Appropriations have refused to entertain claims.

Mr. RANDALL. We do not report this.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. This was appropriated by the Forty-third Congress, and was inserted in the appropriation bill; and it was done by the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not doubt that the Interior Department favors it, but I object to all legislation of this kind on appropriation bills. If, however, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations wants the point of order to be withdrawn, I will withdraw it.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir. We leave the amendment to the action of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. This amendment was agreed to, as I understand, by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it was agreed to rather by individual members.

Mr. ATKINS. It was agreed to, as a good many other matters are agreed to, by common consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the question of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio. This amendment seems to be germane to the bill. It is to pay certain expenses connected with the Indian service, and only differs from other provisions of the bill in naming the individuals to whom the money shall be appropriated. The second part of the title of the bill, "and for other purposes," would cover this amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. But I make the further point that it is not in the line of retrenchment.

The CHAIRMAN. But it does not change existing law. Therefore the point that it does not retrench expenditures does not apply. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I offer the following amendment:

For compiling and preparing dictionaries and grammars of such Indian languages as can be obtained, and for the collection of other statistics throwing light upon the history of the people of ancient America, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is certainly not in order.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. O! it is certainly not necessary, and is out of order. As a private enterprise it might do very well, but it is not a matter for the Government.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. It is a shame that we cannot go back with the history of our country more than two hundred and thirty years. These languages are perishing every day, and this is the only means of preserving them, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order made?

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly I must insist upon it. There is no treaty providing for it and no law authorizing it.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. It has been the custom of the Department for years past to expend money for this purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government has nothing to do with such matters.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. The gentleman knows that it has been done for many years.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would be of no possible value to any one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is in order, as it does not change existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not change existing law, but there is no law to authorize it; that is my point. There is no law authorizing such an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Several of the amendments offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] for various purposes were exactly of the nature of this. The Chair can see no difference between an appropriation for dictionaries and grammars and one for schools.

Mr. HOLMAN. Anything on earth can go in a bill if this is in order, and I must respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. It is for the committee to say whether they will adopt the amendment. The Chair does not pass upon the merits of the proposition, but he thinks it does not contravene Rule 120, as it is in continuation of appropriations for such objects as are already in progress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I will not insist on the appeal, as I suppose the committee will vote it down anyhow; but I protest against any such precedent being established.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that this is not the miscellaneous bill, where everything can be put in.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I regret to find a disposition to treat this amendment with merriment, and I regret that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] should regard it as of no value to possess data concerning the Indian history of the country. It is well known to gentlemen that for some years similar sums have been expended for similar purposes, and this is the first year for some years past when an appropriation for this purpose has not been incorporated into the bill.

I desire to say that already the means of obtaining information in regard to some of these tribes has passed away. We cannot go back into the history of the country more than two hundred and thirty years. With all our wealth and all our resources, we surely ought to be ashamed that the Government would not take the step proposed in the amendment to rescue the history of the country from oblivion. Gentlemen on the other side may not need information in regard to that history; they may think it would be a blessing if the country had no history.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that this is a proper matter for private enterprise or for learned institutions, or for persons who deal in the occult sciences, but for the Government to go into a work of this kind my friend knows is entirely improper; it is a matter for the curious and the learned.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Let me state that one of the most accomplished statesmen that our country has ever known, Hon. Albert Gallatin, when Secretary of War, and in charge of the Indian Bureau, used funds appropriated for his Department for this purpose. He belonged to the democratic party, but not of the school of the democratic party of the present day who seem inclined to decline to give us some fragments of the history of our country.

Mr. COX. I am always ready to sustain any bill that looks towards education, history, philology—studies of all kind, scientific, linguistic, philosophic, or otherwise. Any measure tending toward enlightenment would receive my voice and vote at the right time and in the right place. But, sir, I am reminded of an oath to support the Constitution.

Is there any warrant in that instrument which allows the Federal Government to become a competitor with the authors and booksellers of the United States in a business like that proposed by this amendment?

We have published, by a loose system of appropriation, a great many and a great variety of books. Some of these pertain to our proper functions as Federal legislators and officers. We have had expeditions of all kinds, some over our own land, most interesting and useful in the developing of our resources. Some have a larger reach. The South Sea, the Dead Sea, and Japan have had volumes at our expense under our imprimatur. We have, in a measure, stopped this; but it is only two years ago that we appropriated for an expedition to Judea, to look over again that sacred and calcined soil, as though we did not know, from a hundred sources, all about Jerusalem and the mountains and valleys thereabouts. Where was the warrant for that? Not long since a gentleman from Ohio proposed and had passed an appropriation of $10,000, for the purpose of having a history, written or manuscript, examined and collated in Paris about the early French occupation, anterior to the revolutionary war, in the Northwest and along the Mississippi. Afterward, when the matters were investigated, it was found that the rich Mr. Astor had anticipated us and given money enough to collect all of the material which was valuable on that subject, and the money we appropriated, I believe, was never used. That shows how prompt, if not how reckless, we are to pass measures of this sort under elegant and gentle appeals to our taste and intellect. They are urged in the interest of education, history, and enlightenment, objects entirely outside of the margin of our Federal duties.

Under the strict construction of the Constitution and under the old canons of construction that belonged to our party in its palmiest days, or rather to the Supreme Court, which has generally interpreted the body of our powers correctly, it was held that the Government had no right to give money for objects unexpressed in the organic law or necessary to their enforcement. Objects however good, like those connected with education, literature, explorations, and science, excepting precisely wherein the Constitution authorizes them——

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. With the greatest delight.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I would ask if it was not under the democratic party that the researches of Mr. Schoolcraft, Mr. McCoy, and Mr. Gallatin were conducted?

Mr. COX. I suppose that the democratic party have been at times negligent in carrying out the principles of their faith, (although I have never admitted it before on this floor, and it should not militate against the faith,) but that is not a reason why we should be careless now. On the contrary.

Suppose a man steals a horse; I am not bound to follow up the example and steal another horse. We bought the Schoolcraft books afterward, I believe; but no matter for that. Every time we go into this unwarranted business it is not unlike some machine I have seen up in New England. First, and thoughtlessly, in goes your finger, and if you do not cut it off, in goes your hand; and if you do not cut your hand off, then in goes your whole arm; and if you do not chop that off pretty suddenly, in goes your whole body, and then there is nothing "reserved."

If we look keenly into this amendment and similar legislation we will find in it the fountain of a great deal of our extraordinary extravagance. A careless survey of our duties on just such amendments and a shiftless construction of the Constitution are the causes of untold prodigality in expenditure. Yet by such amendments new bureaus—fresh leeches—are fixed on the body of our Federal law, and we grow powerless to shake them off. There is the Bureau of Education. Why should that remain? Why not remove that, and prepare the way for a happy riddance of the bureaucracy at this capital? If this bureaucracy had been abolished, if the barnacles had been removed, we would not have daily the impeachment scenes at the other end of the Capitol; nor would we have our committees engrossed in investigations and our attention distracted by them from our proper legislative duties.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. How is it possible to obtain this data except through Government agency? My amendment contemplates the printing of no books, merely the collection of data.

Mr. COX. If this information is valuable, either in a linguistic, historical, or any other point of view, will you not find enthusiastic scholarship ready to collect data and produce books and enterprising publishers to print them? I am not sure but what the Smithsonian Institute is already engaged in the object contemplated by this amendment. At least, that would be the proper place for it to be done—for "the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men."

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. COX. Why, certainly.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. In order that one of the Indian languages, the Iroquois, should be preserved, I visited Professor Henry perhaps a year and a half ago, and desired him to take the necessary steps to prepare a dictionary of that language. He said that he had no means for that purpose, and that Congress would give him none.

Mr. COX. See where the gentleman would carry us by his argument. I do not care so much or specially in this relation about the Iroquois or the hundred other tribes of Indians whose names my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] pronounces so badly. [Laughter.] One thing I do know, and that is, that if we enter upon this legislation as to one or a few tribes there is no end to the work which would follow by the example. If we pass this, is there any reason why we should not go into the collection of Icelandic and Scandinavian data concerning the Norsemen who a thousand years ago landed in Rhode Island and Massachusetts, but who, from some inscrutable dispensation of Providence, did not remain on that sterile coast? [Laughter.] And if the data are collected, how can we refuse to edit and print them?

Why not inquire into the history of the strange people who landed in North Carolina long before Columbus discovered this continent? They were doubtless Gaelic, or Celt, if we may believe the traditions and affidavits. We are credibly told that there exists in some of our western territories, at this time, a blue-eyed people, with great proclivities for the arts of civilized life. They talk the Gaelic or the Erse language. I have heard it discussed in the Senate and stated elsewhere that the very war-club which these Indians occasionally use in their contests is supposed to be the genuine original Irish shillalah. [Laughter.] Why not appropriate for data on that matter?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. COX. And my dissertation is ended.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas; and upon a division there were—ayes 23, noes 83.

No further count being called for, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by inserting as a new paragraph that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For civilization of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, for agricultural and industrial purposes, and for support of saw-mill at Leech Lake, $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER. All I desire to say is that there is no appropriation for this purpose now in this bill.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. FOSTER; and upon a division there were—ayes 40, noes 65.

No further count being called for, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by inserting as a new paragraph that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For education of Wichitas and other affiliated bands; their civilization and improvement, including instruction in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, $50,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For incidental expenses of the Indian service in the following States and Territories, namely: In Arizona, $16,000; California, $10,000; Colorado Territory, $3,000;

Dakota Territory, $5,000; Idaho Territory, $3,000; Montana Territory, $5,000; Washington Territory, $5,000; Wyoming Territory, $1,500; Nevada Territory, $5,000; Territory of New Mexico, $10,000; Oregon, $10,000; Utah Territory, $5,000; in all, $78,500: Provided, That none of the appropriations herein or hereafter made under the head of incidental expenses of the Indian service shall be expended in payment of employés in said service, but the same shall be used for annuity goods, subsistence, agricultural implements, for educational purposes, and incidental transportation, and for no other purposes.

Mr. PAGE. I notice that this paragraph appropriates $5,000 for "Nevada Territory."

Mr. RANDALL. That is a mistake; it should be "Nevada."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the word "Territory" after "Nevada" will be stricken out.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I have several amendments to offer to this paragraph, and I suppose the question can be taken upon them all at once. I move to increase the appropriation for Arizona from $16,000 to $20,000; for California, from $10,000 to $30,000; for New Mexico, from $10,000 to $15,000; and for Utah, from $5,000 to $10,000. I also move to amend the proviso by inserting after the words "educational purposes" the words "for repairs of saw and flour mills."

Mr. FOSTER. You do not include anything but mills?

Mr. RANDALL. I give them the discretion of expending any of this money for repairs of saw and flour mills.

Mr. FOSTER. Not for building new mills?

Mr. RANDALL. No new mills.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not make it read "for repairs of old buildings?"

Mr. RANDALL. It is necessary to increase these amounts, because of official information which I have received within a few days from the Bureau.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not include all agency buildings?

Mr. RANDALL. I will modify it so as to read, "for repairs of saw and flour mills and other agency buildings."

Mr. FOSTER. That will cover a dam, will it not?

The amendments moved by Mr. RANDALL were agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling, incidental, current, and contingent expenses of the superintendents and agents, and of their offices, $50,000.

No appropriation whatever has been made in this bill for contingencies.

Mr. RANDALL. O, yes; these are all incidentals.

Mr. FOSTER. But they are applied to specific purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the word "contingent" be inserted in connection with "incidental."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For this amount, for the civilization of Indians and their assistance in agricultural operations, $25,000. For this amount, for the support of industrial and other schools not otherwise provided for among Indian tribes, $50,000. For this amount, for the training and education of promising Indian youth, $10,000. Total, $85,000.

The Committee on Appropriations have seen fit to omit entirely all reference to the estimate for civilization and education of Indians. Nothing has been provided for that purpose except what is required to fulfill treaty stipulations. An estimate of $150,000 for this object was submitted to the committee, who have, however, entirely ignored it. I implore the House not to stop a work that has been carried on thus far with great promise of success. The estimate of $150,000 is hardly ample; but the aggregate of my amendment is but $85,000. There are industrial schools and other agencies doing a great work, which will necessarily be stopped if this appropriation be withheld.

Mr. RANDALL. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars was the estimate submitted; but the Committee on Appropriations followed the line of the last committee and declined to make any appropriation. There was no appropriation whatever last year under this estimate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] puts his proposition too broadly when he states that no money is appropriated by this bill for the education and civilization of the Indians.

Mr. SEELYE. Except, I said, what was specially stipulated by treaty provisions.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is something beyond that. Without going over the various items, I should think that the appropriations in this bill for this purpose, outside of those in fulfillment of treaty stipulations, (and most of the treaty stipulations are for these objects,) would not fall short of $150,000 altogether.

Mr. SEELYE. I have failed to discover the appropriation to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is quite a number of such items, outside of the appropriations made under treaty stipulations.

Mr. SEELYE. If the gentleman will point them out to me, I will thank him; but I have failed to discover them.

Mr. RANDALL. I will point out one. Here are the Kansas Indians. The purpose of the appropriation for them is thus stated:

To subsist and properly care for the Kansas Indians, including agricultural assistance, pay of employés, and for such other beneficial objects for the tribe at large as their necessities may indicate to be proper.

I take it this language would include the objects contemplated by the gentleman's amendment.

Then take the Sioux at Fort Peck agency. We make an appropriation of $100,000 to be used in part "in instructing in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, in providing employés and educating children." I take it that these objects are in promotion of the civilization and comfort of the Indians.

Then take the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans. I find that in respect to these tribes the President is authorized in his discretion to expend the appropriation "in providing employés, educating children, procuring medicine and medical attendance, care for and support of the aged, sick, and infirm, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement."

I think the gentleman will find generally throughout the bill provisions of this kind. The gentleman bases his amendment upon the estimate of $150,000. Now, the committee did not think there was any propriety at this time in giving this money for this purpose when the last Congress refused to make any such appropriation, and when we know that the resources of the Treasury are vastly more deficient at this time than they were a year ago.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Chairman, we are perpetually troubled with this Indian question. Shall we now look to the future with reference to avoiding this difficulty? Shall we seek to educate and civilize these people, and thus obviate the necessity for this trouble that we have recurring every year?

I do not care about discussing the subject in its length and breadth, but I will simply state to the House that there are schools and other agencies now in successful operation which must be stopped entirely unless this appropriation be made.

Mr. RANDALL. Then they stopped a year ago; for this appropriation was not in the last appropriation bill; there was no money given then under this estimate.

Mr. SEELYE. But the appropriations last year, as the gentleman very well knows, were very much in excess of the appropriations this year.

Mr. RANDALL. I know they were; and that brings me to this point: The gentleman hardly knows the amount of money that this Bureau costs. The estimate of the cost of running this Bureau is $740,000.

Mr. SEELYE. I understand precisely that fact; and I understand also that the gentleman has included in that estimate (for I have examined the figures) subsistence, forage, fuel, lights, and various other incidental expenses connected with the care of the Indians.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman says I have and I say I have not, and I will give the items showing the cost of running the Indian Bureau for the fiscal year ending 1875, so far as accounts have been audited:

Pay of superintendents and agents	$82,880 68
Pay of special agents	10,985 86
Pay of subagents	1,066 66
Pay of agents' clerks	4,600 00
Pay of regular employés	319,404 10
Pay of extra employés	146,913 07
Pay of traveling expenses	20,607 88
Pay of traveling expenses	1,737 43
Agents and superintendents' incidental expenses	38,914 77
Pay of Indian inspectors	16,224 70
Cost of inspection	3,760 67
Pay of interpreters	98,118 05
Commissioner, clerks, &c	65,680 00
Total	740,884 27

Is there any subsistence in those items? Is there any clothing in those items?

Mr. SEELYE. There is both. The gentleman has a very rare faculty of turning off attention from the matter directly before us to something which does not concern it. As long as he has presented it let me state for the information of the House that the largest item of $319,404.10 for regular employés includes subsistence, includes fuel and forage, and also includes the pay to the Mojave Indians on the Colorada Indian agency who have been engaged in excavating this irrigating canal and who have been furnished rations for subsistence in payment. The gentleman has gathered all these together in order to make out the sum he names. That sum does not relate at all to the expense of the Indian Territory.

But that has nothing to do with the case before us. I submit simply to the House, shall we continue the education and prospective civilization of these Indians or cut it off?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask this House shall follow in reference to this economy the example set by the last House.

Mr. SEELYE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. I submit the following amendment, to come in after line 1221:

For the establishment and maintenance of schools among the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $10,000.

I desire to state, Mr. Chairman, that the Pueblo Indians live in villages. There are twenty villages in New Mexico. They are the Aztecs, the last remnants of the worshipers of the sun. They are peaceable, industrious, quiet, and self-sustaining. They live upon agriculture and stock-growing. Under the Spanish and Mexican governments they were educated at the expense of the government, but under our Government their education has been neglected for twenty years. The appropriation for education was made last year and the year before, but I believe the schools failed last year for want of a sufficient amount.

I ask that the education of these people be kept up. I believe they are capable of receiving education. I do not ask for the Navajoes, the Apaches, the Utes, or any other like Indians of my country, but merely ask it for these Pueblo Indians, who are deserving of a great deal of consideration on the part of the Government, as they have never given us the least trouble. They do not rob or steal. They are peaceable. Only three persons were presented for crime in twenty-five years. Such is the history of that people. Property and life are as safe in their villages as in this city. I think it is the duty of the Government to educate them. There are twenty pueblos, and my amendment allows $500 to each pueblo, which I believe will keep a school going for about seven months in the year. I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. How much was appropriated last year?

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know how much.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think any was appropriated.

Mr. ELKINS. I was told by the Commissioner there was something appropriated, but not a sufficient amount to carry the schools on during the year.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not embraced in any incidental expense, and there has been no estimate for it. They were not in any of the incidentals, for I have them here.

Mr. ELKINS. I can say this to the gentleman, that the schools were not kept up, but stopped in the middle of the year from the lack of funds.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask the gentleman from New Mexico one question.

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. How many instances of crime did the gentleman state there were among these Pueblo Indians?

Mr. ELKINS. Only three.

Mr. HARRISON. In how many years?

Mr. ELKINS. Twenty-five years.

Mr. HARRISON. How many Indians are there?

Mr. ELKINS. Nine thousand.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, if that be the case, let us keep education from going there. [Laughter.] Sir, here, where we educate, crime is rampant. Let us therefore keep these people in blissful ignorance. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELKINS. Civilization and education may affect and retard the gentleman and his constituents in that way but I can vouch for these Indians that it will not injure them and that they are industrious and peaceful. They neither rob nor steal; they give the Government no trouble, and are deserving of education by the Government. It is our duty to educate them, as they will finally become a part of the social system of this country.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to state I find there was $1,071 appropriated for contingent expenses. That is embraced and can be expended under this bill.

Mr. ELKINS. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not interfered with that, and it is embraced here as one of the items. There is in this paragraph, at line 1220, a provision that a portion of this money shall be paid "for educational purposes." That is included in the amount fixed by the committee, and by one of the amendments which I am to offer to-day the amount will be increased to $15,000.

Mr. ELKINS. All I want is that it be made specific. I am afraid that this appropriation for incidental expenses will be expended for something else. You make no appropriation for these Pueblos; not a cent. They do not get a dollar from the Government for educational purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. It is proposed to increase the appropriation for the Territory of New Mexico from $10,000 to $15,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. And there might be added "$10,000 of this sum to be appropriated for the purposes of education."

Mr. RANDALL. That is too much.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SEELYE. I have one more amendment to propose, which I hope will not interfere with the equanimity of any gentleman. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after line 1221 as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall hereafter forbid the issue of rations or supplies of any kind to any white men living with Indian women, or to any Indian women or their children who are married to or living with such white men, and that no such white men shall claim any rights on any Indian reservation by reason of such real or pretended marriage.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a social-order amendment. I have no objection to it.

The question being taken on the amendment, the chairman stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. SEELYE. I call for a division.

May I be permitted to say that I did not suppose that the amendment would meet with any objection from any source. I do not suppose that it is a part of the province of this Government to support lazy or loose white men, who in order to obtain such support have taken unto themselves Indian concubines or wives. The object of this amendment is to remove a difficulty which the Indian agents very often sorely feel, and which they have no present means to obviate.

Mr. KASSON. I rose to make the point of order on the amendment at the time it was first offered. I shall not insist on the point of order if the gentleman from Massachusetts will confine the amendment to the white men. But I know there are many cases where hunters and others on the plains form regular marriages with Indian women. I do not care about the prohibition of the issue of rations to white men, but to refuse them to Indian women and helpless children is something I cannot assent to.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that so far as I am concerned I do not object to the purpose of this amendment at all.

Mr. MAGINNIS. In regard to the point of order, I will say that if this is new legisation, it is certainly in the line of retrenchment and reform.

Mr. SEELYE. It is certainly in the line of retrenchment. In reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, I would say that it leaves the whole difficulty as it was before. The amendment amounts to nothing unless it includes the women and children. If there are honest cases like those referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, the hunters and others of whom he speaks are able to support the women and children.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope this amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The merits of the amendment are not now before the committee. The gentleman from Iowa raises a point of order. Is it that the amendment contravenes Rule 120?

Mr. KASSON. I refer to a part of the amendment. I ask to have it read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KASSON. The new legislation that does not come within the rule is the last clause. If the gentleman will let his amendment stop at the point where it prohibits issuing of rations to white men, I will not object to it. But why should he punish the women and children by leaving them to starvation?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman from Iowa is mistaken as to the application of Rule 120 to this case. This is putting a limitation on the expenditure, and I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is very easy to change the phraseology of the amendment so as better to accomplish his purpose and bring it within the rule. He can very readily amend his proposition so as to make it in order. If he intends this to be a limitation on the expenditure of this money, there can be no doubt about its being in order. He should make it read: no sum of money appropriated by this bill shall be expended for such and such purposes.

Mr. MAGINNIS. These rations have to be bought out of the money here appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that this is a mere question of phraseology. I think no gentleman who knows the rules of the House will pretend that the amendment, with its present phraseology, is in order. As it stands, it is a provision of law. If the amendment was that no sum of money appropriated by this bill shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of furnishing rations to this class of persons, it would clearly be in order. But of course it is not in order now, as I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will undoubtedly see.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts modify his resolution in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SEELYE. I do not see the propriety of the modification. It seems to me that if it is modified, the entire intent and purpose of it would be defeated. If it allowed in any case an issue of rations to the wife or children, that would include also the man.

Mr. HOLMAN. But do s not the gentleman from Massachusetts see that his amendment as it stands proposes to enact a law upon this subject? That is to say, in other words, it is new legislation on an appropriation bill. But if it simply put a limitation on the appropriation made by this bill, then of course his amendment would be in order.

Mr. SEELYE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not at first comprehend the scope of his suggestion, and I adopt it. It is an entirely proper suggestion, it seems to me.

Mr. KASSON. That does not relieve it of the objection to the last clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last clause I admit is not covered by it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the gentleman from Massachusetts to modify his amendment so as to put it in the form in which he desires to offer it.

Mr. MAGINNIS. While the gentleman is doing that, I desire to offer the following amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

No objection was made.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move in line 1209 to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so that it will read:

Montana Territory, $10,000.

Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to increase the incidental appropriation for the Territory of Montana from $5,000 to $10,000. Now I agree in a great measure with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with regard to the manner in which these incidental appropriations are expended. I believe it to be far better that the Department should make specific estimates for all they desire, and I think it is a bad system which has obtained in that Bureau of using specific appropriations made for one purpose for another, and that it ought to be corrected. But it is a system that has existed for many years. I am informed, however, by the Commissioner and by his clerks that the amount of $10,000 is necessary for the legitimate expenses of the Territory of Montana.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman I desire to refer him to the manner in which this appropriation was expended last year; for transportation, $33.80; for transportation of goods, $728.45; for expenses of advertising, $1,805.72; for telegrams, $29.38; and for employés, $12,318.71.

The question was taken upon the amendment proposed by Mr. MAGINNIS, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SEELYE. I have now modified my amendment, and offer it in the following form:

Provided, That the issue of any rations or supplies of any kind appropriated for in this act be not furnished to any white men living with Indian women, or to any Indian women or their children who are married to or living with such white men, except with the consent of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

That last provision is introduced in order to obviate the objection of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. I think perhaps it will do it.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say a word in reference to the policy of that amendment. A long time ago in this country a man distinguished in its history—Patrick Henry—endeavored to secure the adoption of a measure in the house of burgesses of Virginia, for the purpose of encouraging the amalgamation of the Indian race with the whites as a means of their civilization, by offering bounties of land and exemption from taxes to such white men or women who would intermarry with Indian men or Indian women. The history of this effort was that it would probably have been adopted if it had not been that that distinguished man was transferred from the house of burgesses to the governorship of Virginia.

The object of this amendment is to drive the white man from among the Indians and prevent the intermingling of the two races. My own judgment is that it would be wrong in principle, wrong in practice, to do so; that it is wise to allow the two races when it suits their convenience to mingle together and thus elevate the Indian race. I would rather see a large appropriation made to encourage able-bodied men who are too lazy to do much else to go and live with them, and good service will be done to the country in that way. Certainly it seems to me that in the people that will go to live among the Indians and take Indian wives we lose nothing, and the Indians will gain something and hardly lose anything. Besides, no man can go into an Indian tribe and assume tribal relations with it and take an Indian wife without the consent of the tribal authorities. He cannot go of his own volition and become a member of the tribe and have an Indian wife; it must be by the consent of the tribe. I think we had better let the Indians in that respect take care of their own interests; and we cannot better subserve the interests of the Indians by adopting a policy that will drive the white man from them.

Sir, I have seen some of the finest specimens of men and women that ever trod the American soil of mixed blood, men and women of intellect, of energy, and of noble character, and there may be others. This Indian problem is one of great importance to the American people in its humanitarian aspect as well as in other respects. The Indians are with us. This is their native land. They were here before us. We owe them respect for their rights and the promotion of their interest, and we ought to pursue such policy as will educate them to our standard of civilization. Amalgamation, in my judgment, is the surest and shortest road to that. It is better than war and the destruction of the race. There is in that race some superiority; we have elevated the negro to all the rights of citizenship; he has the power of imitation. The distinction between him and the Indian is that the Indian in his pride of character imitates nobody, but stands forth as the representative of himself and his race with the peculiarly manly attributes of courage and perseverance. Looking to the necessities of trying to ameliorate their position, looking to the necessity of humanity, looking to the necessity of incorporating what remains of the race into the great body of American citizens, I think the policy of preventing white men from intermingling with them is wrong, but that it would be right to encourage such marriages.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of opposing this amendment, because I feel the wrong of it. There are men on this floor, and I am myself proud to be one of them, as is my friend from New York, sometimes the presiding officer of this body, [Mr. COX,] who boast that there is Indian blood flowing in our veins. When I go through the Rotunda of this Capitol and look up into its vast Dome, I feel proud of my country. And when I look at the picture that represents the baptism of one of my ancestors, Pocahontas, I feel that we should encourage amalgamation between the Indians and the whites, as the true method of carrying civilization among that race of people. Carry it to them, and carry the preacher along with it to marry them, and let them marry as much as they please.

All along on the northwestern frontier of this country to-day there are men of half and three-quarter Indian blood, who are among the very best citizens of the Northwest. Some of the very proudest families in the city of Chicago—and there are a great many proud people there, and they ought to be proud——

Mr. HOLMAN. To what tribe do you belong?

Mr. HARRISON. I am one of that tribe from away down in Virginia that boasts of having "F. F." blood in them. There are in the city of Chicago some of its very best citizens in whose veins runs Indian blood. Wherever you may go, there is no evidence that miscegenation with the Indian deteriorates the offspring of the white and Indian.

Let them marry as much as they please. If they choose to marry and there is no clergyman by, let them do as they do in Scotland, as they do in Florence, acknowledge themselves man and wife, and in the sight of high heaven they will be man and wife. In the South since the late war, there are laws making the offspring of men and women who live together as husbands and wives the legitimate offspring of those people. Does it require among these people this or that kind of ceremony to make them legally married? If they go before their God and acknowledge themselves husband and wife, I believe that God will consider them as husband and wife, for He certainly has never placed a curse upon the half-breed Indian.

Behind me in this Hall is a man now who in his own person is an evidence of the ameliorating effects of such a marriage. We have such persons everywhere. I deny that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] will result in good; it will only effect a wrong.

Mr. COX obtained the floor.

Mr. SEELYE. Allow me a moment.

Mr. COX. Certainly; I have not much desire to speak.

Mr. SEELYE. I am learning many things from this discussion. One should never be too old to learn. I confess, however, that I was hardly prepared for the information that the best way to solve the Indian problem was to cut off the ordinary agencies of schools and education and civilization, and to bring in such a process as this. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I am surprised that this matter has been discussed at all; I am surprised that any one should have thought of contesting so virtuous an amendment as that offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.] If we are in earnest about solving this Indian problem in an enlightened manner, we could not adopt any plan that would so surely lead to the demoralization and brutalization of the Indians as that which has been advocated by my friend of the Marine band, a band that has not yet been recognized in any of our Indian treaties. [Laughter.]

The gentleman says that the civilization of the Indian may be promoted—by what? By a sort of mock Scotch marriage, or by promiscuous intercourse with whites, by miscegenation, by allowing our traders and others worse than they to go among the Indian women ad libitum, by all the disgusting modes which, in addition to gambling, bad faith, and worse whisky, will bring the remnant of these Indian tribes down to a lower level than even the lizzard-fed Diggers that follow in the train or hang about the stations of our railroad civilization!

Such an important question cannot be discussed in the vein just adopted by the gentleman, or the same vein, when he so happily defended the Marine band. This is another and entirely different question to which nothing is relevant but sobriety and sedateness. The gentleman says, and others have said, that they find the best blood of the Indian in the half-breed. I have been told here that the entire blood of the half-breed is pure and good. If so, then it seems to me that a portion of the original blood must have been good also. But I pass that.

Mr. Jefferson, in his Notes on Virginia, when referring to Logan and other Indian chiefs, said that they were men of rare imagination, fine rhetorical ability, artistic skill, and simplicity of character. Old Virginia may now and then have had some of that blood, as thus described, in the veins of her statesmen. As a general rule, however, Old Virginia did not go in that direction. As a general rule Old Virginia kept proudly in the line of the Madisons, the Marshalls, the Jeffersons, the Harrisons, [laughter,] and others who ornament her history.

Mr. HARRISON. Jefferson had Indian blood in him.

Mr. COX. If Jefferson had Indian blood in him, I am yet to learn of it authentically. If he had in him Indian blood, I will never, never, NEVER, [laughter,] I will never vote for—any proposition defended by such an argument as that against the founder of the democratic party.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to renew the formal amendment. I am disposed to treat this subject as one of importance, especially to the Indians; and in so treating it I do not desire that the House should understand me as meaning to substitute for education and civilization that other quality referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. Chairman, the distinct proposition here is to prohibit by indirection the amalgamation of the white and the Indian race. Why should we do this? What good end shall we subserve by doing it? How do we promote morality or advance civilization by preventing the association and marriage of white people with Indians? Is it deemed wise to preserve the distinct individuality and characteristics of the various tribes, their full blood, their separate nationality, their peculiar habits, antagonizing distinctly as they do in many respects the habits and civilization of the white race? If that be so, then the humanitarian idea that objects to seeing these races amalgamate in the bonds of matrimony and rear children the mixture of both races, must prepare itself with powder and lead and go to killing the Indians. You must either by a wise policy civilize them or by force destroy them. Which is the most humane and just treatment to be adopted by a great nation dealing with humble and powerless tribes that cannot protect themselves by their own force? They were the original occupants of our soil. Experience has shown that evil has not come from the mixture of these races, but that good has sprung from it. I do not refer to the baser sort of intercommunication which seems to be uppermost in the minds of gentlemen who oppose this amalgamation; I allude to that sort of intercommunication which springs from the white people going among the Indians, accepting their tribal relations, marrying wives and rearing children, and to that extent breaking down the habits of barbarism and introducing in their stead habits of civilization. I believe that such association ought not to be discouraged, but that on the contrary it would be wise to encourage the marriage of the whites and the Indians as the cheapest, the wisest, the best, and the most humane way of solving the problem of dealing with the Indian race.

I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SEELYE, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies of trust fund, namely: For expenses in connection with the Indian trust fund for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, $1,500.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following as a new section:

That no supplies or annuity goods for which appropriation is made in this act shall be issued to any band or tribe of Indians while the same may be engaged in hostilities against the United States or in depredations upon settlers; and the supplies issued to Indians in any section of country where hostilities may exist or where Indians may commit depredations upon settlers and settlements shall not be issued for a longer period than five days at any one time, and then only for such families as may be represented at such issue by all their male members over the age of fourteen years.

Mr. KASSON. I believe this is a legislative provision designed to apply generally, and not merely to the appropriations in this bill. If so, it is subject to objection upon a point of order.

Mr. STEELE. It applies only to the appropriations made by this bill.

Mr. KASSON. I do not so understand it. But, aside from that, I want to call the attention of the committee and of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. STEELE] to the question whether in all cases it would be safe to adopt such a rule as is here proposed. For instance, if depredations are committed by half a dozen Indians who have gone off, then this rule would apply to the whole distribution in that region.

Besides, I apprehend that in some cases it would work great inconvenience to require all Indians who are fourteen years of age to come every five days for their rations; and it would probably impose an enormous labor upon the disbursing or distributing officer in keeping the accounts. If the provision were presented in such a form as to be merely advisory or directory to the Indian commissioner wherever it may be practicable—if there were some saving clause of that sort, it might not be unsafe to adopt the amendment; but to make it a universal and imperative provision would, I apprehend, cause considerable trouble.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman seems to suppose that to require the Indians to come every five days for their rations would take too much of their time. Now, if there is any one thing that the Indians committing these depredations have, it is time. They have more of that than anything else; that is the difficulty with them. Hence there is no reason on that ground why they should not be required to draw their rations frequently. If you issue rations to them for a long time, they go off between the issues and commit depredations.

Mr. KASSON. They can do it.

Mr. STEELE. They can and, I am sorry to say, they do. I know that by experience.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order raised?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, if I am right that it applies generally, and not merely to the disbursements of this bill.

One word in regard to the distribution of goods. The gentleman can see you cannot distribute them once in five days.

Mr. STEELE. It does not apply to goods.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is raised it must be raised now.

Mr. KASSON. I do raise it on the impression that it is not confined to the appropriation in this bill, but is general in its terms.

Mr. STEELE. I ask that the amendment be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KASSON. I raise the point of order on the last clause of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, as the amendment, in his judgment, applies to the appropriations in this bill.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, simply one word in answer to some objections made by the gentleman from Iowa. It will be found by reading the amendment that the issue of supplies and annuity goods to tribes is confined to those who are not engaged in hostilities, or, in other words, that they shall not be issued when any tribe is in hostility to the Government of the United States or committing depredations.

It may be true, as the gentleman suggests, that a portion of the tribe may go on a plundering expedition, committing damage and depredation for which the tribe itself cannot be held responsible, over which the tribe may have no control. Every man who understands anything about this Indian question knows that the great danger comes from the young men of all these tribes, who cannot be controlled by those who would like to control them, and who would do so in the interest of peace if they had the power to do it. I therefore provide that the young men, the male Indians capable of committing depredations, shall come once in every five days to the agency to obtain their rations and answer roll-call. That answers just this purpose. The agent will then know whether his Indians are upon the reservation or not. As it is under the present system, he knows nothing about it. He does not know whether there are five thousand or ten thousand Indians on the reservation, because at all these agencies they issue to the women if the men do not come to the agencies for supplies. The only effect of allowing that system to continue is to feed these Indians, to furnish them supplies, while they are marauding and fighting our troops in the field. If you make them come to the agency once in five days, they cannot go any great distance off from the reservation during that time. You will compel them to remain there very largely. You will compel them to remain there better by this than by any other means, for you make the support and sustenance of their families depend upon their being on their reservation.

I wish to say in this connection that one of the most effective means General Crook found of dealing with the Apaches in Arizona when he first put them upon their reservation was to compel every man to come individually for his rations once every three days. In that way he prevented them traveling off their reservation.

This is a provision which is of very great importance to the frontier country, to that portion which borders upon these Indian reservations. If this amendment be adopted, then no Indian can wander off and commit depredations without the knowledge of the Indian agent, and without any control from any source or responsibility anywhere for it, and our people will not be murdered and plundered by Indians who are fed and pampered by the Government. While you provide for the Indian, make some provision, if possible, for the protection of your own citizens.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming be again read down to the word "settlers."

Mr. KASSON. Let me read the last clause from place, as I wish to speak to it. If the gentleman wishes to occupy the floor, however, I do not insist.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a word and move an amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out all after the word "settlers," and in lieu thereof to substitute the following:

Nor shall any sum of money appropriated by this act for any tribe of Indians for whom a reservation of territory shall have been made be paid to them or expended for their benefit unless such tribe and the warriors thereof shall remain peaceably within the limits of the territory assigned to them.

Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in the language proposed to be stricken out is that a single warrior, or a very small number—a half a dozen—may be engaged in warlike operation, and yet under the specific provision of the last clause it would take away the rights of the whole tribe. It seems to me to be an embarrassing proposition. It is very desirable the provision should be carried out if practicable. I think it would be better to use more general terms than the specific terms used by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. KASSON. Does not the gentleman from Indiana think it would be better to substitute for the whole "authority and direction to make issue of rations for a limited period, when by so doing they can protect settlers, for example, against incursions from a portion of a tribe;" or some phraseology of that sort? It would take a little time to frame it rightly. I think it is remedial, but, as the gentleman from Indiana has stated, this is so broad it ceases to be remedial, and will, in some cases, act injuriously. It will refuse supplies to starving and suffering Indians who are not engaged in committing depredations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Without understanding much about this subject, for I have not been among the Indians to any great extent for twenty-five years, although during part of that time I have had some experience connected with some of the western tribes—without professing to understand the subject, it seems to me that a general provision which would make a strong motive on the part of the Indians to remain within the reservation is about all that can be specifically provided for.

Mr. KASSON. I think so. And I suggest, if it is desired to finish the bill to-night, that the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Wyoming have general consent to prepare an amendment, to be submitted hereafter, that will accomplish the object in view.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course we desire to finish the bill to-night. I will submit the amendment as I have offered it. I ask that the whole section as I propose to amend it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That no supplies or annuity goods for which appropriation is made in this act shall be issued to any band or tribe of Indians while the same may be engaged in hostilities against the United States or in depredations upon settlers, nor shall any sum of money appropriated by this act for any tribe of Indians for whom a reservation of territory shall have been made be paid to them, or expended for their benefit, unless such tribe and the warriors thereof shall remain peaceably within the limits of the territory assigned to them.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that the difficulty with his amendment is that it provides no means of carrying it out. How can he ascertain whether the warriors of any particular tribe remain peaceably on their reservation, and are not engaged in hostilities or depredations? The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Arizona simply proposes to test that question. To find out that the warriors shall not be off their reservation, shall not be on the war-path, shall not be committing depredations, he proposes to make them appear at the agency every five days. And in case they shall fail to do that, what is the penalty? Simply that nobody else shall draw that warrior's rations. And I submit that if a man is away from the reservation on the war-path, no one else should draw his rations.

Mr. KASSON. But these are not warriors. These are boys of fifteen years of age.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Every boy of fifteen is a warrior.

Mr. KASSON. I differ entirely from the gentleman in regard to that. Boys of fifteen are not warriors, are not treated as warriors, and do not make raids.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Well, fix eighteen as the age.

Mr. KASSON. I think it better to leave that to be fixed by executive order.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Before the amendment is adopted, I desire to remind the gentleman from Indiana of a suggestion I made to him.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I propose to add the words at the end of the amendment "unless absent with the consent of the agent."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Indiana will be allowed to modify his amendment by the addition of those words.

There was no objection.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, as modified, to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I offer the following as an additional section, to which I hope no one will object:

SEC. 3. No money appropriated by this bill shall be expended at any agency where the officers of the Government endeavor to maintain a monopoly of trade with the Indians for the benefit of any person or firm. And the certificate of a judge of the district court for the United States nearest to any agency, attached to the application of any person for a license to trade with Indians, which certificate shall set forth that such person is of good moral character and fit to be in the Indian country, shall be accepted by the agent to whom it is presented, and by the Department of Indian Affairs, as conclusive evidence of the fitness of such person to receive a license to trade.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that this be offered at the end of the bill after the paragraphs making appropriations have been passed. The Chair would rather not decide the question of order at present. If the gentleman will offer it at the close of the bill the Chair will have time to examine it.

Mr. MAGINNIS rose.

Mr. KASSON. I reserve the point of order, but I do not object to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] going on to say what he chooses to say in support of the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Time is of some value, and I hope the gentleman from Montana will confine his remarks to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is to be made on this section let it be made now before a discussion of the merits is entered upon.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to state the point of order, that this is new legislation and is not germane to an appropriation bill and not tending to retrenchment. That is the essential point, but I wish also to say that if that were all, if I believed the amendment to be useful, I would not make the point. But I have thought the point of order should be made because the amendment introduces a mode of conducting this business that will tend, I think, to very serious injury to the Indian service, and also interferes with what has been proposed in the bill, if I recollect rightly, in regard to the transfer of the Bureau to the War Department.

Mr. MAGINNIS. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to say that it is not new legislation. It is simply to provide for carrying out existing legislation. When our non-intercourse laws were made it was intended that no monopolies of trade should grow up out of them. But they did grow up out of them; and in 1865, on an appropriation bill in the Senate of the United States, there was an amendment ingrafted providing that any person of good moral character applying for a license should have it. And the way that was got around was that the decision as to the good moral character of the applicant was confided solely to the agent, who gives it to his pal and denies it to all others. This clause carries out the existing law, a law, too, which was made on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLYMER. Just one moment on the question of order, if the Chair has any difficulty about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has none. The Chair will state that he is informed that a point of order is to be made upon the next section of the bill, and therefore he would prefer to consider the two points of order together, and he would like the gentleman from Montana to reserve his amendment for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. How long does the Chair expect to reserve it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state after the other point of order is made.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I will withhold the amendment for the present.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employés of the Indian Bureau, are hereby abolished; and the salary heretofore paid to such officers respectively shall cease; and the duties now intrusted to, and performed by, said officers, of every kind and description, shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War; and they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed, thus transferred to them, other than the pay they may receive as officers and employés of the Army; and the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian affairs under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management and control of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby transferred to, and placed under, the control of the Secretary of War, who is hereby empowered to, and shall, exercise the same authority in the control of all Indian affairs heretofore had by the Secretary of the Interior; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. McCRARY. I make the point of order on the section which has just been read that it is new legislation and that it does not appear on the face of the record that it will retrench expenditures. I desire to say but a very few words on the point of order. No extended discussion will be necessary I apprehend, because this point of order was made in reference to the same subject-matter when offered as an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and was decided by the Speaker of the House.

There has been a change made in the form of the amendment by which I suppose it was intended to make it in order, and the only question for the Chair now to determine is whether by the additional provision that has been inserted the section has been brought within the ruling of the Speaker of the House and made in order. That additional provision is that the officers and employés of the Army who are to discharge the duties required by the Indian service are to receive no additional compensation other than that which they receive as officers of the Army. I do not think that this so changes the provision as to make it in order according to the rule laid down by the Speaker of the House. The rule, the fundamental rule, which the Speaker laid down was this, that it must appear upon the face of the record—and by the record is meant the amendment itself, the bill under consideration, the statutes of the United States, and the parliamentary law under which we are proceeding—it must appear upon the face of the record that the amendment, if adopted, will certainly retrench expenditures. Such was the decision of the Speaker, and such is unquestionably the correct construction of Rule 120 as amended.

Now it is true that here is a proposition to abolish a Bureau in the Interior Department having several hundred employés; I do not know how many, but perhaps four or five hundred; and there is a proposition also to devolve the duties of that Bureau and all of its employés upon the officers and employés of the Army.

There is also a provision that the officers of the Army shall for discharging these new duties receive no additional pay; but does this necessarily make the transfer of this Bureau a measure of retrenchment? I think not. One ground on which the Speaker decided this provision, when proposed as part of the legislative bill, to be out of order was this: that the bill under consideration contained no appropriation for the Army, and that therefore the Chair could not look forward into the legislation which is to be enacted in the future and say what Congress may do in the way of making an appropriation for the Army. That objection lies here precisely as it did in that case. Let me read what the Speaker said on that occasion:

> But the Chair must take official notice of the fact that in this bill no appropriation is made for the Army or for the performance of any of its duties in any of its several bureaus or departments; and the Chair must further officially know that in the ordinary course of legislative proceedings such an appropriation bill must be introduced and enacted before the session expires as of necessity will embrace the further and more complete regulation of this entire subject. Now, the Chair cannot look forward into that legislation and say, upon anything that appears on the face of this section, that such legislation will in all respects coincide with, sustain, or affirm the provisions of this section and carry out the proposed retrenchments indicated in it. In other words, the Chair desires it to be distinctly understood that the point upon which his decision in this case turns is that from the face of the section it does not appear that the provision comes within the requirement of this rule, which is that it shall be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and "shall retrench expenditures." It does not affirmatively appear upon the face of the bill or the laws of the land or the usual and customary mode of proceeding of this body that this section, if enacted in this bill, will retrench expenditures.

Now, because there is a statement in this bill that the officers of the Army shall receive no additional compensation for discharging these duties, the House will not be bound in any way when the Army appropriation bill comes before it not to make any additional appropriation. It may be argued that the House will not make such appropriation, but it must appear upon the face of this record that no appropriation will be made, and it does not appear and it cannot appear in this bill, because there is no appropriation here for the support of the Army.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another ground on which I hold that this section is not in order. It is true that the bill devolves the duties heretofore discharged by the Indian Bureau upon the officers and employés of the Army, but there is nothing on the face of the record to show that there are officers and employés in the Army unemployed and whose services can, without detriment to the military service, be demanded for the discharge of these duties. Gentlemen may say that there are such. Gentlemen may contend that such is the fact; but it does not appear on the face of the record that the transfer of the duties of the officers of the Indian Bureau to the officers and employés of the Army will not interfere with the duties now devolved on the officers and employés of the Army under the law of the land. How can the Chair say from anything that appears upon the face of the record that this transfer of duties will not interfere with the military service and make future increased appropriations for the Army necessary?

We are not to presume here that the officers and employés of the Army have no duties to discharge. We cannot presume that there are three hundred or four hundred or five hundred unemployed persons now drawing pay in the Army who can be commanded for this service. That, I say, does not appear upon the face of this record; and it is not competent to show it aliunde. Hence, Mr. Chairman, we cannot say that if these duties are devolved upon the Army, it will not be necessary to make additional appropriations for the Army.

Moreover, we are not to presume, we have no right to presume, there is nothing in this record that requires us to presume, that we are to have a state of peace during the next fiscal year. How can the Chair say that we shall have no war before the end of the next fiscal year? How can the Chair say that within that fiscal year the country may not be engaged in Indian war, or some other kind of war that will require for military duty the service of every man and every officer and every employé now in the Army of the United States? If that shall be so, then the Chair must see that if we take four hundred or five hundred of these persons and require them to engage in civil duties, it will be necessary hereafter to increase the Army, and to increase the appropriations for the Army.

But more conclusive than all this, in my judgment, is the last consideration which I have to submit. The section provides that all laws in relation to Indian affairs shall be executed and enforced by the Army of the United States under the direction of the Secretary of War, instead of the Interior Department as now. No man can say what expense will be involved by this provision. There are large duties to be discharged in connection with transportation which involve very considerable expenditures every year. What it will cost for the Army to do all these duties the Chair cannot know. Nothing upon the face of this record gives the Chair any idea as to what it will cost for the Army to discharge these duties.

Why, sir, the laws and the treaties of the United States with relation to Indian affairs are very voluminous. In the volume which I hold in my hand are the treaties coming down only to the year 1845; and it embraces over six hundred pages. Thirty years of treaties are to be added to that volume, and all the statutes of the United States relative to Indian affairs which devolve any duties of any kind upon the Interior Department. All these duties are by this section devolved upon the War Department. Yet the Chair is expected to say that it appears from the face of this record, that it appears from this amendment, from these laws, from the bill before the House or from the parliamentary law of the land, that it will retrench expenditures to put the enforcement of these laws and of these treaties into the hands of the War Department. I say the Chair cannot so hold from what appears upon the face of this record. I say that the Chair cannot anticipate what appropriations for the Army will be made necessary in the future by this transfer. It is utterly impossible for him to anticipate it from anything that appears on the face of this record. I insist therefore that the section now before the House comes directly within the ruling made by the Speaker of the House, and must be ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] raises upon section 2 of the original bill the point of order which he has stated. The Chair will be glad to hear the opinion of gentlemen on on this question, as it is one of great importance.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to know what limitation applies to the debate on a point of order in Committee of the Whole when we are operating under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that upon questions of order that is to be determined by the circumstances of the case. Arguments on such a point are addressed to the Chair, and the Chair will not raise the point that gentlemen shall be limited in debate to any time. If any member raises that point, the Chair must enforce it.

Mr. RANDALL. Before proceeding to speak on the merits of this point, I desire to say that it would seem to me that the five-minute rule should prevail upon questions of this character as upon other matters arising in Committee of the Whole.

This section has been carefully considered, and drawn so as to avoid the difficulties which were presented by the decision of the Speaker. This bill not only transfers the duties of this office from certain officers to others, but it stipulates that the salaries of those from whom these duties are transferred shall absolutely cease and that the salaries of those to whom the duties are transferred shall in no respect be increased. I have here a statement showing the amount now paid under existing law in the administration of this Indian Bureau, which expenditures the section now under consideration proposes to dispense with. I submit this statement for the consideration of the Chair:

Statement showing amounts now being paid under existing laws which have been dropped from the Indian appropriation bill in contemplation of the provisions contained in the second section of the same.

For pay of 2 superintendents		$105,000
For pay of 70 agent
For pay of 7 special agents		10,500
For pay of 4 clerks		4,600
For pay of 78 interpreters	$34,100	35,200
For pay of extra interpreters	1,100
For pay of 3 Indian inspectors		9,000
For traveling expenses of 3 Indian inspectors		6,000
For buildings at agencies and repairs of same		10,000
For vaccine matter and vaccination of Indians		500
For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling, incidental, current, and contingent expenses of superintendents and agents		30,000
		210,800
Indian officers dropped from the legislative, executive, and judicial bill:
Commissioner and 47 clerks		77,880
Two messengers and 1 laborer, contingent
Total		288,680

Upon this statement of the facts I submit the question to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Chairman, I would not presume to add anything to the very clear, thorough, and as I think irrefutable, presentation of this case by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY.] I beg, however, to say a single word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He is really a specimen for psychological study, interesting though not altogether rare. He is endowed with a capacity which can see anything that he has set his heart upon with remarkable clearness; and he can persist in seeing nothing else with remarkable pertinacity. But I have supposed, Mr. Chairman, that a legislator ought to see at least two things, and that a wise statesman who has set his heart upon anything ought to enlarge his vision so as to take in all possibilities connected with that end.

The gentleman, however, who is, I take it, a lineal descendant of one of the two knights in the famous story of the shield, thinks he has done his full duty when he has shut out certain matters bearing directly upon the case. The side of the shield turned toward him seems to be silver and therefore the shield he maintains to the death is silver, although the other side may be lead or brass or gold.

The gentleman is possessed with a persistent purpose to economize expenditures in Government. A most praiseworthy purpose certainly, and a purpose which I submit every member of this House has as intently as the gentleman and probably more intelligently. There is as much difference between seeming economy and real economy as there is between most extravagant expenditure and real economy. And this is precisely the difference which the gentleman seems unable to discover.

The gentleman reminds me of a householder who should suppose and argue he could necessarily retrench expenditures by cutting off the pay of his servants, giving up his house, and taking board at a hotel. "Of course this is retrenchment," the gentleman argues, "for do you not see I have no longer any servants to pay and I have no longer any house rent to pay, and of course it is retrenchment."

Or, if the gentleman will let me come a little nearer to it, the gentleman is a householder and merchant and he finds times are hard and business is dull, and so he says, "I will retrench by dismissing my household servants and having their work done by the employés of my mercantile establishment. I will change my cooks for my book-keepers and dispense with my laundresses, and supply their places with my salesmen, and I will give up my chamber-maids and have my porter do the work." Very well. Very possibly the gentleman's mercantile employés are meek, and perhaps they are versatile and will make no objection to these new duties assigned to them. Perhaps they are particularly capable of discharging them, and his book-keepers do as well in the kitchen as in the counting-room, and his salesmen are just as much at home at the wash-tub as at the counter, and his porters make beds just as well as carry bundles. All right; this is retrenchment of expenditures; but does it follow therefore it is retrenchment?

Granted, if you please, and it is a difficult proposition that his household affairs would go on as before. But what becomes of his mercantile arrangements? Have they not been interfered with by this proposition, and has it been the retrenchment to which the gentleman refers?

To bring the matter a little closer to him. "O, no," says the gentleman; "you are too fast. I have supernumerary employés; I have more book-keepers, more salesmen, more porters than I need, and so I will put them in the place of my servants, and thus I will retrench." Very well, Mr. Chairman; there come two questions here. In the first place, whether it is economy to have so many supernumeraries; and, if the gentleman says "there are exigencies which occur in my business which make these supernumeraries necessary to my mercantile establishment," I want to know what is going to happen when those emergencies come, provided he has taken off his mercantile employés and turned them into these other channels? What is he going to do in that case? Is that retrenchment?

Mr. Chairman, the man who would undertake to carry on his private business in this way is a fool, and undertaking to carry on the business of Government in this way is precisely the same sort of folly. The whole process of this proposed transfer of the care of the Indians from the Interior to the War Department is precisely of the nature I have illustrated.

But, Mr. Chairman, one word further in order to prove this point, and I will not go into all the considerations that might very clearly establish it——

Mr. RANDALL. I hesitated to call the gentleman to order when he was referring to me, but, now that he has got through, I do call him to order.

Mr. SEELYE. I will yield to the gentleman when I get through.

Mr. RANDALL. I call you to order.

Mr. SEELYE. Let me go on.

Mr. RANDALL. I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rises to a question of order and will state it.

Mr. RANDALL. I hesitated until he had got about through with all he had to say of me before calling him to order. I did not desire to interrupt him in that particular, but now that he seems to be turning his remarks in another direction I submit he must confine them to the pending point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to the point of order in question.

Mr. SEELYE. I will confine myself to the point of order. I will detain the House but a moment or two longer in reference to a single point on the matter before the House. I have already stated on this floor that there is no Department of the Government so extravagantly conducted as the War Department. There is no Department of this Government where there is such a latitude of expenditure with such a meagerness of result; and the statement has not been contradicted, and cannot be.

But, aside from all general speculations, I have a single item to relate to this House which I think will interest, as it will certainly attract the attention of, every one here. It is quite well known by some, perhaps by all, that this experiment of transferring the Indians from the Interior to the War Department has already been made, and is now going forward on a limited scale. A little more than a year ago in the troubles down in the Indian Territory, as we know, it was thought necessary by the military, and wisely so I judge, to punish some of the Indians who were captured there by imprisonment, and these Indians have been taken to Fort Marion in Florida, where they now, to the number of sixty-seven, are in prison. They have thus been borne away to the War Department. The transfer has been made respecting these Indians. Now it is quite worth while in a matter of this importance to take advantage of such an experiment. Let us see what the result of the experiment has been. The experiment has been complete. The transfer has been entire. There are no superintendents, no missionaries here. These Indians are entirely in the hands of the military. Now what is the actual result?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman from Massachusetts shall confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. SEELYE. I am speaking to the point of order. I am showing that this is not a retrenchment of expenditure. I propose to show that this is not in the line of retrenchment, but in the line of increased expenditure.

Mr. Chairman, the War Department does not propose to bear the cost of supporting these prisoners. It makes a requisition on the Interior Department for their support. And how much? I have the official documents here. The requisitions from the War Department for the support of these sixty-seven Indians transferred to the War Department are for $11,000 a year. There it is; not including anything of the expenditure of their prison, of their guards, of their military attendants—all that is provided for—but covering simply the expenditure for their food and their clothing. The estimate of the War Department and the requisition it makes upon the Interior Department is at the rate of $11,000 a year for sixty-seven Indians.

Mr. Chairman, we have been contending here over a proposed expenditure by the Interior Department of eleven cents a day for these Indians and have concluded that we could not grant it. This expenditure by the War Department in the case of these Indians thus transferred in Florida is at the rate of 100 per cent. more than the highest estimate ever made by the Interior Department, the highest estimate asked for by the Interior Department.

Mr. Chairman, I submit therefore that this is quite to the point before us. This section is not in the line of retrenchment. Indeed there is no more extravagant piece of folly which this Congress could adopt in its treatment of the Indians.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall not follow the gentleman from Massachusetts in the spirit in which he has enumerated my demerits. But there are one or two merits that he ascribes to me; the merit, to wit, of persistency, the merit of pertinacity, and the merit of consistency; and I am sorry that I cannot award to the gentleman those merits which he confesses I possess, for he reminds me very much of a man rowing a boat, who is constantly rowing one way and looking another. During the gentleman's service here, while he has talked and made a parade about economy, I have seldom found him voting for anything that was an absolute economy. I have not observed him support anything that has been proposed in the line of economy, so far as I have observed on a standing-up vote, whether it was a matter of retrenchment or not. Now, sir, I have shown to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and to this committee, and to the chairman of the committee, that this section absolutely takes out of the expenditure of the Government $300,000 upon the face of it; I believe that ultimately it takes out approaching a million of dollars. I, as a business man, can see that by the arithmetic I learned when I was a boy; and I have never known that that fundamental principle of arithmetic that two and two make four was altered in colleges.

I now ask the decision of the Chair upon this proposition. I have consulted with the best authorities on both sides of the House as to this section being in order and coming within the rule. It has been prepared after being the subject of a good deal of consultation in the Committee on Appropriations, and no gentleman of that committee, so far as I know, seriously disputed that it was in order or that it did not escape all the objections of the Speaker.

This section also is in the line of what I believe to be the policy of this side of the House; it is in the line of retrenchment. Notwithstanding the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol resist it, and declare to the country that what we have done we have not done understandingly, I can tell this House and the country that we have done it understandingly, and that what to-day they ascribe to partisanship was not partisanship. It was the voice of the people to which we sought to give expression in all these reductions. But to-day it has ceased to be partisanship, even if it ever was. I say here in my place, speaking upon information received from the Treasury Department, that these reductions have become to-day a necessity. The estimates of the receipts of this Government for the present fiscal year are deficient——

Mr. SEELYE. I believe the gentleman is discussing the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Deficient seventeen or twenty millions, and the Secretary of the Treasury tells you that it is not likely to be improved during the next six or twelve months. These are the results of the complete prostration of the agricultural, mechanical, and industrial interests of this country and of its commercial interests. That is what produces the deficiency, and I venture the opinion as a man somewhat familiar with the business of this country that in the next fiscal year the deficiency as compared with the estimates of this session as to the receipts of the Treasury will be from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000. I say to all comers, whether upon this floor or elsewhere, that you have got to reduce the expenditures of the Government for the next fiscal year to the extent that the Committee on Appropriations has determined it can be done without injury to the Government because of this deficit in your receipts. To-day you are not in accordance with a former law paying the sum actually pledged to the sinking fund at all. The money now assigned to the sinking fund is taken from moneys not coming into the Treasury for that purpose. The law as to the sinking fund is being satisfied by counting moneys brought into the Treasury in the shape of greenbacks under one of the sections of the resumption act.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman yield to me at this late hour for a motion to rise, so that the chairman of the committee shall have time to consider the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I am glad that I have been provoked into this exposition of the condition of the finances of the country, and I defy contradiction as to the statements I have made. They came from republican authority, and you must admit that they are true, for here is the book that shows it.

Mr. KELLEY. Why not provide for the revival of business, and thereby replenish the Treasury of the country?

Mr. RANDALL. If my colleague can suggest a way, or any republican on that side of the House will suggest a way, I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. KELLEY. It is to issue more gold-bearing bonds for the purchase of silver.

Mr. RANDALL. The trouble is the extravagance which prevails. Set the example to your fellow-citizens of economy here, and then you will be able to expect it from the individuals of the nation.

Mr. KELLEY. I am quite sure it can be done by issuing a few millions more of gold bonds for the purchase of silver.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, that is one way to reach prosperity by recognizing the laws of the nation and dealing with them as honest business men.

Mr. FOSTER. Would not a revision of the tariff do it?

Mr. McCRARY. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that neither of the gentlemen are speaking upon the point of order now before the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. KASSON. I now ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a motion that the committee rise. It is a very late hour, and it is Saturday evening.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have the decision on the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. I think the Chair ought to have at least until Monday to consider the question, as it is a very important one.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say to the committee that I am compelled to be away on Monday, and if the bill goes over it should go over until Tuesday.

Mr. KASSON. It will not be possible to dispose of the bill this evening, for, in case the point of order is not sustained, there will be debate on the section itself.

Mr. RANDALL. If gentlemen on the other side will consent that the debate shall be cut off on the point of order, I will agree that the committee rise.

Mr. KASSON. I will not ask for further debate, although I should be very glad to answer some of the very general statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman thinks it desirable to answer my statements on the figures which I have given, of course at any time I will afford him that opportunity.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to say a few words, and but a few, but if the committee desire to rise I will not detain them.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. None, if the committee desire to rise.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will indicate the time he wants I will grant him it, but I shall ask that at the close of his remarks all debate on the point of order shall cease.

Mr. KASSON. I hope that if it be continued, it will be under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire more than five minutes?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not. If it were in order to do so, I would like to remark, before speaking closely on the point of order, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania should have made some exception in his statement as to the general prostration, for the people of Iowa were never more prosperous than now; but that is not in order, and I cannot say it.

I understand that it is the wish of the committee to rise, and therefore I will not detain it.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to reach the point of having some limitation placed on this debate, and am willing that the gentleman from Iowa shall have whatever time he desires, and that then the debate shall close.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No more than five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the committee that he would prefer to hear what remarks are to be made on the question of order before the committee rises, in order that before the next sitting of the committee he may consider the question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This point of order came before the committee before in almost the same shape as we have it now with a few exceptions to which I will call your attention, Mr. Chairman. The main difficulty in the mind of the Speaker of the House when he ruled on this question when the same proposition was offered on the legislative appropriation bill was that it did not go far enough and did not make appropriation for the whole Indian service.

The section of the bill now under consideration does make provision for all the purposes of the Indian Bureau. Furthermore, it abolishes many officers now drawing pay in that Bureau, and assigns their duties to officers who draw pay regularly in another department of the Government, in the Army.

In considering whether a provision of this kind is in order under the rule adopted by the House at this session, we do not need to consider the abstract question whether in all its bearings it will be best for the country, whether it will be the best legislation we can pass; for that I do not myself believe. The question is whether this section comes under the law and scope of the rule which we have adopted. It is true that double duties are assigned by this section to the officers of the Army, and those duties may not be performed as well perhaps as if we retained the officers of the Indian Bureau and permitted the officers of the Army to attend to those duties only which are now assigned them.

The question for us to determine is whether this section retrenches expenditure. I believe that it does. The office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is abolished, and his duties are assigned to an officer of the Army. All the Indian superintendents are abolished, and their duties are assigned to officers of the Army. All the Indian agents, the special agents, interpreters, &c., are abolished, and their duties assigned to officers of the Army. Now it will not do to consider whether the present officers of the Army can sufficiently perform all the duties now devolving upon them and also these new duties. The question is whether, if we pass this section, it will retrench expenditures.

It seems to be difficult for gentlemen who speak upon this question to disassociate the effects of the proposed legislation from the scope of the rule itself. I have no difficulty at all upon that point. I believe this section to be in order. I have no doubt at all that it is not only germane to the bill, but that it does tend as well to retrench expenditures. The wisdom of the adoption of this section depends upon the House itself; the question whether the House shall have an opportunity to vote upon it depends, Mr. Chairman, upon you. I have already twice remarked, in speaking upon this rule, that where there is any ambiguity, any doubt in the mind of the Chair whether a deliberative body should have the opportunity to vote upon a proposition, that deliberative body should have the benefit of the doubt. I believe that is so in this case.

The difficulty is presented that if we adopt this section we must increase expenditures under the Army bill. That has not been our history. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] has brought in a bill very materially reducing the Army. Therefore, the question whether the total amount to be paid for the Indian Bureau and the Army combined will be greater or less, is a question which, Mr. Chairman, I think you have to consider in passing upon this point of order.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. A word or two upon the point of order. Members of this House are very well aware that a bill for the very same purpose as this section contemplates has been introduced into and passed by this House. They are equally well aware that it is very doubtful if that bill will receive the sanction of the other branch of Congress or of the Executive. This is an attempt in an appropriation bill to force certain legislation, and, in my opinion, will tend to hinder legislation. It is an attempt to accomplish by indirection what it is supposed cannot be accomplished in a direct manner.

It introduces legislation into an appropriation bill for the expenditures of the Indian Department, proposing to change our whole system of Indian affairs. It is an attempt to incorporate in an appropriation bill the substance of another bill which is pending in the Senate and which will probably not become a law. I think the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] lies against this section. I think if it is adopted by the House it will only hinder legislation and keep us here for two or three weeks longer than we otherwise would be, by attempting to force through in an appropriation bill a measure which cannot be passed through Congress upon its own merits. I think the point of order is well taken against this section.

Mr. RANDALL. Do I understand that all debate upon this point of order is now closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that it is entirely in accordance with his wishes that this point of order should not be decided until the committee again resumes the consideration of this bill. It is a question of great importance.

Mr. RANDALL. To the tax-payers it is.

The CHAIRMAN. And therefore the Chair desires that the decision may be postponed for the present.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. RANDALL, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3477) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ALASKA SEAL FISHERY.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, from the Committee of Ways and Means, to which had been referred a resolution of the House directing an investigation into certain matters relating to a lease made between the United States and the Alaska Commercial Company of the right to kill fur-seals on the islands of Saint George and Saint Paul, in Alaska, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 590) providing for an arrangement with the Sioux Nation in regard to a portion of their reservation, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1400) authorizing the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, County of Allegheny and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River, on the south side of Neville Island, by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river;

An act (H. R. No. 915) for the relief of F. M. Blount, of Chicago, Illinois;

An act (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Francis Bernard;

An act (H. R. No. 2291) granting a pension to John H. Garrison;

An act (H. R. No 1992) granting an additional pension to Mary P. Abeel;

An act (H. R. No. 2306) granting a pension to John McIntire; and

An act (H. R. No. 2447) transferring the custody of certain Indian trust funds.

AMENDMENT OF RULES—REPORTS ON CURRENCY.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on the Rules, who have acted under the instructions of the House as given on Monday last, to submit a report, proposing to add to Rule 74 the following words:

And on any question referred to them by the House in relation to the currency the said committee may, during the present session, report at any time.

On the adoption of this report I move the previous question.

Mr. KELLEY. I object to the consideration of the report at this time.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has not the right to object. I have moved the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. The report is in order, of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to make the report; and he calls the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 36, noes 66; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 47.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to make a suggestion. Let the previous question be sustained on this report, and then let it go over as unfinished business.

Mr. KELLEY. I object.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I shall have to insist on my motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. A proposition to amend the rules requires one day's notice, at any rate.

Mr. KELLEY. No change in the rules ought to be made by less than one-third of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. It is the duty of the other two-thirds to stay here.

Mr. KELLEY. But they have not staid; and I am doing duty for them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This being a question of high privilege, will it not come up at any rate as unfinished business immediately upon the next meeting of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be inclined to so decide at present.

Mr. RANDALL. Then it will come up immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. That motion is pending.

Mr. KELLEY. I think it will be time enough for the Chair to decide the question when it comes up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would not like to decide the question till it properly comes up.

Mr. KELLEY. The unfinished business before the House, as I understand, is on the question of adjournment.

The question being again taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLACKBURN: The petition of citizens of Iowa, for an investigation of the acts of Congress, the rulings of the Interior Department, and the decisions of the Supreme Court concerning the Des Moines River lands, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. EDEN: The petition of Isabella J. Brown, of Greenup, Illinois, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENKS: Memorial of soldiers of the Black Hawk, Seminole, Creek, Comanche, and Sioux Indian wars, citizens of Montgomery County, Ohio, for pensions, to the same committee.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of E. D. Perkins, and other citizens of Yolo County, California, for a post-route from Woodland to Lower Lake, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, against the reduction of the working force in the Patent Office, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PAYNE: The petition of Everett, Weddell & Co., and 164 others, bankers, merchants, and manufacturers, of Cleveland, Ohio, for the repeal of so much of the resumption act as provides for the payment of United States legal-tender notes in coin upon the 1st of January, 1879, and so much of said act as authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds of the United States for the purpose of enabling him to redeem such legal-tender notes, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, five petitions signed by George Mygatt and 410 other prominent and representative business men of Cleveland, Ohio, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana: The petition of Martin Weiss, for compensation for the use of his horse by the United States Army during the late war, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIS: The petition of Right Reverend Horatio Potter, bishop of New York, Governor John A. Dix, John A. Stewart, Samuel D. Babcock, and about 100 others, to so amend section 2505, schedule M, title 33, Revised Statutes of the United States, as to remove discriminations against religious societies, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 5, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a note from the British minister resident at Washington, received from the Secretary of State, relative to certain defects alleged to exist in the laws of the United States respecting the shipment of dangerous goods on board different classes of vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BOOTH presented a memorial of the shipping commissioner of San Francisco, California, remonstrating against the passage of the amendments to the shipping act of 1872, as proposed in House bill No. 654, introduced by Mr. WARD; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying the passage of a law allowing a pension to Andrew Evarts, late a private in Company B, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of James Sweet, John H. Tomlin, and other citizens of Nebraska City, Nebraska, praying the passage of a law authorizing the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to examine and report upon the feasibility of changing the channel of the Missouri River near that place in order to protect the port of Nebraska City; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Saint Paul, Minnesota, praying an appropriation to continue the improvement of the Upper Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of A. F. McMillen, late captain First United States Heavy Artillery, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the report of the House committee.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Captain Cherrie M. Levy, praying compensation and allowances as assistant quartermaster for two years, during which time he alleges he remained unassigned to duty by the proper officer of the Government, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan the use of tents and camp and garrison equipage for shelter of the surviving veterans of the war of 1812 and of the Mexican war during the centennial exposition at Philadelphia, reported adversely thereon; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of War, in relation to the disposition of tolls collected from the bridge across the North Platte River, at or near Fort Laramie, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah Porter, widow of Frank W. Porter, late a private in Company A, Fifth Regiment Michigan Cavalry, praying for the removal of the charge of desertion from his Army record, to the end that she may obtain a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Benjamin C. Card, praying that the date of his commission as major and quartermaster in the United States Army be corrected, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George Whittaker, late private in Company C, Twelfth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for the removal from his Army record of that portion of the sentence of a court-martial pronounced against him relating to "back pay and dishonorable discharge," submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 894) to provide for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, reported it with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 683) for the relief of the officers and privates of the Fourth Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 889) to amend section 1212 of the Revised Statutes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the authorities of Steubenville, Ohio, two pieces of artillery, to be used in celebrating July 4, 1876, reported adversely thereon; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1846) authorizing the retirement of Colonel W. H. Emory with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2387) to fix the retired pay of Surgeon-General Clement A. Finley, retired, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NORWOOD. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 732) for the relief of Mrs. Catherine Thrush and William B. Stone, owners of the schooner Flight, have had the same under consideration and instruct me to report a substitute in lieu of the House bill, authorizing them to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 739) to amend section 5457 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to counterfeiting coin, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to state, as a member of the committee, that at the proper time I shall oppose the substitute and favor the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

SARAH WILSON.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2456) to release any title of the United States to a certain tract of land in Braxton County, West Virginia, to Sarah Wilson, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage, and I ask for its present consideration. It will only take a minute.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It releases to Sarah Wilson, her heirs and assigns, whatever title the United States may have in a tract of land, of about one hundred acres, in Braxton County, West Virginia, which was conveyed by George Wilson to Levi Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, by George Wilson by deed dated September 10, 1836.

Mr. SARGENT. There ought to be an explanation of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is a very simple proposition. About thirty years ago a man named Wilson, on a capias ad satisfaciendum execution against him as security, under the requirements of an act of Congress, surrendered all his property to Levi Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury, including a tract of land of one hundred acres in Braxton County, West Virginia. The deed was made and he was discharged. Before this act the land had been sold for taxes and bought in by another party. There are two old widows claiming under the tax-title. As the United States did not acquire any title, under the circumstances the Judiciary Committee agreed with the House that it is well enough to release it, so as to clear the title of these old ladies from any incumbrance of the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. Have the United States ever put the land to any use?

Mr. STEVENSON. They have not, and have no claim to it, really.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 897) granting a pension to Andrew Evarts; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 898) granting a pension to William Criddle, minor child of William Criddle, late of Company B, Fifth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 899) establishing a mail-route in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 900) making an appropriation for the completion of the post-office and custom-house building at Parkersburgh, in the State of West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 901) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army to examine and report upon the feasibility of changing the channel of the Missouri River at Nebraska City, Nebraska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 902) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of John A. Tardy, late major United States Army, be taken from the files of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLAYTON. Let it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule requires that it shall be referred.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well.

FUND OF MIAMI INDIANS.

Mr. INGALLS. If there be no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 619) to carry out in part the provisions of the act entitled "An act to abolish the tribal relations of the Miami Indians, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $35,539.62 to be paid to the thirty-four persons who, under the provisions of the third section of the act referred to, elected to and did become citizens of the United States, the same being their proportion of the assets of the tribe at the date of that act; and also the further sum of $23,878.67 to be paid to the Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea confederated bands for lands sold to the Indian division of the Miamies under the approved contract of January 15, 1872, as per the sixth section of the act; which two sums, making a total of $59,418.79, are to be taken from the tribal assets of the Miami Indians now in the hands of the Government. But until the respective funds of Miami and Kaskaskia, &c., Indians are in condition to enable the Secretary of the Interior to make the equitable consolidation contemplated by the act of the 3d of March, 1863, he shall continue to pay to each the annuities derived from their respective funds. It shall also be the duty of the Secretary to pay to the citizen Miamies their just proportion of the proceeds of all lands sold or which may hereafter be sold under the act of 3d of March, 1873, or which may be derived by the Miami tribe from any other source belonging of right to the Miami Indians prior to the abolition of their tribal relations.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in lines 21 and 22, to strike out the words "and so forth" and insert "Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea;" and in line 25, to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy" before "three;" so as to read:

Provided, That until the respective funds of said Miami, and said Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea Indians are in condition to enable the Secretary of the Interior to make the equitable consolidation contemplated by the act of the 3d of March, 1873, aforesaid, he shall continue to pay to each the annuities derived from their respective funds.

Mr. DAVIS. This is a bill of some importance, apparently, and involves a considerable amount of appropriation. I ask if there is a report accompanying it?

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will excuse me, there is a report accompanying the bill. While it seems to be in form an appropriation bill, it merely provides for the distribution of the assets of the Indians between those who have citizenized and those who have retained their tribal relations. The bill has to be in the form of an appropriation because this is money in the Treasury belonging to the Indians. It expressly provides that the moneys appropriated shall be taken from the tribal assets of the Miami Indians, now in the hands of the Government. The bill is recommended from the Department of the Interior and has received the approbation of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the recommendation from the Department of the Interior here?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. Let it be read.

Mr. INGALLS. It is quite a long document.

Mr. DAVIS. Let merely that part be read in which the Secretary recommends that the appropriation be made.

Mr. INGALLS. As the report is somewhat long, and I suppose all the Senator desires to have read is that which refers specifically to the matter under consideration, I will read only that portion of it which refers to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I am aware that there are a great many supposed treaties that exist with the Indians. Some of them I have no doubt ought to be carried out, but there are others that ought not to be carried out. There are treaties with the Indians which if carried out instead of the Indians getting the money some one else probably would get nine-tenths of it, perhaps all of it. I should want to be pretty well convinced, in the first place, that this amount of money is due to the Indians from the Government; secondly, that it is going to the parties for whom it is intended; and, thirdly, that it has been carefully examined both by the Department and the committee, and that each of them recommend it. I would thank the Senator to relieve my mind of these difficulties, if he can do so.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from West Virginia is right in saying that these matters should receive special scrutiny. I would say to him that this bill is not to carry out the provisions of a treaty, but to carry out the provisions of a previous law, passed in 1873, which, owing to an omission, rendered a compliance with its terms impossible. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says:

The thirty-four Miamies who have become citizens of the United States have complied with all the requirements of the third section of the act named, are much in need of their proportion of the tribal assets, and are justly entitled to the same.

I therefore transmit herewith an estimate of appropriation required to pay the said thirty-four persons their share of the tribal assets of the Miami Indians, and to pay the confederated Kaskaskias, &c., for lands sold to the seventy-two Miamies who have united with them; and respectfully recommend that the same be laid before Congress for the favorable action of that body.

For the information of the Department I append hereto a statement of funds belonging to the Miamies of Kansas.

And here follow the various items.

Mr. DAVIS. When is that communication dated?

Mr. INGALLS. It is dated on the 24th of January, 1876, and was accompanied by the projet of a bill which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and by them reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Those are merely formal.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator who has this bill in charge what is the meaning of the two last clauses in the bill? The first part of the bill provides for the payment out individually to these two tribes of certain moneys which they are supposed to be entitled to already, if I understand it.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That looks to the past merely. Then it provides:

That until the respective funds of said Miami, and said Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea Indians are in condition to enable the Secretary of the Interior to make the equitable consolidation contemplated by the act of the 3d of March, 1873, aforesaid, he shall continue to pay to each the annuities derived from their respective funds.

What is that "equitable consolidation," may I ask the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. INGALLS. There was an agreement entered into on the 15th of January, 1872, between the Miami Indians, then residing in Kansas upon a reservation, and the confederated Peorias, Kaskaskias, Piankeshaws, and Weas, by which the latter agreed to convey to such of the Miamies as would unite with them a pro rata share of the lands held by them under the provisions of a previous treaty, made, I think, in 1867, and in accordance with which the Miamies agreed to pay from their tribal fund a pro rata share of the cost of the acquisition of the territory held by the Kaskaskias. The act to which the Senator refers, approved March 3, 1873, ratified that agreement, and gave, or intended to give, the Secretary of the Interior full authority to carry out the provisions of the agreement between these two tribes of Indians, but failed to do so in consequence of some neglect or omission in its provisions. This bill is simply to remedy, as far as possible, those defects which would render it impossible for the Secretary to comply with the provisions of the arrangement made between these two tribes which had previously received the sanction of Congress. Of the tribe of Miamies but thirty-four had elected to become citizens, and they of course were entitled to their pro rata share of the funds of the tribe, leaving the balance to be held by the Miamies as a nation or as a tribe in their tribal capacity. Of course, the portion that is not paid over to the thirty-four who have concluded to become citizens would still remain subject to the disposition of the Secretary of the Interior, to be applied in the usual way, but the statute provides that the remainder of the Miami tribe can become citizenized, and whenever they do so, they will be entitled to withdraw their proportionate share of the tribal assets and funds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are these Indians located?

Mr. INGALLS. In the Indian Territory. Those who have become citizenized are residing in Kansas, in the county of Miami.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should the United States continue to pay to each of these tribes annuities after a portion of this money has been paid out?

Mr. INGALLS. Simply because the annuities are due to all those who have not citizenized; it does not affect those who continue in their tribal relations. They are still entitled to annuities; they are still entitled to the general provisions of the agreements that have heretofore been made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator understands this to mean, then, simply that the income of the balance that is left after paying this fifty-odd thousand dollars is to continue to be paid to the Indians?

Mr. INGALLS. That is all. There is no provision for any appropriation out of the Treasury to pay these different sums.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As far as I am concerned on this examination, I shall have to take it, as I ought to do, on the inspection of the Committee on Indian Affairs and my friend from Kansas. The act of 1873 is so long and complicated that without careful study nobody can understand it.

Mr. INGALLS. We have given the matter careful attention. I think the bill is entirely right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that he was directed to inform the Senate that the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having reported to the House that they were unable to agree, it was Ordered, That the managers of said conference be discharged from the further consideration of the same.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes relating to merchant seamen; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3636) to remove the political disabilities of Richard S. Kinney and William R. Jones.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Francis Bernard;

A bill (H. R. No. 915) for the relief of F. M. Blount, of Chicago, Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 1400) authorizing the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, County of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river;

A bill (H. R. No. 1922) granting an additional pension to Mary P. Abeel;

A bill (H. R. No. 2291) granting a pension to John H. Garrison;

A bill (H. R. No. 2306) granting a pension to John McIntire;

A bill (H. R. No. 2447) transferring the custody of certain Indian trust funds; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 115) granting the use of artillery, blankets, &c., at the national soldiers' reunion at Caldwell, Ohio.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House, No. 1594, entitled "An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

A. A. SARGENT,
F. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
R. E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

O. R. SINGLETON,
SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
HENRY WALDRON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. BOGY.

COMMON UNIT OF MONEY AND ACCOUNTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution proposing a common unit of money and accounts for the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The Committee on Finance reported the concurrent resolution with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 5, to strike out the words "following basis, namely," and insert "general basis herein stated, but subject to such modifications as may be agreed upon between the contracting parties."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the words "legal tender," in the fifth line of the fourth clause, to strike out the words "or circulate as money," and to add as a fifth paragraph the following:

5. The action of the convention shall take effect when approved by the respective parties thereto, and when laws shall have been passed by the respective countries to carry it into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, reads:

Concurrent resolution proposing a common unit of money and accounts for the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Whereas the magnitude of the transactions in commerce and the intimate social relations between the people of the United States and of Great Britain and Ireland combine to recommend the importance of uniformity in the gold coins and moneys of account of the respective countries; and whereas, in existing circumstances, a change in the standard of the gold coins of the United States could be introduced without serious inconvenience, and the United States are willing to make such change, to the end of securing such uniformity: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the President be requested to propose a convention between the United States and her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, having for its object to secure uniformity in the coins and moneys of account of the respective countries on the general basis herein stated, but subject to such modifications as may be agreed upon between the contracting parties:

1. The money of account in each country shall be the dollar, which shall be represented by a coin formed of standard gold, whereof the pure metal shall be nine-tenths parts and the alloy one-tenth part, which alloy shall be of copper, or of copper and silver, the silver not to exceed one-tenth of the alloy. The weight of the dollar of such standard gold shall be twenty-five grains and one-ninth of a grain troy, and shall contain twenty-two grains and sixth-tenths of a grain troy in pure gold. Gold coins of two and one-half, five, ten, and twenty dollars, proportioned in in weight, may also be issued, of like standard; and the convention shall provide what variations may be allowed from the exact standard of weight and fineness for such gold coins.

2. Subsidiary coins of silver, copper, or alloys of base metal may be issued within each country, of such standard and weight as may be provided by their respective laws, and representing cents or hundredths parts of a dollar, and other convenient decimal subdivisions thereof.

3. All accounts, representing transactions to be settled in coin, shall be kept in dollars and cents, or fractional parts of a cent. Sterling money shall be converted into dollar money by computing the pound sterling as equivalent to five dollars, the shilling to twenty-five cents, the sixpence to twelve and one-half cents, the penny to two cents, and the farthing to one-half cent.

4. All such gold coins conformed to standard, within the allowed limits of variation, shall be a legal tender within each country for debts and obligations payable in gold coin, excepting such as may have been incurred within the United States payable in gold coins of a former standard. The coins subsidiary to the dollar shall not be a legal tender beyond the limits of the country within which they are issued.

5. The action of the convention shall take effect when approved by the respective parties thereto, and when laws shall have been passed by the respective countries to carry it into effect.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, this is rather too important a measure to pass without a discussion that shall let the Senate know precisely what is pending. It seems to me that it is altogether too important a measure to be passed in the morning hour. As I understand it, it proposes a negotiation to make the dollar a unit, and to reduce the value of the dollar at least 3 per cent. in order to get it upon a level with the currency of Great Britain. I do not know but that that may be wise, but it seems to me that it will hereafter make necessary some very important changes in our laws in relation to our currency and legal-tenders. While this resolution of course does not do anything more than authorize a negotiation, the result of which may be accepted or rejected hereafter, at the same time I think it is of sufficient importance to command the attention of the Senate long enough to enable them to understand precisely what is intended.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator desires delay on this resolution, I certainly shall not ask action this morning; but there is no proposition before us that has been more carefully considered and more fully matured. It was introduced at the beginning of the present session; it is recommended by the Treasury Department; and the report on which it is based was prepared by the officers of the Mint and after full correspondence not only with officers in this country but in other countries, especially in England. It is based upon a printed report which is upon your files; it was considered by the Committee on Finance, and reported back on the 25th of April, 1876. The entire scope of it is to invite a negotiation with Great Britain to so change our dollar that our dollar will be one-fifth of a pound sterling, and that England will adopt our dollar as the common unit of account between this country and Great Britain. That is all there is of it.

It necessarily involves a change somewhat of the coinage of England, because they would have to alter the fineness of their coin from eleven-twelfths to nine-tenths, the alloy in their coin being one-twelfth instead of one-tenth as in ours, and we should have somewhat to reduce the value of our coin. As a matter of course this will only take effect first after negotiation, and then after laws have been passed by each country to carry it into effect. So it cannot take effect for two or three or four years. First there must be negotiation, and then Congress must act upon it hereafter; and then the Parliament of Great Britain must act on it. So, after all, this is only the opening of a negotiation that, if successful—of which I have some doubt, because I do not know whether Great Britain will assent to it or not—will make one of the most important progresses on this subject probably in the modern history of nations. That is, it will assimilate the coins of America and Great Britain, so that they will be convertible one into the other, so that $5 will be one pound; and then the assimilation that has already been brought about between the coins of France and the coins of Great Britain is now so near that a very slight change in the French coin—the basis of the treaty between what are called the Latin powers—would make the coins of all commercial nations easily interchangeable one with the other, so that five francs would be $1, and $5 one pound.

Mr. HOWE. How do you propose to make that assimilation? By increasing the value of the dollar or reducing the value of the pound?

Mr. SHERMAN. We take the pound, and one-fifth of the pound will make a dollar. They change their alloy so as to adopt our alloy, the metrical system of alloy, nine-tenths fine, one-tenth alloy. They will have to change somewhat their coin, and we shall have to change ours.

Mr. HOWE. Shall we have to increase the value of our coin?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; reduce it. The Senate will see that the present pound sterling is $4.86 $\frac{6}{10}$, and $5 would be the new basis. But, after all, I wish simply to say that this is a resolution inviting negotiation; and if it results in what we hope it may result in, success, as a matter of course it will be a great progress in promoting the commerce between not only these two nations, but all nations. If it fails, we are no worse off. So the Committee on Finance directed me to make this report. However, if any Senator wishes to examine into it and will look into the reasons, let me say that there is a printed document here; and if the resolution goes over to-day, I call the attention of Senators to it so that there may be no delay when I call it up again. There is a printed document, Miscellaneous Document No. 39, that gives fully the reasons for adopting this proposition. If anybody wants to study it, or if my friend from Vermont wants to study it, I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I only desire to suggest that this is so important a subject that it ought to receive a full discussion, so that the Senate may fully understand it. My only willingness to have it acted on at all results from a belief that Great Britain never will consent to any treaty of the sort; but at the same time I can conceive that if it is to be acted upon, it will make necessary a considerable change in all of our laws in regard to legal-tender and the currency. Besides, this proposes to act by means of a treaty; and then when the result comes before us in the form of a treaty, it will be claimed that the House of Representatives are bound to act, whether they are in favor of the treaty or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend knows very well that we put another clause on the resolution for the very purpose of obviating that difficulty, the Committee on Finance amending it by adding:

The action of the convention shall take effect when approved by the respective parties thereto, and when laws shall have been passed by the respective countries to carry it into effect.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I know that that was put in, and it was put into the Hawaiian treaty in the same manner; and yet when that treaty came before the other House it was argued that the House was bound to carry it into effect.

Now, I cannot say that I have examined this subject enough to discuss it as it ought to be discussed, but I am very clear that it is a measure which ought not to be passed in the morning hour. There ought to be sufficient time taken so that all Senators may fully understand it.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to passing it in the morning hour, it is obvious that a measure of this kind can only pass in the morning hour. I have no objection to letting it go over, because the attention of the Senate has now been called to it, and I am sure every Senator, when he has examined it, will be satisfied. Let it go over, and I will call it up at the first morning hour when there is leisure. There is no time to pass resolutions of this kind except in the morning hour. If the Senator wishes it to go over, I shall let it go over now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Let it go over now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be postponed, but I give notice that I will call it up at an early day, when the Senate shall be somewhat at leisure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be postponed.

CHARLES B. PHILLIPS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 720.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 720) for the relief of Charles B. Phillips was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Charles B. Phillips of $1,000, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for one-half of the interest of D. G. Fowler in the wharf-boat D. G. Fowler, which, upon the information of Phillips, was, on the 2d of March, 1863, by a decree of the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois, declared to be forfeited to the United States under the act approved the 6th of August, 1861; but this is to be in full of all claim of Phillips by reason of the proceedings of forfeiture in such case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETERS & REED.

Mr. NORWOOD. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2287) for the relief of Peters & Reed, naval contractors at Norfolk navy-yard in the year 1860, upon which I do not think there will be any controversy.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, by which the Secretary of the Navy is directed to cause to be paid to Peters & Reed the balances due them for labor done and material furnished at the Norfolk navy-yard in 1860, upon the contracts with them personally, and the balances due them as the attorneys in fact of the contractors, John E. McWilliams and F. W. Parmenter, in that navy-yard during the same time, amounting in the aggregate to $15,170.89, as certified by the engineer in charge and approved by the commandant in June 1860.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Is there a report with that bill?

Mr. NORWOOD. There is a report.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. JOHN ROBBINS from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives on February 25, 1876:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition for the relief of Peters & Reed, naval contractors at the Norfolk navy-yard in the year 1860, have had the same under consideration, with the papers and vouchers in the case, and report:

That the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks replied to a letter addressed to him by Hon. M. H. DUNNELL, a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-third Congress, as follows:

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1874.

SIR: The Bureau has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, inclosing certain papers, and asking information in reference to the claim of Peters & Reed, as attorney for F. W. Parmenter and John E. McWilliams, contractors for work at Norfolk navy-yard.

The remote period at which this claim originated, and the incompleteness of the record, caused by the destruction of the yard during the late war, have caused some delay in answering your inquiries. The records of this Bureau have been carefully examined, with the following results:

On the 1st of July, 1859, a contract was made by the Bureau with John E. McWilliams as principal, and A. M. H. Peters, Washington Reed, and Holt Wilson as sureties, all of Portsmouth, Virginia, for the work necessary to complete the masonry of the victualing establishment at the Norfolk navy-yard. The price to be paid was $10 per thousand for laying the bricks, to be paid to John E. McWilliams or his attorney.

On the 26th of August, 1859, a contract was made by the Bureau with F. W. Parmenter, of Troy, New York, as principal, and Sidney D. Roberts and Julius H. Kroehl, both of New York, as sureties, for the construction, erection, and completion of an iron roof to the said victualing establishment. The sum to be paid for this roof was $18,000, to be paid to F. W. Parmenter or his attorney.

In both cases Peters & Reed were recognized as the agents and attorneys of the contracting parties.

With regard to the payments made on McWilliams's contract, it appears from the records of the Bureau that bills to the amount of $13,308.25 were made and paid, except a reservation of $2,661.65, and subsequently one-half of this reservation, $1,330.83, was paid. There is no evidence on the files of the Bureau that the bills for $2,758.73, $2,266.63, or the reservation, $1,330.83, have ever been paid.

The aggregate amount of McWilliams's contract is not stated, the price being $10 per thousand for laying the bricks, while the number is not stated; nor is there any information in the Bureau by which it could be ascertained, as all the books and papers in the yard were destroyed when the navy-yard was burned.

The only payments on Parmenter's contract for the roof on record in the Bureau are one of $7,200 and one of $3,600, making $10,800, and leaving a balance of $7,200 to make the $18,000.

It also appears from the records of the Bureau that the bill of $777.99 and one of $175, both for extra work on the roof, were authorized by the Bureau to be paid but there is no evidence that either of these last three bills were paid.

The bill for $661.71, in favor of Peters & Reed, for bricks, is noticed on the books of the Bureau, but there is no evidence of it having been paid.

In February, 1860, the appropriation for this work was exhausted, and the contractors, through the commandant, applied for permission to go on and complete their work, and wait for payment until Congress should make appropriations to pay their bills. To this the Bureau interposed no objection, and the parties proceeded with the work and completed their contracts in a satisfactory manner.

In the annual report of 1860 the Bureau asked for an appropriation to pay outstanding liabilities on account of the victualing establishment and to complete the building; the appropriation was made on the 21st of February, 1861, for payment of liabilities and completing the building, but it was not available until the 1st of July, 1861, prior to which time the act of secession was passed, and the navy-yard at Norfolk was taken possession of by the insurgents in April, 1861, and the Navy Department ceased to have a disbursing officer at Norfolk.

The United States again came in possession of the yard in the latter part of May, 1862; the buildings in the yard had been destroyed by fire and the dry-dock disabled, and, under the emergency created by the exigencies of the war, it became necessary for the Department to avail itself of all the unexpended balances of appropriations to the credit of the Norfolk navy-yard; these balances are all condensed in one sum, and the money expended where needed without regard to former special allotment. The dry-dock was repaired and put in working order, and such buildings and wharves as were indispensably necessary to meet the demands of the service during a state of war were put in order; there, with other objects of most imperative necessity, were paid for out of this general fund.

The above is all the information this Bureau has on this subject. It has no knowledge of the payment of or the correctness of the copies of those bills. If any of them have been paid, it is probable that a reference to the books of the Fourth Auditor's Office would show it.

The papers are herewith returned.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. R. P. RODGERS.

Hon. MARK H. DUNNELL, of Minnesota,
House of Representatives, member of Committee on Claims.

On receipt of the above communication from the Navy Department, a letter was sent to the Fourth Auditor of the United States Treasury, to which the following reply was made:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FOURTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
February 11, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday inclosing the papers in the claim of Peters & Reed, with a report thereon from the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department. The papers and report are herewith respectfully returned.

An examination of the records of this Bureau shows the same result as the report above mentioned, namely: There has been paid on account of work and material on the victualling establishment at Norfolk the sum of $24,108.25 only; and the bills now presented, amounting to $15,170.89, do not appear to have been paid.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

WM. B. MOORE,
Acting Auditor.

Hon. MARK H. DUNNELL,
House of Representatives, member Committee on Claims.

The amount found due and unpaid in the above communications, as well as the items therein given, exactly agrees with the sworn vouchers found among the papers in the case, and also exactly agrees with the amount named in the bill.

Your committee find that there was due from the Government to the claimant on the 1st day of January, 1861, on contracts made in 1859 and 1860, the sum of $15,170.89, and further find that this sum remains unpaid.

This indebtedness existed prior to the rebellion. While the claimants took no part in the rebellion and voted against the ordinance of secession, it is not claimed that they were free from sympathy in the rebellion; yet, as this claim had been recognized by the executive and legislative departments of the Government, and in view of the policy adopted by Congress in making payment of the claims of the census-takers of 1860, your committee recommend the payment of the claim. Your committee deem it the better policy to pay individual claims well sustained in fact and equity than pass a general law at the present time which shall admit a whole class irrespective of the merits of the several cases in the class.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know whether it is worth while to object; but it seems to me that this report is defective in not showing the basis, especially in regard to the contract first mentioned, for the result urged in the bill. I do not see from the report how the Navy Department or the committee reached a conclusion that any certain sum was due to the contractor. That is my impression from hearing the report read.

Mr. NORWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, from the data, as shown there in the Bureau of Construction, they find the amount of the contract, they find the amount paid, they find the balance due, and they find that balance to correspond exactly with the bill rendered by Peters & Reed. I do not know how you can make out a plainer case.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The answer to that is that it is distinctly stated in the report that the contractors were to be paid $10 a thousand for laying brick; but they had no means of ascertaining how many were laid, and when the yard came into the possession of the Government again in 1862 the building was destroyed. I suppose that the contractors furnished the evidence, or at least they furnished their claim to the Department and they furnished a corresponding one to the committee; but there does not seem to have been any means of ascertaining whether something was due to them or not.

Mr. NORWOOD. The report refers to sworn vouchers.

Mr. BOUTWELL. But how were the vouchers made if there was no account in the Department previous to the war of the quantity of bricks laid? The building was destroyed when the Government came into the possession of the property. There certainly is no evidence as to the amount of work done.

Mr. NORWOOD. It is stated distinctly in the report that the sworn vouchers correspond with the records of the Bureau. How they got their information I do not know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. NORWOOD. I ask for an extension of time.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think that this bill had better go over. I do not know that I have any objection to it, but there does not seem to be a clear claim against the Government.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the Department of the Interior, to increase the appropriation in line 1680 for compensation of Assistant Secretary from $3,150 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1681, to increase the appropriation for compensation of chief clerk from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1681 and 1682, to strike out the words "eight principal clerks, at $1,800 each," and in lieu thereof insert:

Ten clerks of class four, eight of whom may be paid $200 additional, if the Secretary of the Interior deem it necessary and proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1685, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1686, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1686, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class one, one of whom shall be the telegraph operator of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1689 and 1690, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the office of the Secretary of the Interior from $58,530 to $69,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1693, to increase the appropriations for compensation of the secretary to sign patents for public lands from $1,350 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1703 and 1704, to increase the appropriation for expenses of packing and distributing official documents, including salary of superintendent, from $5,000 to $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 1704—

For rent of buildings for use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $10,000: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations, for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer an amendment, to strike out the amendment just read and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For rental of the basement and five upper stories of the fire-proof building, and of heating the same, on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue, if the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

For the expenses of removal of the office from the Seaton House, and expense of fitting up the rooms of the new office, $10,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. My attention has been called to this matter, I will state very frankly, by the owner of the Seaton House. The owner of the Seaton House informs me that he rented his present building to the Government for the term of four years, and there was a clause in that lease holding him to a continuation of the lease for a like term thereafter if the Government should elect to continue the occupation of it, and I think a clause in the lease for a still additional four years should the Government desire to avail itself of it. He affirms that he has been at very great expense in putting his building in its present condition. The first four years have expired, and I believe they are now in the first year of the second four; and having changed his house from a public house to accommodate the Government, it would involve a very large expense upon him to put it back again in its former condition. He thinks, therefore, in justice, the amendment which I send to the Chair should be adopted, which provides that he shall put his building into a fire-proof condition, and then that the Government shall continue to occupy it. I can only express my own opinion that if that amendment is adopted, it will save to the Government thousands of dollars, and give it equal accommodation and equal security.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out all after the word "provided," in line 1707, and insert:

That if the owners of the Seaton House shall refuse to make their building fire-proof, and the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodation, with privilege of occupying the same as long as it may be needed for the uses of the Pension Office, for a rent not exceeding that paid for the Seaton House, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I should not like to do any injustice to any party whatever, but the public interests ought to be served before the interests of any private individual. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have received a communication from the Secretary of the Interior and also from the Commissioner of Pensions, showing most conclusively that the papers and documents of the Pension Bureau, deposited now in the Seaton House, are inaccessible to the examiners and clerks of the Office, having to be placed in the basement, and whenever they are needed making it necessary for the clerks and examiners to go from top to bottom to obtain these papers; and then the whole building is deemed very unsafe in case of fire, unsafe to the papers and unsafe to the clerks. Three hundred or four hundred clerks in that building, it is represented, cannot possibly escape with their lives should a sudden fire break out in any part of the building.

Under these circumstances, by direction of the committees of the two Houses, an examination has been made throughout the city in order to ascertain whether a building, fire-proof and of sufficient extent, could be obtained for the accommodation of the Pension Bureau. One on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue is now in the process of completion and may be ready by the 1st of August for the occupation of the Office. It can be obtained for a rental of $20,000, and for that rental it will be heated. With the amount of expenditure now paid out for other side buildings in addition to the Seaton House the rental is said by the Commissioner of Pensions to be as low as that now paid to the owner or proprietor of the Seaton House. I send to the Secretary's desk a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions to be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1876.

SIR: A few days after the date of my communication to you, setting forth briefly the exposed situation of the Pension Office, as regarded the safety of the papers, and documents, and also of the employés, in case of a fire, at your suggestion I sought an interview with the committees of the respective Houses of Congress to whom said communication had been referred after its transmission to Congress by you, in order to impress upon them the urgency of the necessity to remove the Office from its present location. I did not meet the committees in session, but saw the members of both the Senate and House committees having the matter in charge. These gentlemen were already pretty completely informed upon the subject. I found that after the reference of my communication upon the subject, and only the day previous to my visit to them, the gentlemen of the committee of the House of Representatives having the matter in charge had visited the Seaton House and made a personal examination.

The gentlemen of both committees at my interview requested me to make inquiries and report to them what building or buildings there were in the city available and fit to remove the Pension Office to, which I have accordingly done, making verbal report; but at the suggestion of Mr. WALSH, of the House committee, I reduce the substance of my report to writing, and if it meets your approval, you can forward it to him for the committees' use.

I am unable to find but one building in the city which is available and at the same time a desirable one in which to locate the Pension Office, and that is what is familiarly known as the "Shepherd building," at the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

This is a new building just approaching completion. It consists of six stories above the basement, substantially constructed of brick and iron, and fire-proof from roof to basement. It is to be heated by steam-pipes throughout; has an elevator which will run from the floor of the basement to the floor of the upper story. Each of the six floors above the basement lie in three large rooms, well lighted and ventilated, and which can be cut up into smaller rooms or left as they now are, as convenience may require.

The five upper stories with the basement have sufficient room to accommodate the entire Office.

All other buildings of which I have been able to hear are either not available, too small to accommodate the entire force, not fire-proof, or cut up into small rooms.

The Seaton House being not fire-proof, and cut up into small rooms, necessitates the keeping of the files upon the lower floor so far as that is possible, and necessitating by the separation of the "examiner from his papers great additional labor in various directions, while the small rooms render it impossible to properly oversee and operate the force of the Office.

The new Shepherd building being fire-proof, each examiner may have his cases on his desk before him and within an arm's length, thereby saving him much time in going for his cases, as he sometimes does, and much messenger service in carrying cases between the file-room and his desk. The rooms being large, the force will be continually under the eye of the chiefs of divisions and their assistants, and great economy would be found to result from such a situation over that which places from three to eight or ten persons in a room by themselves, with no responsible head and no person to take note whether the clerk is present or absent from his desk.

The basement and five upper stories of the new Shepherd building may be rented separately from the ground or street story, and may be as entirely shut off from any connection with such story as though they were in another building, and may be secured at a not unreasonable rental, not to exceed $20,000 per annum. If this building should be rented, it would be made ready for occupancy on or before August 1 next. In such case it will be necessary to provide a reasonable sum for removal of the Office and fitting up. This will probably cost not far from $10,000.

While the Government at the time of renting the Seaton House and subsequently until now undoubtedly did the only thing practicable in the way of accommodating the Pension Office, exposed and inconvenient as it was and is; but now that there is a safe place and a better one, it seems of the utmost importance to all concerned, for the welfare of the Government, the pensioners, and the safety of Government employés that it should be secured.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. BENTLEY, Commissioner.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me a word. Mr. President, it will be seen that the Committee on Appropriations undertook to make some provision for a rent for the Pension Office. I desire simply to say that the committee were advised that some sum was necessary for rent, but were not particularly informed as to what; and it was represented by the Secretary of the Interior that some other than the present building was absolutely indispensable to the security of the public records; that they were very insecure where they were and very much exposed in that building; and to give jurisdiction of the question simply and present it to the Senate the committee reported this amendment on the best information they had, and then took the precaution to advise the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which has jurisdiction of this subject, to investigate it so as to be able to tell the Senate precisely what ought to be done. This amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, it seems, is the result of that proceeding.

The Committee on Appropriations had no specific information on the subject which would justify them in doing anything more than to make a proposition which should be perfected in the Senate, and then refer the subject over to the proper committee having jurisdiction of the question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, the proposition made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] is to allow the proprietor of the Seaton House to make it fire-proof. I think that would be almost impossible. I suppose there are brick walls in the interior; but whether they are of sufficient thickness and depth to prevent the spread of fire, even if the roof was taken off and a fire-proof one put on, I think extremely doubtful; and then it is a very inconvenient building, it having been cut up into small rooms, and there are but two stairways leading from the bottom to the top; and therefore the means of escape from the building in case of fire are insufficient.

From all the information I have received on this subject from the Commissioner of Pensions, I am satisfied that this is as wise a proposition as can be made; that it will fully accommodate the Bureau; that they can conduct the business much better and with a less force at this new building than they can with the present accommodations. If there is any injustice upon the proprietor of the Seaton House in consequence of abandoning his building, that should be remedied; but I understand that the first contract made with the proprietor was for four years, and that subsequently a new contract was made by which the Government had a right to take it for a term of four years, or one year or two or three. I have not seen the contract; but that is my information, and I suppose it to be so.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. President, it is wonderful to my mind that the Government is not able to take care of itself, is not able to provide buildings for the use of the public offices and the archives of the Government, but that somebody is always coming forward here to propose some new plan, something to benefit the Government. There seem to be patriotic men who are spending their time and their money for the purpose of putting up buildings here for the public accommodation. I never heard a word about the danger of the archives of the Pension Office until about the time that Mr. Shepherd commenced putting up this building at the corner of Twelth street and Pennsylvania avenue. I understood then that it was intended for the Pension Office; and when it got fairly under way this winter, certain parties became very much interested about the safety of the archives of the Pension Office; it became necessary to have a better building, a fire-proof building, that not only had capacity sufficient, but was secure. I understood precisely what all this meant of course; there was no concealment. The proprietor of the Seaton House, I understand, offered to make that house fire-proof, if it is not so to-day. He says it can be done at a comparatively small expense. The $20,000 rental proposed by the Senator from Vermont for the Shepherd building represents a building worth $300,000. Why is it that the Government cannot—it has land enough here—put up a fire-proof building sufficient to accommodate the Pension Bureau and save the money proposed to be paid out here at the rate of $20,000 a year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to explain on that point?

Mr. HAMILTON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Two or three years ago the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported a bill to authorize the extension of the building on Judiciary Square, which involved an expenditure of about $150,000 or $160,000, by which the Pension Bureau was to have been accommodated; and then it was stated as distinctly and prominently as that the Seaton House was unsafe for the public archives as it has been to-day. Further than that, the Committee on Finance reported a bill a year or more ago in favor of taking the Freedman's Bank for this very purpose at an expenditure of $300,000. And yet the first proposition for Judiciary Square was rejected in committee of conference, I think. I know it passed this body on an appropriation bill, but was rejected elsewhere, so that it did not finally become a law. The other bill, I think, was never acted on.

Mr. HAMILTON. That may be so. I do not recollect anything about it. But the Government has gone along, according to the Senator, for three or four years risking these archives in that building, perfectly content with it until another building is finished that a man wants to rent. That is at the bottom of it, and that is the whole of it. If there was no such building here, we should not hear anything at all about this; the archives might lie as they are. I do not know that it would hurt anybody badly if the archives were ruined. They are not very important to the Government; they are less so perhaps than those of any other office in the Government without exception.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That is a great mistake.

Mr. HAMILTON. No, I am not mistaken about that. As the Senator suggests, it would be infinitely better to take the Freedman's Bank. That is a very good building, and I suppose, as the thing is going, the Government will have to take it anyhow. It looks that way to me. The bank is broken down, and something must be done. There is also a good deal of land adjoining the bank building on which to put up any other buildings the Government may want. You are renting a building now to accommodate the Educational Bureau, in which the pension agent for the city has I do not know how many rooms at the public expense. There is not another pension agent in the Union that is furnished with rooms, furniture, stationery, and stamps, and I do not know what else, at the public expense. The Government is renting more buildings here, in my opinion, than it has any use for; and this thing is growing every year. Year by year it comes to be a settled thing; so that there will be an estimate for $300,000 or $400,000 a year after a while to pay the rent of buildings.

I hope this amendment will be refused by the Senate, and let the Government look around and see what arrangement can be made for the Pension Bureau between this and the meeting of the next session, and save your $20,000 a year. It is too much to pay for a building here for that Office. There is no doubt about that, and I suppose it would not be paid at all for this proposed building if it did not belong to the party to whom it does.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when the lease of the Seaton House expires?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not accurately informed, but I understand within the last few months. My understanding of it is that the Government leased it for four years with the right to continue the lease another four years.

Mr. NORWOOD. Four years from what date?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. From the date of the lease, which I cannot state. My understanding is by hearsay—I have not seen the lease—that that time expired within the last four months.

Mr. WHYTE. It has expired?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The first four years expired within the last four months perhaps.

Mr. WHYTE. Then, has the Government undertaken to renew the lease for four years more?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not understand. On that I must say I am not particularly advised. I do not understand whether the Government has done anything about it.

Mr. WITHERS. Being a member of the Committee on Pensions, I have some recollection of the subject. The Commissioner of Pensions in his report, I think, brings this matter to the consideration of the committee. I have just sent for his report, and I think the facts for which the Senator from Maryland inquires will be there found. My recollection is that the Government rented the building for four years; that that time has expired, and that the Government at the time reserved the privilege of retaining it at the same rental for such additional time as it might desire, whether one year or four years. The Commissioner of Pensions recommends very strongly in his report that some other arrangements shall be made, owing to the insecurity to the public records in that building and its entire inappropriateness for the service to which it is now devoted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That probably is the statement. On the question to which the Senator from Virginia refers, it may be within his recollection that when this bill was before the Committee on Appropriations this subject was brought to the attention of the committee, and a communication from the Secretary of the Interior alluded to it in this way:

> In my judgment the present buildings occupied by the Pension Office are utterly unsafe and unfit for the safe-keeping of such important files as belong to the Bureau.

But it will be seen that the Committee on Appropriations, although they had a knowledge of the fact that some rent must be provided for this service, were not well advised as to what to do, and therefore put in this provision for the payment of a rent of $10,000, which was understood to be what the Government had been paying theretofore, and then providing that if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House, he shall rent it. That was placed in the bill on the information we had; and then we took the precaution, as I have already stated, to advise the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that that subject should be examined with reference to providing some place for the removal of these documents and records in harmony with the views of the Secretary of the Interior; and the amendment now under consideration proposed by him is the result, I understand, of that movement.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask the chairman how much annually is paid for the rent of the Seaton House? I see $10,000 is appropriated for the use of the Pension Office and the Bureau of Education.

Mr. SARGENT. The communication of the Secretary of the Interior states that the rent proper of the Seaton House is $10,000; for the upper floors of the building adjoining on the west, used for the same purpose, $2,500; for the building on the east, $1,500; and then for necessary repairs, $2,000; making $16,000. Of course a new building would get rid of the repairs.

Mr. WHYTE. The appropriation is only $10,000.

Mr. SARGENT. I know. It was put in because we had not the specific information and could not get it. In addition to the rent, I understand that the heating of it costs $4,000 or $5,000, and that item and the running the elevator are included within the payment proposed for this new building; and that being done, we are able to assent to the reduction which the House propose of $5,000 in the general appropriation for fuel and lights; so that the difference is really $1,000 in favor of the Government instead of there being an additional expense.

Mr. WHYTE. Except that it will cost $10,000 to remove the Pension office to the new building.

Mr. SARGENT. It will cost that to remove it anywhere.

Mr. WHYTE. Making an appropriation of $30,000 for the first year for the Shepherd building.

Mr. WITHERS. The report of the Commissioner says:

> The four years' lease under which the building has been held expired on the 10th day of August last, and it is now retained under a condition of the lease which provides for further occupancy from year to year, as may be necessary, at the same yearly rental ($10,000) as is therein provided. The adjacent buildings, rented by the Department at an annual rental of $4,000, in order to supply the demand for necessary space, are open to the same objection as the Seaton House. Effort was made before the expiration of the four years to rent a more suitable building, but none fire-proof and of sufficient capacity could be secured. It is earnestly desired that Congress be again urged to provide for a building better adapted for the purposes of a public office.

That is the closing part of the report, the preceding portion of it dwelling especially on the unfitness of the present building for the purposes for which it is occupied and the want of safety of the documents therein stored.

Mr. WHYTE. The question now pending immediately before the Senate is not the question, as I understand, in regard to the removal to the Shepherd building, but the question pending is merely to correct the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EATON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not desire to protract this debate, for I think it is exceedingly important that we get through with this bill to-day. I do desire, however, to say a single word in reply to the Senator from Texas, [Mr. HAMILTON.]

That this matter has had the constant attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for a series of years, that we have fully understood the condition of affairs in which the public archives in relation to pensions have been placed, is undoubtedly true; and I may say that it is out of no favor to anybody that we propose to hire this building. I have not seen the proprietor. I have endeavored to have the Commissioner of Pensions obtain some other building, not in so prominent a position, where the rental would be less; and to find a fire-proof building with sufficient amount of accommodations he has ascertained to be impossible except in this direction. I think there are no public archives the destruction of which would bring a greater disaster on the Government than those of the Pension Office.

This is a matter that concerns every Senator as much as it concerns me. I only present the case as it has been submitted by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of Pensions.

I hope that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will not be adopted, but that the one which has been proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be.

Mr. WHYTE. Let the pending amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations by striking out the proviso and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That if the owners of the Seaton House shall refuse to make their building fire-proof, and the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations, with privilege of occupying the same as long as it may be needed for the uses of the Pension Office for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House.

Mr. HAMILTON. I hope that amendment will be adopted. I think it is proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which has just been read.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope that for a year at least we shall remain where we are and make no change. It has been indicated here that it will cost $10,000 to make a change, and a temporary change would certainly be very unwise. There are buildings in this city that probably the Government will become possessed of after a little while—the Freedman's Bank building for example; and I think there is some indication in some quarters that we shall have the Potomac Railroad building on our hands before a great many years. These buildings can be fitted up when owned by the Government and used by it for this purpose without the great expense which will be entailed by getting a twenty-thousand-dollar building or any building of that character belonging to a private citizen.

If this amendment is not adopted, I shall move to strike out the whole proviso, and for the present leave the Pension Office just where it is under the yearly rent that the Government is now obligated to pay. But two or three months only of the year have been consumed and we shall be in for three-quarters of a year at least; and therefore I think it better that the subject should remain open until the next meeting of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "for," in the first line of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, and to insert:

Rental of the basement and five upper stories of the fire-proof building, and of heating the same, on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue, if the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

For the expenses of removal of the office from the Seaton House and expense of fitting up the rooms of the new office, $10,000.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to reduce the item of $10,000 for removal to $7,500. I think they can do it for that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I shall make no opposition to that.

Mr. SARGENT. And add there "or so much thereof as may be necessary." I believe that this removal can be made for $5,000. There are more rooms, and I believe additional cases will have to be had, and perhaps the accommodation that will be furnished will enable them to make a better arrangement of their records so as to be more accessible, and thus facilitate work, which will cost something. In conversation with the Secretary of the Interior on the matter, my recollection is that he stated that the removal and fitting up could be done for $5,000. In deference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who say that it will cost $10,000, I am somewhat indisposed to reduce it to the amount of $5,000; but certainly $7,500 ought to be enough.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say to the Senator from California that it is understood there will be additional desks required for the accommodation of some of the clerks and to fit up some of the rooms.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt of that; but $5,000 ought to go a great way, and they ought not to be fitted up very luxuriously simply for every-day working purposes. I am not entirely sure that the Senator had not better assent to have the amount of $10,000 made "$5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I shall make no opposition. I shall leave it to the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I modify my amendment so as to say "$5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. NORWOOD. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Vermont if he has ever had any estimate made and submitted to his committee as to what it would cost to put up a building at the expense of the Government that would accommodate the Pension and Education Bureaus?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will state to the Senator that when it was proposed here two or three years ago to extend the City Hall building on Judiciary Square it was estimated then that a sufficient amount of accommodation could be obtained for both the purposes indicated by the Senator from Georgia at an expense of about $160,000. That building, being a very plain brick building, could have been extended; but the proposition was rejected, and I think mainly for the reason that there was some idea on the part of some members of this House or the other that the square might be wanted for other purposes, for a library or something of that sort.

Mr. NORWOOD. To my mind it is evident that it would be very poor economy on the part of the Government to rent this building. It is proposed to pay $20,000 for a portion of the building, which is the interest at 7 per cent. on nearly $300,000, and yet the Government can put up a building which will accommodate these Bureaus for $160,000. I submit that that is very poor economy, and I shall therefore vote against the proposition of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. SARGENT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. In order that the Senate may understand what the question is that is pending, I will ask if the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has not been voted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has, and been rejected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. And now the only amendment pending is to strike out what is reported in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as modified upon the suggestion of the Senator from California.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the amendment reported, as I was out at the time it was offered, in order to see what it is that we are to vote upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the clause reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and to insert in lieu thereof:

For rental of the basement and five upper stories of the fire-proof building, and of heating the same, on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue, if the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

For expenses of removal of the office from the Seaton House, and expense of fitting up the rooms of the new office, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to strike out the restriction as to the amount, so as to leave it to be fixed by Mr. Shepherd. We might just as well do that, for it will come to that anyhow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to strike out all the restrictions and allow the Secretary of the Interior to rent the Shepherd building at his discretion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the pending amendment by striking out the words in the first clause:

If the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

So that, if amended, the clause will read:

For rental of the basement and five upper stories of the fire-proof building, and of heating the same, on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suppose that the Senator from Texas has had his joke and that is all he wants. Of course the amendment that he proposes does not apply to the amendment that is pending; and, besides, if it did apply, it is out of order because it would be an amendment in the first degree.

Mr. HAMILTON. The point I wanted to make was that, while this seems to be a new thing just conceived in order to see whether terms can be made with the proprietor of the building contemplated, I for one believe that the terms have been understood a long time ago. The house has been built, I think, for this express purpose, and with the tacit understanding on the part of those who would have the management and control of it that Mr. Shepherd was to rent the building to the Government as soon as it was finished at whatever figure he might fix.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The words "if the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior" were merely inserted for this purpose, and no other. It was understood that there was an elevator in the building, that was to be run, and the Commissioner of Pensions informed the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that it was to be run at the expense of the proprietor of the building. I suggested to him that the terms ought to be obtained from him in writing, so that there could be no contingency about it whatever. That was the sole purpose of putting in this provision.

Mr. HAMILTON. The experience we have had in transactions with Mr. Shepherd for the last four or five years is that he is not bound by anything, but has matters settled according to his own interest.

Mr. WHYTE. I agree with the Senator from Texas. I think we have had enough experience with Mr. Shepherd in the District of Columbia to satisfy the Government and the people of the United States; and I hope to-day that the Senate will not direct the Pension Office to be removed to any building belonging to Governor Shepherd, whether right or wrong.

Such rent as is contemplated to be given for this building might induce every man to go into the speculation of building houses to rent to the Government of the United States. Here is a building on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue, the upper floors and the basement of which (without touching the floor that will yield the largest rental, the floor upon the level of the street) are to cost the Government of the United States $20,000 a year—a building that, probably, did not cost $150,000 to erect. This will leave the entire lower floor to its owner and proprietor to rent it at high rents upon the Avenue and upon Twelfth street. The Government is to be saddled with the rest of the building, and we are asked to take the Pension Office from the Seaton House, where we are now under rent and bound to remain for three-quarters of the year, and put it into this building of Mr. Shepherd. We are asked also to remove the furniture and fit the building up for the use of the United States at the expense of the United States. Mr. Shepherd could well afford to expend $10,000 in fitting up the building for the use of the United States with such a tenant at such a price. I hope the Senate of the United States will not vote to remove the Pension Office to his building.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been unfortunately out of the Senate Chamber while this discussion has been going on, and only know by information what the precise nature of the question now before the Senate is. I am no partisan or advocate of Mr. Shepherd. At the same time, I am, so far as I know, not his enemy; and I do not understand why the sentiment of any individual Senator or of the Senate collectively, or of any considerable number of citizens with regard to Mr. Shepherd, should have any influence whatever upon the determination of this question.

As the chairman of the Committee on Pensions in this body, my attention has heretofore been repeatedly called to the condition of the building in which this business is now conducted and where the most important portion of its records are stored and kept. I venture to say that, if with the consent of the Senate the business of that Bureau is longer conducted in the Seaton House, it is, in my judgment, but very little short of criminal negligence. The building was illy constructed even for the purposes for which it was originally employed. Six or seven stories in height, without any fire-walls or subdivisions in the interior, the partitions constructed of pine now rendered in the highest degree inflammable by the long period of time during which it has been subjected to artificial heat, with tortuous passages, with insufficient means of egress and exit, it is scarcely possible that there could even be an alarm of fire which would not result, not only in the injury and mutilation and loss of the records, but also in the destruction of human life. I say that if those Senators who are now opposing the provision that I understand is pending before the Senate would take the trouble to examine that building and advise themselves of the value to this Government of the records that are kept therein, they would consider the sum of $20,000 or $25,000 or of $30,000 annual rental in a safe building very profitably expended.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me a moment?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would inquire why it was that the Government did not look into the condition of the Seaton House building when they rented it in the first place?

Mr. INGALLS. I understand it was Hobson's choice at that time; that there was an absolute necessity for some arrangements being made for accommodations for the Pension Bureau. In consequence of the operations of the late war and the demands upon the Government resulting therefrom, the pension-list has expanded from a little over $1,000,000 to very nearly $30,000,000 per annum. There are upon the pension-rolls at the present time something like 270,000 or 280,000 pensioners; and, remaining unadjusted, are more than 60,000 additional claims. I do not know the exact number of employés who are continually occupied in the adjustment of the affairs of the Pension Office; but I venture to say that, if there should be any destruction of its records and of the testimony upon which a very large proportion of these claims are founded, the loss to the Government and to individuals would be absolutely irreparable. They could not be supplied from any other source whatever.

I sincerely hope, therefore, that there will be no opposition to some change from the present quarters to a location that would be reasonably secure, upon the ground that the premises to which the location may be changed are obnoxious, in a moral or political sense, to any individual member of the Senate. It seems to me that would be a very poor foundation for action in a matter so important and grave as this.

Mr. DORSEY. Before the Senator sits down, I should like to inquire what the Government now pays for the Seaton House?

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that the expenses of renting and heating the premises occupied by the Pension Bureau now aggregate about $16,000 annually.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Independent of the heating.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Maine corrects me. He says that the expenses are $16,000 annually, independent of the heating; that is an additional expense.

Mr. MAXEY. Conceding as true all that the Senator from Kansas says in regard to the Seaton House building, does it follow that the Senate should appropriate $20,000 for the rent of the Shepherd building? It appears from what has been said that the Shepherd building cost about $300,000. Six per cent. interest on that would be $18,000. It is proposed to pay rent on the entire investment of $300,000 at the rate of 6 per cent. for the basement and upper stories, leaving $2,000 over to go toward insurance and taxes, with the entire use of the street floor for Mr. Shepherd. It occurs to me that that is not very wise economy. Second, it appears to me we might construct a building on our public grounds amply adapted for the purpose for $160,000; and at 6 per cent. the interest would be $9,600. At the end of eight years, by saving $20,000 a year rental on the Shepherd building, the entire $160,000 for that building would be paid; but if we go on renting the building, at the end of eight years we shall be no better off than we are now, but with $160,000 expended for rent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will state to my honorable friend that the amount paid for the Seaton House and for accommodations elsewhere and for heating, which are all included in the proposition for this building, commonly called the Shepherd building, would make it equal to the sum now paid for the present accommodations, as I have been informed.

Mr. MAXEY. The United States Government owns public grounds here, and I see no more reason why there should be these large rents paid for governmental buildings for the Pension Office than for the Treasury, the Attorney-General's Office, the State Department, or this very Capitol. If the United States Government wants to control its own pension records, and if they are as important as Senators say they are, then let the Government put up a suitable building upon its own ground and own that building, making it fire-proof, and having it for all time, without the necessity of endangering the records or the necessity of paying $10,000, as has been proposed, to remove the records from one temporarily rented place to another temporarily rented place. The whole policy seems to me to be wrong.

Mr. NORWOOD. The Senator from Kansas said he was unfortunately out of the Chamber when this question came up. He spoke about Mr. Shepherd; and he did not understand why there should be any opposition upon a personal ground to Mr. Shepherd.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I said no such thing.

Mr. NORWOOD. I retract it; but I understood that to be the Senator's drift.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; that is entirely a misapprehension.

Mr. NORWOOD. I retract it entirely. I was going on to say that if the Senator had been in the Chamber he would have found that the opposition to this amendment is based upon the financial view of the question so far as I am concerned and others around me who have spoken. I stated to the Senate that the rental proposed to be paid here to Mr. Shepherd was equal to 7 per cent. on nearly $300,000. That is the ground of my opposition.

The honorable Senator said that when the Government went into the Seaton building it was "Hobson's choice," and that it would be criminal to remain there. I do not suppose that that building has deteriorated very much in the last four years. I do not suppose it is much more criminal to remain there now than it was to go in there, nor do I suppose that the danger has been very much enhanced lately. It seems that just in proportion as this magnificent property on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue has risen toward the heavens the Seaton building has been deteriorated in the same proportion; and it has been suddenly ascertained that it is not only dangerous, but, as the Senator from Kansas now says, absolutely criminal, for the Government to remain in the Seaton building any longer. The Senator says when the Government went in there it was "Hobson's choice." The difference between the Government and Hobson is this: that Hobson had to take that horse or take none, because Hobson could not make a horse; but the Government can make a building, and it could have made a building when it went into the Seaton House. It can make one now, and at a far less cost, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] has shown, than to hire this building at even $10,000 a year.

If it is in order now, as a matter of economy, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, by striking out $20,000 and inserting $10,000. I do it for the reason that at that rate Mr. Shepherd would receive on nearly $100,000 7 per cent. on his investment.

Mr. INGALLS. My opposition to the continuance of the Pension Bureau in the Seaton House is not of recent origin. When the site of the Shepherd building on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue was occupied by the Kirkwood House, and long before the title had passed, so far as I know, to the present owner of the property, I called the attention of the Senate repeatedly when the appropriation bills were up, to the condition of the public records of the Pension Office, and the danger to which they were exposed.

I am in favor of the construction of a building for the transaction of the business of the Pension Bureau. It has reached dimensions that in my opinion require such action; but in the mean time what shall be done? Shall the public business still be exposed to the detriment resulting from the condition of those premises? The majority of the Senate may not know that in order to facilitate the removal of the records in case of an alarm of fire, at the suggestion of myself and other Senators, trucks have been constructed, cases upon wheels, and placed in a lower portion of the building, upon which the records have been placed, in order that they may be instantaneously removed in case of danger or alarm of fire.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I desire to state that it is with me a national question. I have nothing to do with Mr. Shepherd; I do not know him; but it is a national question. I would ask, if it be true, as stated, that this building cost $300,000, and that we get only the use of the basement story and the upper stories, and he gets the use of the street-floor, is not $20,000 too large a rent to pay on an investment of that amount of money?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not think that $50,000 a year, until a building could be constructed, would be too much for the Government to expend to insure the safety of those records and the lives of its employés. That is my opinion.

Mr. BOGY. The question is how much he ought to receive.

Mr. INGALLS. I am not called upon to consider whether that rent would be extortionate and unjust or whether it would be too small for those premises. The place where the business is at present conducted is absolutely dangerous not only to property but to human life, and it is a matter of indifference what the Government pays temporarily, so that premises can be secured where that business can be safely and properly conducted.

Mr. MAXEY. Then why limit the Secretary in the amount of rental or in the selection of a house?

Mr. INGALLS. That is not a motion of mine. I am not in favor of limiting the price or of specifying the location. If there is any better place that can be selected, or any lower rent that can be paid, to secure the results that I believe the Government ought to obtain, then I shall be entirely satisfied if the committee secure those premises or pay that rent.

As I was going on to say, at my suggestion movable trucks or cases upon wheels have been constructed and placed upon the street-floor of the Seaton House, upon which, so far as possible, the records have been loaded, to the very great inconvenience of the transaction of the daily business there, in order that they may be removed out of the building upon the first alarm of fire that may be given. In addition to that, temporary pipes have been conducted into the different stories of the building for the purpose of flooding every floor with water as soon as any alarm may be given. The inevitable result of that would be, if the records were not destoyed by fire, they would be so injured by water that the loss to the Government and to the officers and to the dependents would be very nearly the same.

As I have said before, the method of escape and of egress from that building are such that in case of an alarm it would be inevitable that loss of life would ensue. The several hundred employés who are engaged constantly in that building would not be able to find means of escape through the doors, but would necessarily be compelled to jump from the windows; and I think that, no matter even if an alarm of fire should be given that was merely mischievous, wanton, or unintentional, the loss to this Government would be a great deal more than twenty or fifty or a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Kansas should also state that the whole of this amount is not for rental, but that it is for heating as well, that costing something like $4,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Just one word. I think the discussion discloses that the records at the present time are in a very unsafe and insecure position and that the Senate ought to do something for their security. Precisely what, I do not know; nor did the Committee on Appropriations understand; nor did they deem it worth while to inform themselves particularly, because it lay outside of what might fairly be expected of them. But they did charge it, as I have said, upon a committee of the body whose business it was to examine into the matter. I understand that committee to say to the Senate that some arrangement ought to be made by which the records shall be put in a more secure place. Of course none of us will care one fig as to the personnel of this question. We want the public accommodated. The chairman of the committee says that he has found a place, and he designates it. It has been suggested by other Senators—how much they know upon the subject I do not know—that other places may be found equally convenient and equally safe. Therefore the suggestion has been made whether it is worth while to confine it to any particular place.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say to the Senator from Maine that the committee of the other House first ascertained and selected this building, and, as I understand from the Commissioner of Pensions, the committee of the other House were in favor of renting this building.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether the committee of the Senate acted in concurrence with the committee of the House on this subject?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have not conferred with that committee; but we so understood by the information received from the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would suggest, then, on the whole, to the Senator from Vermont that, if there be objection to the limitation to this particular place, he give such latitude to his proposition as that the Secretary of the Interior may select that or some other building, if he can find another building that will answer the purposes of the Government as well. It seems to me that we ought not to divide in a case of this kind, so clearly involving the public service and the safety of public records, and perhaps human life, upon a simple question personal to anybody either inside or outside the Senate. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont whether he cannot modify his proposition so as to leave it discretionary as to the selection of a proper building.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I should not be at liberty to modify it, because it is the action of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; but I have no objection to the Senator proposing any amendment he sees fit.

Mr. WITHERS. I will suggest to the Senator from Vermont an amendment, which I should like to see substituted for the one pending, if it would be agreeable to him and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I think there is a great deal in the suggestion which has been made not to restrict the provision for rental to the particular building named, inasmuch as it has been suggested that other buildings equally suitable for the purposes might be procured and possibly at a less rental.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I shall make no opposition to such a proposition.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state, in connection with the amendment which I am going to suggest to that proposed by the committee—and I believe it has been mentioned previously—that the sum of $10,000, which is in the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, was fixed without any adequate or accurate knowledge on the part of the committee as to the amount of annual rental now being paid for the Seaton building and other buildings similarly used; it was merely put in in order to await further and more accurate information. That information now having been procured, and it appearing that the amount of $16,000 is now being paid for the buildings at present occupied by the Pension Bureau, I move that the word "ten" in the amendment of the committee be stricken out and "sixteen" substituted, and that the amendment be so amended as to read:

Provided, That, if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House and other buildings occupied by the Pension Bureau, he shall rent the same, instead of the Seaton House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I would suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he amend the proposition proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds by striking out after the words "rental of" the words "of the basement and five upper stories;" so as to read:

For the rental of a suitable fire-proof building, and heating the same, if the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is not exactly the same. The Senator will perceive that would leave it entirely at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. My feeling about it is—and that I find is shared by a great many other Senators—that I am willing to have a change made to some other location, if a fire-proof building can be procured without any very large increase of cost. I want to restrict the expense of such a building to about the amount that is now being paid for buildings which are manifestly unsuitable for the purposes for which they are occupied and which are admitted to be unsuitable.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator has not understood my previous explanation that the whole amount paid for the rental and for the use of the Pension Bureau, including the Seaton House and other buildings and the cost of heating the same, amounts to a sum equal to that proposed by the amendment offered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WITHERS. According to my understanding, it does not amount to so much.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I so understand it. The Senator will also see that it would be impossible for the Secretary to obtain this building on the terms proposed by him, and there may not be any other suitable.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator from Virginia be kind enough to repeat his amendment? I do not understand distinctly whether he intends to include heating or not or whether he intends to appropriate $16,000 for rent. If he does not include heating, then it will accomplish the purpose that the Senator from Vermont wants, and bring the Shepherd building, if necessary, within the purposes of the amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. I supposed that the amendment which I suggested was simply the amendment of the committee, except varying the amount and giving the privilege of renting other buildings at the same price. I presumed the amount appropriated for the rental of the Seaton building included the heating of that building.

Mr. INGALLS. No, it does not include the heating.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the Government heats it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Government heats it.

Mr. WITHERS. The same proposition would apply just as well to any other building rented by the Government for the same purpose. It is very manifest to any one who has any cognizance of the facts of the case that it is exceedingly desirable to secure the removal of the records of the Pension Office from their present location in the Seaton building. I will guarantee, if the Senator from Maryland or any other Senator will go there and make an inspection of the premises and see the condition of the files which are there stowed away and the manifest and irretrievable injury which must result in case of an alarm of fire or actual fire, he will recognize that necessity as being one of overpowering magnitude. So far from its being recently that the necessity has been discovered, you will find by a reference to the official reports of the Commissioner of Pensions for some years past—two or three years at any rate—that this fact has been brought forward. In each successive report the attention of Congress has been called to the insecure condition of the records in that building and the manifest necessity which requires that some other provision should be made for their preservation. Therefore it is no new thing. I am, however, fully willing to admit the force of the suggestion made by various Senators as to the policy of not restricting the Secretary of the Interior in his choice of a building to this particular designated building at the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue; and that we should give him the largest liberty of selection. If he can go into the market here and find other fire-proof buildings suitable for the accommodation of this Bureau, let him have the privilege of renting those buildings, provided the rental does not exceed the amount heretofore paid or something in the neighborhood thereof.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to the Senator that he offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. WITHERS. To meet the objection made by several Senators, I will move to substitute for the amendment of the committee the following:

For the r. ntal of a suitable fire-proof building and heating the same, if the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

This includes the cost of removal. All will see that that is a necessary expense, which must be encountered if any other building is selected than the one now proposed. We are bound to make some appropriation to secure the removal of the archives now stored in the Seaton building. I concur fully with the Senator from California in believing that the estimate of $10,000 originally made is far too great for such removal, although, as he suggested, it includes also the furnishing of this new building. I take it for granted that there are desks already used in the Seaton House which could be used in the new building to which they remove these archives, and there would not be much additional expense for furniture. Therefore, the only expense to be encountered would be the actual expense of handling and removing and restoring the archives of the Bureau.

Mr. NORWOOD. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Virginia. I understood him to say that his amendment would appropriate $20,000 to cover rental and the expense of removal. It seems to me the amendment ought to specify the amount of rent and the amount of expense for removing; otherwise, how do you ascertain the respective amounts?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. There is a proposition to appropriate $10,000 for the removal and fitting up the rooms, which follows the first proposition.

Mr. WITHERS. That is a question which does not affect the principle involved at all. I am not authorized to speak for the Committee on Appropriations, but so far as I am concerned I should be perfectly willing to take this sum from the cost of rental and specify a certain amount for the removal, if that would relieve the difficulty in the mind of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. So far as I have the power, I accept the modification proposed by the Senator from Virginia to the first proposition, of course leaving the other proposition in relation to removal for separate consideration.

Mr. NORWOOD. I intended to move to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$10,000," but if the expense of removing to that building, with the rent of it, is to be covered by $20,000, which of course is for but one year, I shall not make that motion. That is the way I understand the proposition of the Senator from Virginia. I should prefer to erect a building at a much less expense than would be the cost of continuing to pay this rent.

Mr. WHYTE. It occurs to me that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is not as good as the proposition made by the Senator from Vermont. I would much rather vote squarely on the building at the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue. We have been told by some Senators that there is no other building in the city that will suit the purposes of the Pension Office, and rather than leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the selection of a building, for one, I would prefer to vote squarely on the building at the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

We are told, and certainly any of us who have any small property know that the fact is true as stated, that rents are coming down everywhere; but according to the Shepherd rule, it seems they are going up. We are going now from the Seaton House, which with the adjacent buildings costs in all to the Government but $16,000, to Shepherd's building or some other building at $20,000. That is the theory upon which we are about to act. We are going out of a building which we are paying only $16,000 for, and going into a building at $20,000 a year.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the Senator omits the consideration of the heating of the building, which is in addition to the $16,000 that the Government now pays.

Mr. WHYTE. Has there not been a provision already inserted in the bill for the heating?

Mr. SARGENT. No; not yet.

Mr. WHYTE. There is a clause in the bill in regard to heating.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, there is; the next clause.

Mr. SARGENT. The estimates are $20,000, and it is cut down to $15,000; but if you make provision for the heating you have got to add $4,000 or $5,000 to that $15,000.

Mr. WHYTE. Does the Senator from California say that the House of Representatives made no provision whatever for heating the Seaton building?

Mr. SARGENT. I say not merely that, but I say they made no provision for the rental of that or any adjoining building.

Mr. WHYTE. No provision was made therefor?

Mr. SARGENT. There is no provision whatever in the bill, even for the buildings themselves. It is left a perfect blank, so that at the end of this fiscal year, even if the appropriation bill should pass as it comes from the House, there would be not a dollar to pay for the rent or heating of the Seaton House.

Mr. WHYTE. No provision for the other buildings adjoining the Seaton House?

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. WHYTE. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that all the other buildings were provided for, and therefore but $10,000 was required to pay for the rent of the buildings used by the Pension Office.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know how the Senator from Maine may have explained it, or how the Senator from Maryland may have understood it. I merely speak of that which I know. There are buildings provided here for the War Department and some other Bureaus, but there is no provision in the bill whatever for the Seaton House or for rental.

Mr. WHYTE. For the Seaton House proper I understand there is no provision, and therefore you provide $10,000 for that purpose.

Mr. SARGENT. We simply ascertained the omission, in the absence of an opportunity at once to consult with the Secretary of the Interior, and wishing to report the bill that morning we put in a provisional statement as it now stands in the bill. Subsequently we obtained the facts from the Secretary of the Interior and now desire to modify the bill in accordance with those facts stated.

Mr. WHYTE. But the Committee on Appropriations had made no proposition to modify the bill, as I understand, beyond this amendment which they offered.

Mr. SARGENT. Because the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom they referred the matter, out of abundant caution to get still further information brought forward their own proposition. I had myself in my hand an amendment which I prepared, covering this proposition, but in another way. I, however, assented to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as it came from another committee, and would probably accomplish the same result.

Mr. WHYTE. I understand precisely that the Senator from Vermont has made a new proposition; but I do understand also, unless the Senator from California corrects me, that the Committee on Appropriations have provided for the buildings as they now exist; that if this appropriation bill passes with the amendment as it came from the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, provision is made for all the buildings which the Government is under rental for at this present time.

Mr. SARGENT. Not at all; the Senator is in error there, and I am unfortunate that I cannot make him understand what I desire to convey. We provided:

For rent of buildings for use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $10,000.

It is insufficient by $6,000. We did not know the amount of the rent paid, and we put in a proviso:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations, for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House.

We discussed the question of this insufficiency of the building; the great danger of loss of these valuable records; the distress occasioned from destroying the evidence of the rights of widows and orphans; and the consequence of destroying valuable vouchers on which the Government rests against duplicate payments. All that was discussed, and we put the proposition in this form, somewhat hastily, because we did not have time then to ascertain the facts. I should have proposed an amendment, which the Senator will see contains at least the germ of the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, in this form:

For rent of buildings for use of the Pension Office and Bureau of Education, $16,000: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House and adjacent buildings, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House and such buildings; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the cost of fitting up and removing to such fire-proof building.

That would have necessitated another amendment in the clause immediately above, changing the amount for fuel to $20,000 instead of $15,000, which would have been the complete proposition of the Senator from Vermont, except that his mentions a particular building. I did not desire to mention any particular building. I wanted the Secretary of the Interior to look about and see if there were other buildings, consider the proposition of Mr. Scott if he has a building on Pennsylvania avenue to rent to the Government, or any other proposition by anybody whatever, leaving it indefinite.

Mr. WHYTE. Then, as I understand it, the bill as it came from the Committee on Appropriations was $6,000 and $5,000—$11,000 short of the actual requirements of the Government. Do I understand the member of the Committee on Appropriations to say that?

Mr. SARGENT. Unquestionably I say that. I stated as distinctly as I could that when we reached that portion of the bill we found that there was an entire blank in the bill, and as we wished to report the bill that morning, we put this in so as to retain jurisdiction, and immediately and properly sought information from the right quarters, and referred it also to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WHYTE. The stronger reason, then, that there should be some information on this subject; the stronger reason that before we make any change or any removal from the Seaton House we should have more information as to the actual wants of the Government and the actual expenses to which the people should be subjected for the use of the Pension Office. I hope therefore that the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will stand as it is, only the amount being altered and the proviso stricken out, and that we shall remain at the Seaton House until the next session of Congress; and that in the mean time proper examination, proper inquiry, may be made to see at what cost the Government may either purchase or erect a building for the purposes of the Government, and not be subjected to this constant renting and moving from place to place at the great expense entailed in such removal.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the Senator from California and the Senator from Maryland each of them to think and to state that there was no provision in the bill as it now stood for heating and fuel.

Mr. WHYTE. No; I said there was.

Mr. DAVIS. Where do you find it?

Mr. WHYTE. Right in the next clause.

Mr. SARGENT. There is no provision for heating the Seaton House except the general appropriation for the whole Department.

Mr. DAVIS. There is following this clause a provision for fuel, &c., $15,000; but that, it will be noticed, is general for the Department.

Mr. WHYTE. Allow me to correct the Senator. I found it in the Pension Office clause. There is where I had seen it. There is a provision for "fuel" in the Pension Office and "repairs of building," &c., $10,500. There is where I see it.

Mr. DAVIS. That is just what I was going to call attention to. It will be found in this bill further on that we have provided for lighting and fuel, &c., of the Pension Office. What is the Pension Office? The Seaton House; and therefore we have provided for fuel and lighting, &c., of the Seaton House.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator be good enough to point out that?

Mr. DAVIS. On page 74, lines 1806 and 1807, there is a provision already, further on in the bill, for fuel, so that point is provided for let the Pension Office go to whatever building it may. It is not necessary here to consider the heating.

Mr. SARGENT. I see there is a very large number of items mentioned here, and there are quite a number of buildings.

For fuel, gas, engraving and retouching plates; for bounty-land warrants, printing and binding the same, engraving and printing pension certificates; for repairs of building; and for other necessary expenses of the Office, including two daily newspapers, $10,500.

Does the Senator understand that all these items are included under that appropriation?

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that it includes heating.

Mr. SARGENT. I am not sure that the Senator is not correct.

Mr. WHYTE. There is $5,000 for furniture just above there.

Mr. DAVIS. As the Senator from California will recollect, $5,000 for carpets, repairs, &c., was put in from the fact that it was represented that certain repairs were necessary, let the Pension Office be where it would, even if it remained in the Seaton House, because repairs are going on there now. I was there some time ago and repairs were going on. If, however, the Pension Office is removed to some other building, then the $5,000, as well as the $10,500 on the seventy-fourth page, will be used in whatever building the Pension Office may be. Therefore, in deciding the question upon the rent of the building which we are now considering, the furniture and the heating ought not to be taken into consideration, or we ought to strike out that appropriation on page 74 when we get to it.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator has overlooked that part of this appropriation is designed not for the Seaton House alone, but for the Patent Office building, several of the rooms in which are occupied by the Pension Bureau, and the Pension Bureau consequently has to pay expense in both buildings.

Mr. SARGENT. My impression is, however, that the general appropriation inures to the Interior Department. The $15,000 would cover that. I presume my friend from West Virginia is substantially correct.

Mr. DAVIS. My information is that the Patent Office and the Seaton House are entirely different buildings.

Mr. WITHERS. They are; but there are rooms in the Patent Office occupied by a portion of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly so.

Mr. INGALLS. They have lately been removed.

Mr. DAVIS. However, the $15,000 is for the Patent Office and other things in the Interior Department; the $10,500 is for the Pension Office proper. Therefore when the Senator from Virginia has $20,000 in his amendment, I think it is too much. If he offers his amendment at all, I hope he will offer it not with a view of having the building heated, but will leave that item out of his calculation.

Mr. WITHERS. Sixteen thousand dollars will cover the amount now paid ont for rent, and I presume there will be no objection on the part of the Senate or any Senator to expending the $16,000 now expended for rent of the Pension Office in securing a fire-proof building, provided it can be done. If this will meet the views of the Senator from West Virginia, I am perfectly frank to say that I want to reduce as low as I can; but the sum of $16,000, which is now paid, may be appropriated, subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in renting a building for the purpose, if one can be had. Of course, if none can be had at that price, there will be no change in existing arrangements; but still it would be necessary to make an additional appropriation for the purpose of removing the archives of the Pension Office, if a different building shall be rented. That is an expense which must be encountered.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia, or any other Senator who may know, if there is any definite information of what we are now paying rent for the Seaton House?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It has been stated here. The Senator from California has stated it on authority.

Mr. DAVIS. That I should like to have understood; and I should wish to have a proviso inserted, that I hope the Senator from Virginia will provide for in the amendment he proposes to offer, "not exceeding the rent now paid."

Mr. WITHERS. That was exactly the form in which I presented it.

Mr. DAVIS. If that is so it would cover any objection that I might have.

Mr. WITHERS. I propose a rent not exceeding the sum now paid for the Seaton House and adjacent buildings.

Mr. MORTON. There is one consideration in this matter that has been alluded to which I think ought to be controlling, and that is the question of the safety of the public records. If those records should be destroyed a large portion of them could not be restored; money could not do it; and even if they could be restored it would be a very expensive business. I am told there are a great many records in the present building. They could not be got out in case of fire. It would be idle to think that. We are told it would be as much as the employés could do to get away in case of fire; and certainly the records could not be preserved and there would be a loss that money could not repair. Therefore they ought to be put into a building where they would be comparatively safe; and the question of expense in that connection is a subordinate consideration. The records of a county, of conveyances, of mortgages, when once destroyed, can hardly be restored anywhere perfectly. We know that the records of Chicago that were destroyed have not been restored, and never can be except to a limited extent. If these records are destroyed they cannot be restored at all a great part of them, and only imperfectly at best any of them. If this building is of the kind described by the Senator from Kansas it is a matter of the first importance to get these records into a safe building; and the question of $5,000 or $10,000 in the rent is a mere bagatelle. If it was in regard to county records or in regard to State records in our own States we would give due importance at once to these things.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I inquire what the question is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment was offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to strike out all after the word "for," in line 1705, to and including line 1710, and to insert other matter. To that proposition the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NORWOOD] moved an amendment striking out the word "twenty" and inserting "ten," and then an offer was made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] which was partially accepted by the Senator from Vermont, and the Chair is not quite able to say what is now before the Senate.

Mr. NORWOOD. I stated that I would withdraw my amendment in order to allow the Senator from Virginia to offer his.

Mr. WITHERS. I offer the proposition now in this form, to which I ask the attention of Senators:

For the rent of buildings for the use of the Pension Office and the Bureau of Education, $16,000: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House and adjacent buildings, he shall rent the same instead of said Seaton House and adjacent buildings; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the cost of fitting up and removal to such fire-proof building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator whether he intends to impose any limit on the period of time for which the rental of the new building may be taken?

Mr. WITHERS. The same period of time that now controls.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But would the amendment proposed by the Senator accomplish that? Would it not be a universal authority to rent for fifty years or any other time? I think it ought to be kept within the control of Congress in some way.

Mr. WEST. To meet that I will offer a proviso——

Mr. WITHERS. Let me reply to the interrogatory of the Senator from Vermont. I would suggest to him whether the mention of the Seaton House, with the substitution of one rental for the other, does not carry with it the same conditions which apply to the rental of the Seaton House now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it does, except as to the sum, the actual rental; and if it be the object, as I think it ought to be, to control the discretion of the Secretary to a limited period or to the discretion of Congress from time to time, it ought to be so stated.

Mr. WITHERS. I have certainly no objection to limiting it in any way that the judgment of the Senator may deem judicious.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest that it read, "for a term not exceeding four years."

Mr. WEST. I had foreseen that very difficulty, and according to the wording of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the amendment as now proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] it would be entirely discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior to lease those premises for any indefinite period that he saw proper; and I had prepared to perfect the amendment with the following, and if the Senator from Virginia will accept it, I think it will complete it better for the approbation of the Senate:

And that no lease of premises for the Pension Office exceeding the term of three years shall be entered into.

Applying to all the premises.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think it would be better that the Senator from Louisiana should propose that the lease might be terminated on giving one year's notice at any time. I should prefer that. I hardly think we shall want it for four years or three.

Mr. WITHERS. Either proposition would suit me; but it strikes me the latter proposition would be most judicious, because that would leave it in the power of the Secretary of the Interior at any time on giving a year's notice.

Mr. WEST. The Senator can word it now to suit himself, having received the suggestion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now let us come to a vote.

Mr. WITHERS. I am willing to accept the proviso of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] which seems to suit the views of the Senators around me, that the lease shall expire on twelve months' notice being given by the Secretary of the Interior at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Virginia send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. WITHERS. It is impossible to accommodate the views of everybody. Some prefer a term of years, but I will stand by the proviso as I have offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "for" in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Rent of buildings for the use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $16,000: Provided, That, if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodation for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House and adjacent buildings, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House and such adjacent buildings; and that any lease made for said building shall expire on twelve months' notice from the Secretary of the Interior; and that the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the cost of fitting up and removal to such fire-proof building.

Mr. STEVENSON. This is a matter of dollars and cents, and I should like to make an inquiry of some Senator who can give me the information. I should like to know what we pay now for the Seaton House, including the adjacent buildings, and then I should like to know how much it is expected to pay for this new building, including the $5,000 for the transfer.

My opinion is that all these rents are too high. I do not know why the Government should pay a great deal more than a private individual. That rule of rent must be exceedingly extravagant which enables a man to build a house and in six years get the entire cost back again. I think there are buildings besides these two which might be had, but I should prefer to keep these offices where they are because I am not willing that any man who builds a fire-proof building shall have it in his power to put his own price and exact from the Government a higher price than he would from an individual, on the ground that your archives are not safe where they are. You can put guards, which will answer all the objections of the Senator from Indiana. Three guards will guard the present building from fire. It has been guarded and it can be guarded again, and it is a great saving to the Government for us to keep these archives where they are and pay for guards to guard them rather than give an extortionate price to some gentleman who has a fire-proof building. I would as soon rent from Mr. Shepherd as anybody else if he would put his building down to a proper price. We had a very good building where the State Department archives were kept, and I do not think we paid more than $10,000 a year for that. It was in a retired part of the city, it is true, but I think was fully as large as is the Seaton House, though I may be mistaken as to that. If we can get a building which will answer our purpose, with a proper guard if it is not fire-proof, and save the cost of $5,000 for the transfer, I am in favor of that as the most economical and the best, and therefore I desire to know what would be the difference in cost between what we are paying now, including heating. The Senator from California, who is posted on that subject, can tell me.

Mr. SARGENT. I have said several times that I think the amounts are the same. The cost of the new building will be the same as the old.

Mr. STEVENSON. All the difference then would be $5,000 for the transfer?

Mr. WHYTE. And $12,000 for the three-quarters of a year that the Government is responsible for; $12,000 for the balance of this year.

Mr. STEVENSON. That would be $17,000. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. WITHERS. The lease expires on the 10th of August, according to the report of the Secretary.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to know, on the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, whether the Government is responsible, if we adopt this amendment, to pay three-quarters of a year's rent for the Seaton House. I only want light. I have no feeling about it. I only want to exercise a just economy on the part of the Government if I can. I pause for an answer from the Senator from Maryland to tell me the basis on which he supposes the Government will be responsible, in addition to the $5,000 for the removal and the rent of the new building, which, as I understand, will exceed $15,000. Now, if the Government is responsible for three-quarters of a year's rent at the Seaton House, it would be a great argument with me not to vote for this amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. I was under the impression, from some statements made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the lease expired about four months ago; but, so far from it, I am satisfied now that the Government will be responsible for a whole year, because it has given no notice that it intends to vacate on the 10th of August, and I take it for granted that the lease contains a clause in regard to notice; that the lessors of this building never could have allowed the Government to rent it from year to year and walk out any day the Government pleased to do so. Landlords are not in the habit of making such contracts. Now, if this lease expires on the 10th of August, and no notice has been given to the owners of this property, we shall have a whole year's rent to pay, which will be $16,000, and the $5,000 for removal in addition, making $21,000 thrown away.

Mr. WITHERS. I take it for granted from the report of the Secretary that there will be no twelve months' rent to pay from the fact that he reports here officially—

That the four-years' lease under which this building was held expired on the 10th of August last, and it is now retained under a condition of the lease which provides for further occupancy from year to year as may be necessary at the same yearly rental, $10,000, as is therein provided.

Consequently, the assumption to be drawn from this is that the first lease was for four years, the Government retaining the privilege of continuing its occupancy of the building from year to year at its option by paying the same rental; and therefore, if the year expires on the 10th of next August, if they make arrangements prior to that time to vacate the building, the rent will expire with the termination of the year.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is the lease there?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. Can any Senator tell me what the provisions of the lease are?

Mr. WITHERS. I cannot beyond what I have read from the report.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not think there is enough in what the Senator from Virginia has read to satisfy me to take the risk. Certainly this Senate ought not to run any risk of being liable to the owner of the Seaton House for a year's rent. As it is susceptible of clear demonstration, I should be glad to have this amendment passed over until we get the information.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state to my friend that an amendment was offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] this morning which I think by implication at least covers the whole ground, inasmuch as he offered an amendment which was in the interest of the proprietor of the Seaton House, in which he asked that he might be permitted to make such changes in his building as would render it suitable for occupancy, and complaining of the injustice done him by the Government occupying it for four or five years and then vacating it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, we have spent two hours on this question. It is one of those indefinite things that anybody can see there is no end to. We are none of us well enough informed to be accurate about it; and at any rate we have approached so near that it is like dividing a hair. I am entirely patient about this; but there must be an end to it, as Senators will see. I would not mind myself paying for the rent of this building for the next four years for the sake of settling this question, if I had the money. [Laughter.]

Now I beg Senators to let us take the vote on this question. We are not divided on any essential question. The real fact is, that we are paying as much money now for this old rickety building, utterly unsuitable as everybody agrees, as will be involved in the proposition before us. I say to the honorable Senator from Kentucky that his apprehension about paying $20,000 is not altogether well founded. It depends upon the discretion of the Department. Twenty thousand dollars is provided for the purpose of paying rent, or so much thereof as may be necessary in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior. The Senator was not in when the discussion began. The subject was referred by the Committee on Appropriations on examination, who saw that the rent of the building, together with the heating, probably amounts to $20,000, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

But now can we not take the vote on this proposition under these circumstances? I am entirely willing, and would be very glad, if the Senate would adopt the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, and let this matter pass from the Senate, and let us go on with the bill. We have been two hours on this single proposition.

Mr. HAMILTON. In regard to the liability to the proprietor of the Seaton place, I am informed that he will claim rent for three years. I do not know what sort of a contract he has with the Government, and so far as I can ascertain no other Senator on the floor knows. It is stated by some Senators that they do not think we are liable for more than a few months; others say one year; but the proprietor of the house says three years. Whether it be three months or three years, it ought to be ascertained definitely before any vote is taken on this amendment. We may have two houses to pay for.

We are reminded of the danger to human life when a fire breaks out in the Seaton House, whereas in the other building it will be absolutely secure. I happen to have noticed that fire-proof buildings burn very often; they burned in Chicago, in Boston, and wherever else there has been a fire, just as quickly as any other building; and they have nothing in that tall building to enable persons to get out except an elevator, and that is absolutely useless in case of fire. So I take it that the danger to human life and to the archives would be greater in that building in case of fire than in the Seaton House. Moreover, the proprietor of that house states that the whole expense to the Government during the time it has rented that building has only been $14,000 a year, instead of $16,000, including heating and all other expenses. He appears to be accurate about it, and he says also that the building at a very small expense can be made absolutely fire-proof. It is fire-proof now, I believe, with the exception of some wooden partitions that were put up in order to make it suitable for a hotel. They can be knocked out, and in a very short time the building, he says, can be made fire-proof.

Now we are asked to pay $20,000 a year for the new building, and $10,000, as is proposed by the Senator from Vermont, as I understand, to make the removal to it; and then the other contingent expenses provided for in the bill will make $112,000—$115,000 per annum for rent and contingent expenses alone. I think it is out of all character, considering the dullness of times, the great number of buildings that are empty in the city and that will remain empty until times improve, to engage on the part of the Government now to pay as much as $20,000 a year rent for a building, and possibly after all if you do not make a close contract you will have to heat it and do all the other things requisite to make it tenantable.

Mr. STEVENSON. As I said before, I have no feeling in this matter except to get a good building at the cheapest rate; but I say to my honorable friend from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that I am not prepared to vote on this proviso, because the Committee on Appropriations cannot give me the information which is essential, in my judgment, to a correct vote. I understand that the Government is a tenant from year to year of this building called the Seaton House. Every tenant from year to year, at least by the Kentucky law and I understand by the law of the District, is entitled to six months' notice to quit. You have not given the notice to quit; you have not the time requisite to give the legal notice between this and August; and if six months' notice to quit is essential, and without such notice the Government is bound to pay a year's rent, then I say we ought not to adopt this amendment. I understand the law in this District is that a tenant from year to year is entitled to six months' notice to quit; and, if you undertake to give the Secretary of the Interior this discretion, and he does rent a new building, you will be bound for another year's rent from the 10th of August next. There is no lawyer in this Chamber who will dispute this legal proposition, if the assumption which I make is true that the law of the District of Columbia requires six months' notice to quit to a tenant from year to year. That is the law in my State and usually the law in most agricultural States. In cities it is somewhat different.

Now, I say that my friend from Maine ought not to ask us to go blindly into a proposition until we have the necessary information; and he had better let this matter lie over until we can see the lease and know what the law is, and then we can act advisedly on what our liabilities are toward the owner of the Seaton House, who has rented this property to us from year to year, in consequence of our failure to give him six months' notice to quit. I should prefer to let it lie over, so that I may vote advisedly as to whether this discretion ought to be conferred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act of June 22, 1874, being a deficiency bill, provides in these words:

> And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building or part of any building in Washington, not now in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

That does not quite meet the case of the Seaton House, perhaps, for the reason that the building, at the passage of this act, was in use by the Government; and there may be, as the Senator from Texas says, a state of things which will leave us in liability to pay rent, for how long I do not know. That, of course, would depend upon the circumstances. But in respect of any new building like this one, there is no authority in the Secretary of the Interior or anybody else, without an express provision in advance by Congress to rent it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On that point I will state for the Senator's information—it may or may not have some connection with his remark—that it has been stated by the Senator's colleague, who examined the subject, that the lease of the Seaton House was first for four years, with the option on the part of the Government to continue the lease, which option the Government has not signified its intention to accept, and that the four years have expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is the exact fact, then it is a tenancy from year to year, and would require six months' notice to quit, on the general principles of law, as I understand. But then the question arises on this amendment as it stands whether under the act of 1874 this is an authority to rent any specific building; or is it designed to be a general repeal of the act of 1874? If it is, I am not in favor of it. If it is not, the question is whether, pursuing the act of 1874, you ought not to provide in this bill, if you intend to rent the property at the corner of Twelfth street and the Avenue, for authority for the Secretary to rent that building.

The abuses that it was intended to correct by the act of 1874 were those of leaving any discretionary authority in the head of a Department to rent any particular building until the eye of Congress had been brought to bear upon that identical piece of property and express provision been made for that property. The purpose apparently was to leave no discretion at all, because the pressure of public opinion is so great here that the best of Secretaries, in all ages and all administrations, have been considerably drawn in in these respects.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will perceive that is the identical proposition of his colleague.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not. Was it read?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. "For rental of the basement and five upper stories of the fire-proof building, and of heating the same, on the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will do it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But there is an amendment to that by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] to strike out these words and leave it discretionary to have that or any other building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was the amendment I had heard and to which my attention was drawn. Whether that is in accordance with the spirit of the act of 1874, I very much doubt, as it leaves a general discretion with the Secretary to rent any building he likes, not exceeding the up-set price that is named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) In order that the Senate may clearly apprehend the question to be voted upon, the Chair will state that the Committee on Appropriations reported to the pending bill an amendment, between lines 1705 and 1710, which has already been read. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] moved to amend by striking out the entire paragraph and substituting one which has already been reported. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] moves to amend by striking out a portion of the paragraph and inserting other words, by way of amendment to the text. The question therefore now will be upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, which the Clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to make the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations read:

> For rent of buildings for the use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $16,000: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House and adjacent buildings, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House and such adjacent buildings, and that any lease made for said building shall expire on twelve months' notice from the Secretary of the Interior. And the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the cost of fitting up and removal to such fire-proof building.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not accept the amendment of the Senator from Virginia; but I will take the liberty to modify my original amendment so as to read as follows:

> For rental of a suitable fire-proof building, and heating the same, and repairs, if the same can be obtained upon terms to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, terminable at any time upon one year's notice, $20,000.
>
> For the expenses of removal of the office from the Seaton House and expense of fitting up the rooms of the new office, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to my colleague to make the termination of this lease that he proposes nine months instead of twelve, because that would require a whole year's notice, and if a single day ran over, the right would be up, while nine months' notice after a current year has begun is amply sufficient for the lessor and would give the United States a certain leeway.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I accept the suggestion of my colleague.

Mr. WITHERS. I understand the question to be first on the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is not before the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that on referring again to the items which make up the $16,000 of the amount of rent now paid, I find that there was an error in the computation. Two thousand dollars of that sum is reported as an amount necessary for repairs, and the amount actually paid for rent of buildings now occupied by the Bureau consequently is $14,000. Inasmuch as I desired my amendment to conform to the amount now paid by the Pension Bureau, I will by general consent strike out "sixteen" and insert "fourteen;" so as to read:

> For rent of buildings for the use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $14,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will it be in order now for me to move my original proposition, as modified, as an amendment to that of the Senator from Virginia?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I would move it as an amendment to the Senator's proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will come up in its natural order after the pending question has been disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any amendment proposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is an amendment to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore in the second degree.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair is quite right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is an amendment to an amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now I raise a question of order both on the amendment offered by the committee and on the other amendment. The law read by the Senator from Vermont, and of which I had no notice until he read it, is:

And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building or any part of any building in Washington not now in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government, until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

That is the existing law. We have heard a great deal, especially from the chairman of this committee, about appropriation bills interfering with existing legislation. Here is an existing act forbidding any discretion in any officer of this Government to rent any building. Now, I say that this amendment is in direct conflict with existing law, and I submit it to the chairman of the committee and to the President of the Senate that both this amendment and the amendment to the amendment are in direct conflict with existing law, and therefore not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would rule as a question of order that in a legislative sense the amendments are both strictly within the province of the Senate. It is not a question of order that one law can undoubtedly be repealed by a subsequent law; but as a matter of legislative proceeding the amendments are both strictly in order. The Chair understands that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia has been modified by common consent by striking out "sixteen" and inserting "fourteen." The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I do not take too much time, I should like to have the Secretary read the amendment of the committee and then the amendment proposed to it, just as they now stand, so that we may see the precise sense and I may know which way to vote.

The CHIEF CLERK. The paragraph proposed to be inserted by the Committee on Appropriations is:

For rent of buildings for use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $10,000: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations, for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House.

It is proposed to amend that so as to read:

For rent of buildings for the use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $14,000: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations for a rent not exceeding that now paid for the Seaton House and adjacent buildings, he shall rent the same instead of the Seaton House and such adjacent buildings; and that any lease made for said building shall expire on twelve months' notice from the Secretary of the Interior. And the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the cost of fitting up and removal to such fire-proof building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia to make that notice nine months instead of twelve, which is long enough.

Mr. WITHERS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, it was declared that the affirmative appeared to prevail.

Mr. WHYTE called for a division.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We can divide in the Senate; let us go on now.

Mr. WHYTE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is agreed to. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] as a substitute for the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the General Land Office, in line 1726, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner from $3,600 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1727, to increase the appropriation for compensation of chief clerk from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1728, to increase the appropriation for compensation of recorder from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1729, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One clerk, $2,000; three principal clerks, at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1731, before the word "clerks," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1731, after the word "twenty," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1732, after the word "forty," to insert "four;" so as to read:

Forty-four clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1733, before the word "clerks," to strike out "eighty" and insert "sixty-one;" so as to read:

Sixty-one clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1734, to increase the appropriation for compensation of one draughtsman from $1,400 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1735, to increase the appropriation for compensation of assistant draughtsman from $1,200 to $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1736, before the word "assistant," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three assistant messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1736, before the word "laborers," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Seven laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1738, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the General Land Office from $211,380 to $214,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the word "dollars" in line 1739:

Also, for additional clerks, on account of military bounty-lands, namely: For one clerk of class three; four clerks of class two; thirty-five clerks of class one; and two laborers; in all, $50,640: Provided,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1753, after the word "office," to insert the words "for the actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate fraudulent land entries, trespasses on the public lands, and cases of official misconduct;" and in line 1757, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For diagrams, stationery, parchment-paper for land-patents, furniture and repairs of the same, miscellaneous items, including two of the city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the Office, for the actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate fraudulent land entries, trespasses on public lands, and cases of official misconduct, and for advertising and telegraphing, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 1760:

Indian Office:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; one stenographer, at $1,600; thirteen clerks of class two; thirteen clerks of class one; six copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $69,880.

For blank books, binding, stationery, fuel, lights, telegraphing, and miscellaneous items, including two city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the Office, $6,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. Why was that office left out of the House bill; can the chairman tell me? Is there not a bill pending to abolish the Indian Bureau? Was that the occasion of the omission; or for what reason was it that the House did not provide for the Indian Bureau?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know what motive there was about it. I am not enlightened as to that. I might give my impression. If I were allowed to have an opinion, I should say very likely what the Senator suggests was the cause; but I have no reason to know.

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe there is a bill now before the Senate abolishing this whole Bureau. I suppose if that bill becomes a law it will be time enough to strike this out.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, it can be done then. It is the duty of the committee to make appropriations for the service the law requires.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the Pension Office, in line 1775, to reduce the appropriation for the salary of the Commissioner from $3,600 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1776, to increase the appropriation for salary of deputy commissioner from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1777 and 1778, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief clerk from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1779, to increase the appropriation for salary of medical referee from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1779, after the word "twenty," to insert "six;" so as to read:

Twenty-six clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1780, before the word "clerks," to strike out "forty-two" and insert "fifty-two;" so as to read:

Fifty-two clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1781, before the word "clerks," to strike out "sixty-four" and insert "eighty-four;" so as to read:

Eighty-four clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1782, after the word "hundred," to insert the words "and twenty-two;" so as to read:

One hundred and twenty-two clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1783, after the word "twenty," to insert "five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five copyists, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1785, before the word "assistant," to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

Twelve assistant messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1785, before the word "laborers," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Eight laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1786 and 1787, to increase the appropriation for compensation of engineer from $1,260 to $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1788 and 1879, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the Pension Office from $338,920 to $446,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the word "dollars," in line 1790—

And for the following additional clerks and employés, for one year only, namely: two clerks of class four, four clerks of class three, ten clerks of class two; and ten copyists, at $900 each; in all, $44,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. "Forty-four" should be struck out and "thirty-three" inserted; so as to read: "thirty-three thousand dollars." I move so to amend the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1798, after the word "law" to insert the words "$60,000;" in line 1799, after "stationery" to insert "$10,000;" in line 1800, after "same" to insert "$5,000;" in line 1803, after "pension certificates" to insert "for repairs of building;" in line 1805, after "newspapers" to insert "$10,500," and in line 1806, to strike out "50,000" and insert "85,500;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the Office, namely: For actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected attempts at fraud, as provided by law, $60,000; for stationery, $10,000; for carpets, mats, furniture, awnings, and repairs of the same, $5,000; for fuel, gas, engraving and retouching plates; for bounty-land warrants, printing and binding the same, engraving and printing pension certificates; for repairs of building; and for other necessary expenses of the Office, including two daily newspapers, $10,500; in all, $85,500.

Mr. HAMILTON. There is provision there for furniture, fuel, and several other things provided for in the amendment adopted a while ago. I suggest that $60,000 for clerks to travel over the country and hunt up suspected frauds and report them is a very extravagant appropriation. Surely $60,000 would employ an army of clerks all the time, going all over the country. I suppose they are clerks drawing a salary, and this is simply to cover their traveling expenses. I think the amount ought to be cut down. I do not see anything in these contingent expenses that ought to be allowed at all, except stationery.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Texas objects to the appropriation of $60,000 for the actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected attempts at fraud as provided by law, and says that the amount is extravagant and exorbitant, and that it would employ an army of men for this purpose. As a member of the Committee on Pensions, the Senator from Texas cannot be unaware that there are very large frauds perpetrated upon the pension fund of this Government. I have previously stated on this floor, and I reiterate the assertion, that from various causes unnecessary here to enumerate, in my judgment not less than 20 per cent. of the entire pension-list of this Government is fraudulently and wrongfully paid, amounting in the aggregate to not less than five or six million dollars. The subject has been deemed by the Department of sufficient importance to recommend the passage of a special bill authorizing the appointment of a force for the express purpose of investigating these frauds, ascertaining in how many instances by false personation, by persons who have remarried, by persons who have exceeded the age of minority when pension should cease, and after recovery from disability this fund is imposed upon and wronged to the great injustice of those who have legitimate claims upon it. This sum of $60,000 would not employ more than forty men at the very extreme, allowing them the compensation that would be paid to a first-class clerk and his traveling expenses. Of course these frauds cannot be investigated here in Washington. The clerks must be sent to different points where frauds are suspected to exist.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this provision is simply to pay the expenses of clerks, and not their salaries.

Mr. INGALLS. Their actual expenses. I say that the expenses would largely exceed the compensation of the clerks. As they are at present employed by the Department, when they are detailed to investigate cases of suspected or alleged fraud, they receive a stated compensation per day in addition to their original compensation, and also their necessary expenses, including traveling and hotel bills. It is in evidence in the report of the Commissioner of Pensions this last year that between $200,000 and $300,000 have been saved by a very few efforts and by a very unsystematic endeavor to unravel and detect these cases of fraud.

I therefore think that this sum of $60,000 is a very moderate one, and that it is too small to accomplish the results that ought to be attained by this branch of the service. I should be glad to see it increased; and I believe that by a proper appropriation and a proper examination and inquiry into the present condition of the pension fund a very large amount could be immediately saved, probably not less than a million dollars, without much, if any, expenditure at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many pension agencies are there in the United States?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not remember the exact number of pension agencies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. About seventy or eighty?

Mr. INGALLS. I should think as many as that. The report of the Commissioner of Pensions would disclose the number.

The method resorted to by the Commissioner of Pensions is to detail clerks to visit certain localities where frauds are alleged to exist and make specific inquiry in regard to the right of the persons to the pensions which they are enjoying. It seems to me that this is one of the appropriations that certainly ought to be retained; that, instead of being extravagant, it is too small, and that a very much larger amount could be profitably employed in this branch of the service.

Mr. HAMILTON. I cannot see for my part why, when the Commissioner of Pensions suspects that there is fraud in getting up the papers that are filed in his Office on the part of pensioners over the country, he cannot, from the local authorities of the State where the papers may happen to be made out, ascertain pretty correctly whether they are fraudulent or not. For example: If A B makes application for a pension and prepares his papers, and the Commissioner of Pensions thinks they are fraudulent—and that is the only guide, it seems to me, that he has to go upon—why not by telegraph, or by a letter written to the neighborhood to some local authority there, ascertain whether such a person resides there, whether she is the widow of a certain soldier who was killed during the war, or make any other inquiry that may be necessary, instead of sending a man out a thousand or fifteen hundred miles and paying his expenses all the way there and back?

There is no more difficulty about detecting frauds upon the Pension Office than upon any other Department of the Government. All persons who have claims upon the Government of any sort may practice frauds upon the Government if they are not watched. You cannot afford to hire forty, or fifty, or a hundred persons to watch men who claim bounty at the Land Office and claim compensation for losses during the war at the Court of Claims and various other places. In fact, wherever the Government is responsible to anybody for anything, it is liable to be imposed upon all the time.

I have not much confidence for my own part in the agents of the Government sent out from Washington to investigate things. I have known a number of post-office agents and Treasury agents to be sent out and they do more whitewashing than investigating, three to one. Three times out of four they are bought up by parties if a sufficient sum of money is offered to buy them. That is the great trouble. I think it is a waste of money to pay out $40,000, or $50,000, or $30,000 a year upon the mere supposition that it will save two or three hundred thousand dollars. We have no evidence that they have saved anything, except the mere statement that they have been of great service so and so. There is no specification that I have ever seen.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. O, yes, there is.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am a member of the Committee on Pensions, and I do not recollect any specification as to what these clerks have done. It may be so, but it is a general statement. I think that there are frauds practiced, and the Commissioner of Pensions has a suspicion that there other frauds that might be ferreted out; and he asks this large appropriation to send out clerks. Clerks like to travel around over the country whenever they can get an appropriation to pay their expenses. They would go any day in the week if you allowed them to go.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator permit me to read to him a paragraph from the report of the Commissioner? The Senator says it is a merely estimated or suppositititous saving. Here is what was done last year by these agents, according to the official report of the Commissioner of Pensions:

During the fiscal year, fifteen hundred and thirty claims were investigated by the special agents of this Office. Of those cases in which pensions had been paid, three hundred and nine were found to be fraudulent. The names of these pensioners were dropped from the rolls, resulting in a saving of $2,605 per month, or $31,260 annually. Estimating the average duration of a pension at eight years, but for these investigations the payments in those cases would have amounted in that time to $250,080.

That is the amount actually saved to the Government by the operation of these special agents sent to investigate frauds in the Pension Office. The Commissioner of Pensions I have no doubt correctly estimates the saving which would be effected by a more systematic effort to ferret out the frauds perpetrated in the service at not less than $5,000,000 per annum. In the course of the last year the actual saving to the Government in the last year was $144,552 through the operations of these special agents.

Mr. HAMILTON. Do I understand the Senator from Virginia to state a belief that all these fraudulent cases would have been passed at the Department and paid if they had not been reported by these clerks?

Mr. WITHERS. They were actually passed, three hundred and nine of them were actually passed and paid; and upon the investigation of the special agents they found they were fraudulent, and the names stricken from the rolls, and $16,000 of pension money unlawfully obtained was refunded. That was last year's operations.

Mr. INGALLS. The pension system of this country is so enormous in its ramifications and reaches so many different portions of the country and touches so many individuals, that it is manifestly impossible for the Bureau here in Washington to maintain an accurate, minute, and special supervision over every individual upon the rolls. There must therefore be a system for the purpose of detecting any attempted frauds or wrongs in this branch of the service. That is the answer to the objection made by the Senator from Texas, who supposes that whenever these cases are brought to the attention of the department somebody ought to have authority to examine them. A course like that would be entirely nugatory and futile and would result in nothing. The allegations when made, of course, are investigated; but the difficulty is that these prodigious and enormous frauds exist, and the department has not the authority or the power or the means of making the systematic and thorough examination which they require.

It would not be proper to allow the statements of the Senator from Texas to go uncontradicted, to the effect that the agents who are detailed are bought up by the wholesale and induced to cover up frauds, and rather assist in their continuance than attempt their overthrow and detection. I have in my hand a report from the Secretary of the Interior, which shows that during the two years ending June 30, 1875, the total amount of claims investigated was 2,793; the total amount that were found to be fraudulent was 1,022, or a percentage of 36. Thirty-six per cent. of the entire amount investigated was proven to be fradulent. The financial result of these investigations was a saving, by dropping from the rolls during these two years of $72,791; by recovery of amount wrongfully claimed and returned to the Treasury, $32,813.41; and by the rejection of claims proved fraudulent, $173,885.20; making a clear aggregate during those two years, with the inadequate means at the disposal of the department, of $279,489.61, rising a quarter of a millionof dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much did they have last year applicable to this object?

Mr. WITHERS. The same amount.

Mr. INGALLS. Sixty thousand dollars. So I think the Senator from Texas, upon reflection, will be inclined to withdraw or at least to modify the allegation he makes against the honesty and integrity and good faith of the servants of this department.

Mr. HAMILTON. Personally I do not know anything about the agents of the Pension Bureau; but I have a personal knowledge of some investigations made by other Departments of the Government in my own section of the country. I have never known one yet, I believe, in any case to do any good, and I have known them to do some mischief.

Mr. INGALLS. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, in order to make this inquiry as particular as it should be, and not confine it to suspected attempts at fraud merely, I suggest the addition of "frauds and" after the word "suspected."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no objection to that.

Mr. INGALLS. The effect of that would be to give the clerks authority to investigate suspected frauds and attempts at fraud.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the amendments of the committee to the paragraph, from line 1796 to line 1807.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand that the Chair puts the question on all the amendments in this paragraph on page 74 at once?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The general understanding has been, in order to facilitate the reading of the bill that instead of waiting to put the question on each amendment as it arises, the amendments being so numerous, the paragraph should be read and then the amendments to it acted upon in gross.

Mr. SARGENT. Any Senator may call for a separate vote upon any amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I merely wish to inquire about the amendment in line 1799. Here I see is a provision for $10,000 for stationery for the Pension Office. It strikes me that $10,000 for stationery would buy a good deal for the Pension Office. I should like to know if the gentlemen in charge of the bill have looked into that matter. If it is necessary, of course I have not a word to say, but the amount of writing-paper, blank books, &c., that $10,000 could buy would be prodigious.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is exactly the appropriation we had last year and the estimate for this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the chairman tell me how much last year's appropriation has been exhausted for stationery?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I did not look into that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we are in the habit of appropriating $10,000 for stationery under the contingent expenses of the Pension Office, then, taking all the other Bureaus of the Interior Department, it must cost $100,000 a year for stationery at this rate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is not so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought not to be so, plainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is not so. This item is exceptional. so far as I know.

Mr. INGALLS. With the consent of the Senator from Maine and for the information of the Senator from Vermont, I would say that the condition of the Pension Bureau is entirely different from that of the other departments of the Government in this: that the Bureau transmits to every pensioner and every applicant for a pension the necessary blanks for the transaction of the business of the Office in accordance with the terms of existing law. Therefore this appropriation for stationery does not include merely the writing-paper and ink and pens and blotters and sand of the Office where the business is transacted, but this vast amount of blanks for the different departments of the Bureau which are transmitted to the pensioners in different parts of the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no doubt of that. That I understood. I had that in mind; but I should be glad to be informed, if I can without delaying the bill, how this last year's appropriation, which is said to have been $10,000, has been expended, to see whether that amount is actually expended for that cause.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Undoubtedly the report of the Secretary of the Interior on the contingent expenses of his Department would show that fact; but I did not examine it with reference to this item.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not sufficient knowledge of the matter to justify me in making any motion about it or to delay the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will send for the report of the Secretary and examine it, and call the attention of the Senator to the fact. It was reported, I am free to say, upon the ground that we had appropriated the same thing last year and that it was estimated at the same figure again, and upon the further knowledge that as a general proposition it is exceptional in the way of the demands of the Pension Office for that particular article.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That to a degree is true, undoubtedly.

Mr. EATON. I want to say one word to the chairman of the committee with regard to the last clause of the paragraph, $10,500 for fuel. The necessity for that item is dispensed with by the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] as well as the item for repairs of the building. There will be no necessity for "repairs of the building" in the building to which the Pension Office is to go. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maine that the $10,500 does not become necessary at all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think that might be so if there were no contingency about the amendment adopted a while ago.

Mr. WITHERS. We do not know that we shall be able to rent the new building at the specified rate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We cannot tell about that. In the present condition of things the Senator will perceive—and I make this explanation with reference to the action of the committee—that we must make the service whole. The proposition for the new building is contingent. If the House should accept it, there would then be no need for this appropriation, but as at present advised I suggest to my honorable friend that it should be left to stand, as it may be corrected at a further stage of the proceedings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the vote is taken upon this paragraph—and I will not delay the Senate about it—I see that the total result under this contingent-expense account, which does not go into the face of any statute, of course, or change the law, is that we increase the House bill from $50,000 to $85,000—an increase of about 80 per cent. of the original appropriation. It appears to me that it may be possible to squeeze that down considerably. Can the chairman tell me how much the total of those items last year was?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think I can. The $60,000 in one lump was left out entirely for those clerks.

Mr. EDMUDNS. No; I do not read it so.

For contingent expenses of the Office, namely—

This Pension Office—

"Actual expenses of clerks detailed," &c., "carpets, mats," &c., "fuel, gas," &c., "engraving," &c., "and for other necessary expenses of the Office, including two daily newspapers, in all $50,000."

Our committee have itemized this, very properly indeed, but in itemizing it they have carried it up to $85,500. What I wish merely to inquire is whether it is not possible, as here is a point where there is no statute or principle which stands in the way, to bring this down somewhat below the point the committee have put it at. With that view I ask how much was allowed for these objects in the last regular appropriation bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Seventy-three thousand eight hundred dollars. If it is advisable to take off anywhere, it should come off where it was last year; that is, it should come off the $60,000 in line 1798. The $10,000 for stationery is the same. I am not certain about the $5,000 for repairs, awnings, &c., but I think that is the same it was before. Then follows line 1805, $10,500 for expenses of the office, including two daily newspapers, &c. That possibly is a little higher, but I am not certain about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As this is now $12,500, according to the statement of my friend from Maine, above last year's appropriation, I want to try the experiment of submitting a proposition; and so I move in line 1799, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,000;" in line 1800, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000;" in line 1805, to strike out "$10,500" and insert "$7,000;" which will bring it back substantially to the provision of last year, reducing it $13,000, taking $3,000 off the stationery, $2,000 off the carpets and mats, and $3,500 off the mere contingencies and two daily newspapers and repairs of the building, so as to bring it substantially to the appropriation of last year. I make that motion.

Mr. EATON. I hope the Senator from Vermont will strike out more than $3,000 from the $10,500, if he intends to move an amendment at all; for if the new building is used there will be an absolute saving in that item of about $5,000. There will be no repairs of the new building and no fuel required.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will modify my amendment and make $10,500 in line 1805 read $5,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that, in line 1801 down to and including nearly all of line 1803, there is absolutely nothing appropriated for fuel, gas, engraving or retouching plates, or for bounty-land warrants, printing, binding the same, engraving and printing pension certificates. I suppose that either the last sum or the first sum named is to include these expenses. I further desire to call the attention of my colleague to the fact that the pensions are now paid quarterly, and these blanks have to be sent accordingly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have been paid quarterly for two or three years, and we ought to keep within the last year's appropriation, I should think.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. My impression is that my colleague is seeking to make a reduction where there is no increase over last year's appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not suppose it is possible for anybody to tell what his contingent expenses will be in any given year. If it were we could specify exactly; but we get the best information we can from the head of this Department, who ought to know better than anybody else. We have to rely to some extent upon what he tells us. Here is a communication from the Secretary of the Interior upon this precise point. He is speaking now of these contingent items and wants them to be increased:

The whole amount of the proposed appropriation for all purposes is $50,000.

The smallest sum which it is thought under the most prudent management will suffice to cover the items other than the special service is $27,000, detailed as follows:

For stationery	$10,000
Carpets, mats, awning, furniture and repairs of same	6,500
Fuel and gas	4,000
Engraving and retouching plates for bounty-land warrants, printing and binding the same, engraving and printing pension certificates	1,500
Other expenses, including Seaton House repairs	5,000
	27,000

For this year the appropriation for the same purpose was $33,800, the whole appropriation for contingent expenses being $73,800.

Speaking of the current year. It is impossible in a bill of this kind, of course, for us to investigate each individual case, and we are obliged, coming to these items, to get the best information we can and from the best sources. The best source, evidently, is the head of the Department. Whether it is reliable or not is another thing, and may depend upon the character of the officer, and, of course, upon our confidence in him. We get this from the best sources attainable and that is the best thing that can be done about it. The committee raised the sum from the House bill a little, and on that authority. Here is a statement of the expenditures of the contingent expenses; but it is a lengthy publication, and I do not know that we should worry the patience of the Senate with it. I will turn it over to my honorable friend from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it grouped together so that we can tell how much is spent for stationery, for instance?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hardly think it is; but I suppose it is ascertainable in some way. If the Senator will allow this paragraph to pass, when we come into the Senate, or after the bill is read through, perhaps we can ascertain what is best to be done about it. The committee acted upon two assumptions; first, an endeavor to assimilate very nearly to what it was last year, and secondly, upon an express communication from the Department that this was as little as the Department could get along with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel the force of all that the Senator from Maine has said; but the responsibility of the Department is one thing, and my responsibility is another, and I must act upon mine. We have found, all experiences of administrations have found, and all Congresses have found by experience that when you come to estimates that are not limited by statute, as they are about salaries and a great variety of things, the estimates are necessarily made up by the respective Departments and divisions, and in those by the respective clerks, and there is a natural human tendency to make the estimate large enough to cover all probabilities. The larger you make the estimate, the larger appropriation you expect to get and do get, and the larger appropriation you do get the more liberal will be the expenditure under it. I am not now referring to cases of gross misconduct and thievery and that sort of thing, but to extravagance and want of economy. Therefore I believe that I am speaking the sentiment of the Committee on Pensions—it certainly was its sentiment when I had the honor to be a member of it, and I am sure it has improved since—when I say that the committee and the Senate must, in respect of these matters that are left to discretion, be quite rigid and severe in regard to the sums of money that we appropriate. Otherwise you cannot encourage and enforce economy. If, during the last year and the years preceding, this contingent account has got along (saying now nothing about the provision for inspecting frauds, which I propose to leave just where it was last year) with $73,000, I do not see any good ground, I confess, for putting it up to $85,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend will allow me, that all falls on the item of $60,000 for clerks to investigate frauds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I understand that $60,000 was appropriated last year. I inquired a little while ago, and it was said it was the same sum that was appropriated last year.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If I said so in regard to that item, it is a mistake. It was $40,000.

Mr. FDMUNDS. Let us see what that item was.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The act of last year reads as follows:

For contingent expenses of the Office, namely: For actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected attempts at fraud, as provided by law, $40,000; for stationery, $10,000; for carpets, mats, furniture, awnings, and repairs of the same, $5,000; for fuel, gas, engraving and retouching plates; for bounty-land warrants, printing and binding the same; engraving and printing pension certificates; and for other necessary expenses of the Office, including two daily newspapers, $18,800; in all, $73,800.

Those are all grouped. That makes the sum of $73,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From $40,000 to $60,000 you have risen.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And that, if it were worth while, I would show, upon the urgent solicitation of the Secretary of the Interior, and especially the Commissioner of Pensions, based upon the statements which have been read already.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I can see the force of; but at the same time if—as I did not understand before, but the reverse—you have increased the provision of last year for investigating frauds from $40,000 to $60,000, when you look at the fact that this is only for actual expenses, not for the per diem allowance, which comes in somewhere else, in some other bill, or in the appropriation for salaries which the statute authorizes for subsistence, not exceeding $4 a day, as is in the appropriation bill of last year, the question is whether you have not appropriated more money than is absolutely necessary for the purpose. The general point I want to get at is this: that it does not appear to me that there is anything in the present condition of the country this year which justifies me, so far as I now see it—I shall be glad to be corrected if I am wrong—in increasing the appropriation for the contingent expenses of this one Bureau in the Interior Department from $73,000 to $85,000.

It does appear to me that the thing can be squeezed down. If they made repairs and bought stationery extensively and got new carpets to the extent of $5,000 last year, and so on, those things ought to last more than a year, and there is no need of paying $5,000 a year for them year after year. The answer may be, to be sure, "if it is not needed it will not be spent;" but there is a habit, and always was, of charging things to particular accounts that seemed to be convenient that may not on strict inquiry be justified, and the auditing officers of the Treasury Department, in the immense multitude of things they have to do, cannot look into such matters with great exactness. If you find that there is a surplus of money on account of the subject of mats, carpets, furniture, awnings, &c., of $5,000, something that is wanted in the Department is considered to be "mats, awnings, carpets," &c., and is so charged. The less margin you have, the less temptation there is to do that; and therefore I feel obliged, confessing my comparative ignorance of this subject and not doubting that the committee have done their full duty as they saw it, to take the liberty the rules give me of moving to reduce, not increase, the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT.) The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senator from Vermont.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is moved to strike out "ten" and insert "seven" in line 1799; so as to read:

For stationery, $7,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will not divide the Senate at this stage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is in line 1800, to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read:

For carpets, mats, furniture, awnings, and repairs of the same, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is in line 1805, to strike out $10,500 and insert $5,000; so as to read:

And for other necessary expenses of the office, including two daily newspapers, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Senator from Vermont is in line 1806, to strike out the total appropriation of $85,000 for the contingent expenses of the Pension Office and to insert $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1810, in the appropriations for the United States Patent Office, to increase the appropriation for salary of the Commissioner from $4,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1810 and 1811, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant commissioner from $2,700 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1812, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief clerk from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1813, to increase the appropriation for salary of three examiners-in-chief from $2,700 each to $3,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1815, to increase the appropriation for salary of examiner in charge of interferences from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1816 and 1817, to increase the appropriation for salary of trade-mark examiner from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1819, to increase the appropriation for salaries of twenty-four principal examiners (one of whom shall be librarian) from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1820 and 1821, to increase the appropriation for salaries of twenty-four first-assistant examiners from $1,620 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1822, to increase the appropriation for salaries of twenty-four second-assistant examiners from $1,440 each to $1,600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1824, to increase the appropriation for salaries of twenty-three third-assistant examiners from $1,260 each to $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1825, to increase the appropriation for compensation of one machinist from $1,400 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1826, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class four, one of whom shall receive $200 aditional for services as financial clerk, and shall give bond in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1829, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Seven clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1830, after "twenty," to insert "five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1830, after the word "and," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Forty clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1831, after the word "for," to strike out "twenty-six" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

Also for thirty permanent clerks, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1832, after the word "for," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

For fifty copyist clerks, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1837, after the word "for," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

For six attendants in model room, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1838, after the word "for," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

For six attendants in model-room, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1840, after the word "for," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

For fifty laborers, at $750 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1842 and 1843, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the Office of Commissioner of Patents from $370,220 to $436,400.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Maine if the number of clerks in this Office which the Senate committee recommend is the same as last year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Precisely.

Mr. EATON. Then I submit to my honorable friend that he ought to exercise that discretion which he spoke of last week. It is agreed in the first place, as I understand, that there has been one hour's additional daily duty imposed upon each clerk. If that be so, then certainly the same number is not required. I only make the suggestion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The considerations that controlled the committee I will submit to my honorable friend. The first is that this Office is entirely self-sustaining; but that of course is no reason why it should be extravagant. Originally it was run on its own resources, and run much more extravagantly than it is now. Latterly all its revenues have been covered into the Treasury, and been required to be audited into the Treasury; but still the Senator will see that it is not a burden on the Treasury, because it earns more than it spends.

Mr. EATON. I am aware of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The second, which was the controlling one, is that the business is very constantly and rapidly increasing year by year, so that this is one of the cases where you cannot expect to retrench the force unless you cut off the business. It is like the branch of the service covered by the Post-Office Department, constantly increasing, and there is a large increase of revenue also corresponding. For these two reasons the committee submitted to the Senate the same number as last year, not increasing it a particle, although the business has increased; and that I submit to my honorable friend is an argument for an increase of force, but the committee took into consideration the addition of an hour to the day's work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1853, to increase the amount appropriated for contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Patent Office from $60,000 to $80,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask what was the provision for this contingent head last year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have the act before me. Eighty thousand dollars last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much of it was expended, so far as you know?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That I did not examine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1862 and 1863, after the word "patents," to strike out the words "in the city of Washington;" so as to read:

For photolithographing, or otherwise producing copies of drawings of current and back issues, for use of the Office and for sale, including pay of temporary draughtsman, $40,000; the work to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Commencing on line 1861, I move to strike out all the words after "dollars" to the end of that paragraph, with the view of transposing them to the bottom of line 1870; amended in this way:

The work of said photolithographing to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The only substantive amendment is that it subjects the supervision to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. There is a large expenditure of money embraced in this. The work ought to be under the supervision of the Commissioner; but when you come to the discretion over so large a sum of money, it seems to me that it should be subjected to the head of the Department. The Senate will see how that might arise, because the Senate committee have amended the first of these paragraphs, which read in this way:

The work to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents in the city of Washington.

The very reason which led to the amendment to strike out "in the city of Washington" leads, I submit, to the amendment which is now proposed by the committee. There is a discretion to be exercised. That discretion over so large an amount of money ought to be in the head of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator read the change again?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It applies to three paragraphs, and should come at the end of them:

The work of said photolithographing to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I suggest to the Senator to change the word "direction" to "approval," and say, "subject to the approval," so that the responsibility will be several and the sole control will be in the Secretary of the Interior. It accomplishes his purpose as well, exactly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me make a suggestion. The first clause provides for "otherwise producing copies" as well as for photolithographing, and "for pay of temporary draughtsmen," and the second clause for "otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette," and the third clause, "otherwise producing copies of the weekly issues of drawings." I suppose you want all these subjected to the approval of the Secretary?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It ought to be, "the work done under the supervision." Does not the word "work" cover all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. "The work in this and the two preceding paragraphs named," or something of that kind.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Say:

The work of said photolithographing or otherwise producing plates and copies, referred to in this and the two next preceding paragraphs, shall be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to read:

For photolithographing, or otherwise producing copies of drawings of current and back issues, for use of the Office and for sale, including pay of temporary draughtsmen, $40,000.

For photolithographing, or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette, including pay of employés engaged on the Gazette, and for making similar plates, $40,000.

For photolithographing, or otherwise producing copies of the weekly issues of drawings to be attached to patents and copies, $40,000. And the work of said photolithographing, or otherwise producing plates and copies, referred to in this and the two next preceding paragraphs, shall be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1872, to increase the appropriation for tracings of drawings preparatory to photolithographing back issues from $25,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the Bureau of Education, to increase the appropriation in line 1875 for the salary of the Commissioner from $2,700 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1876, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief clerk from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1878, after the word "four," to insert the words:

One clerk of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1882, after the word "dollars," to insert—

And one watchman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1882 and 1883, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the Bureau of Education from $14,890 to $18,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1885, after the word "stationery," to insert the words "two thousand;" so as to read:

For contingent, namely, stationery, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1886, after the word "for," to strike out "library;" and after "library," in the same line, to insert "$500; library, $1,000;" so as to read:

Cases for library, $500; library, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1888, after the word "periodicals," to insert "$250;" so as to read:

Current educational periodicals, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1889, after the word "records," to insert "$250;" so as to read:

Cases for official records, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1890, after the word "publications," to insert "$225;" so as to read:

Other current publications, $225.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1891, after the word "library," to insert "$200;" so as to read:

Completing valuable sets of periodicals and publications in the library, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1892, after the word "expressage," to insert "$200;" so as to read:

Telegraphing and expressage, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1895, after the word "information," to insert "$11,000;" so as to read:

Collecting statistics, and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports, and editing and publishing circulars of information, $11,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1896, after the word "lights," to insert "$275;" so as to read:

Fuel and lights, $275.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1897, after the word "furniture," to insert the words "$250; contingencies, $1,060; in all;" and in line 1899, to strike out "4,000" and insert "17,210;" so as to read:

Office furniture, $250; contingencies, $1,060; in all, $17,210.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 1899:

Surveyors-general and their clerks:

For compensation of surveyor-general of Louisiana, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $5,000.

For surveyor-general of Florida, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $2,500.

For surveyor-general of Minnesota, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $3,400.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $6,300.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Colorado, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $6,300.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of New Mexico, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $6,300.

For surveyor-general of California, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office $20,000.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $4,000.

For surveyor-general of Nevada, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $5,000.

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $5,000.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Washington, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $5,000.

For surveyor-general of Nebraska and Iowa, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $6,300.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Montana, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $5,000.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Utah, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $4,700.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Wyoming, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $6,700.

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $4,000.

For recorder of land titles in Missouri, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the Post-Office Department, in line 1952, to increase the appropriation for compensation of three Assistant Postmasters-General from $3,150 each to $3,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1954 and 1955, to increase the appropriation for compensation of superintendent of foreign mails from $2,700 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1956, to increase the appropriation for compensation of topographer from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1958, to increase the appropriation for compensation of chief of division of postal stamps from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1959, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Superintendent of Post-Office building and disbursing officer, $2,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1962, after the word "general," to strike out the words "who shall be superintendent of the building;" so as to read:

Chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, $2 200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1966, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Principal clerk in charge of division of mail equipment, $1,800; principal clerk of inspection division of contract office, $1,800; principal clerk of finance division, who shall be disbursing officer, $2,000.

And insert:

Chief clerk to the superintendent of foreign mails, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1973, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the chief of division of free delivery from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1975, to increase the appropriation for compensation of superintendent of blank agency from $1,620 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1976, to increase the appropriation for compensation of assistant superintendent of blank agency from $1,450 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1977, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four assistants of blank agency, $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1980, to increase the appropriation for compensation of stenographer from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1981, to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

Twenty clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1981, to strike out "sixty-one" and insert "seventy-three;" so as to read:

Seventy-three clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1982, to strike out "forty-eight" and insert "fifty-two;" so as to read:

Fifty-two clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1983, to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy;" so as to read:

Seventy clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1987, to strike out "three" and insert "eleven;" so as to read:

Eleven assistant messengers, $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1989, after the word "each," to insert:

Captain of the watch, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1989, to strike out "seven" and insert "fourteen;" so as to read:

Fourteen watchmen, $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1991, to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read:

Thirty-five laborers, $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1992, to increase the appropriation for compensation of engineer from $1,440 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1995, to increase the appropriation for compensation of carpenter from $1,200 to $1,252.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1998, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One fireman, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1999, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four female laborers, $480 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2001, to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

And for temporary clerks, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2002, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the Post-Office Department from $393,070 to $491,012.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2006, after the word "stationery," to insert "$10,000;" so as to read:

For stationery, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2007, after the word "office," to insert "$7,400;" so as to read:

Fuel for the General Post-Office building, including the Auditor's Office, $7,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2008, after the word "gas," to insert "$6,500;" so as to read:

For gas, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2009, after the word "gas-fixtures," to insert "$4,000;" so as to read:

Plumbing and gas-fixtures, $4,000

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2010, after the word "telegraphing," to insert "$3,500;" so as to read:

Telegraphing, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2011, after the word "painting," to insert "$2,500;" so as to read:

Painting, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2012, after the word "carpets," to insert "$5,000;" so as to read:

Carpets, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2012, after the word "furniture," to insert "$7,500;" so as to read:

Furniture, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2014, after the word "harness," to insert "$1,200;" so as to read:

Keeping of horses and repair of wagons and harness, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2015, after the word "hardware," to insert "$1,500;" so as to read:

Hardware, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2017, after the word "northwest," to insert "$1,800;" so as to read:

And for rent of house No. 915 E street northwest $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2018, after "miscellaneous items," to strike out "forty" and insert "nine" before "thousand;" and after "dollars," in line 2018, to insert "in all, $59,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of the Commissioner, in line 2022, from $2,700 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2023, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of chief clerk from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2024, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of entomologist from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2025, to increase the appropriation for compensation of chemist from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2026, to increase the appropriation for compensation of assistant chemist from $1,200 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2028, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of superintendent of experimental gardens and grounds from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2029, to increase the appropriation for compensation of satistician from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2031, to increase the appropriation for compensation of disbursing clerk from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2032, to increase the appropriation for superintendent of the seed-room from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2032, after the word "dollars," to insert "librarian, $1,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2034, to increase the appropriation for compensation of botanist from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2035, to increase the appropriation for compensation of microscopist from $1,600 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2035, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2036, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2036, to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2037, after the word "two," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Seven clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 2037, 2038, and 2039, to strike out:

One clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, and one clerk of class one, as tabulators for statistical division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2040, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and sixty" and to insert "four hundred;" so as to read:

Engineer, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line 2042, to insert:

Assistant superintendent of experimental gardens and grounds, $1,200; assistant superintendent of seed-room, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "each," in line 2046, to strike out the words:

One female superintendent of flower-seed, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2048, after the word "museum," to strike out the words "one of whom shall act as librarian;" so as to read:

Two attendants in the museum, $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2049, to insert:

One messenger at $840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2052, to strike out "two and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three watchmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2053, after the word "and," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine;" so as to read:

And nine laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2053, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the Department of Agriculture from $69,560 to $76,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 2056, 2057, and 2058, as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner to collect agricultural statistics, compile the same, and publish monthly a statement thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 3058:

For collecting agricultural statistics, and compiling and writing matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $15,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any person receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employé of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2095, to increase the appropriation for "repairs of building, heating-apparatus, furniture, water and gas pipes, and new furniture, cases for herbarium, gasometer, and necessary pipes for the same," from $2,000 to $3,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2226, to increase the appropriation for salary of the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2128, to increase the appropriation for salary of the marshal of the Supreme Court from $2,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2141, to increase the appropriation for salary of the warden of the jail in the District of Columbia from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 2141:

For the purchase of new books of reference for the judges of the Supreme Court, $5,000.

Mr. EATON. I do not like to object, but it strikes me that this item, "For the purchase of new books of reference for the judges of the Supreme Court, $5,000," is very large. These books of reference are to be for their use alone, apparently. Suppose the cost to be $10 a volume, not $5, here are five hundred volumes of new books of reference. It certainly seems to me there is no necessity for that large expenditure. If it was to purchase reports of the various States, or the reports of Great Britain, it would be another matter; but it is simply for "new books of reference, $5,000." I submit to the chairman that there is no necessity for such an expense of that character.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand this appropriation of $5,000, it is for the law library.

Mr. EATON. You had better see if it be so. You are one of the committee. Then I shall understand it.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will allow me to say what I understand, I shall be obliged to him. An item of $2,000 was what I had reference to. I see now that this was $5,000, which I cannot explain. Probably the chairman can. It was another matter that I referred to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would say to my friend from Connecticut that this provision is put in on the motion of the Committee on the Library. The amendment was moved by the Committee on the Library and sent to the Committee on Appropriations and adopted by that committee, the Library Committee recommending it. That is the origin of it. Otherwise the Committee on Appropriations would not have felt authorized to put it on the bill, because it is a new item, not appropriated for heretofore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] ought to know something about this. I suggest to my honorable friend from Connecticut that if the Supreme Court of the United States have some good books bought for them, and they would read them frequently, they might be useful. [Laughter.] My honorable friend will see that if the purpose of the committee moving this is to provide them the books for consultation and reference, as I suppose it is, to have in their consultation-room, it may be very desirable. The Senator from Wisconsin will, I suppose, explain this amendment.

Mr. HOWE. It explains itself, as it seems to me. The demands upon the law library, owing to the large number of attorneys who practice at this bar and the fact that the court sits while the two Houses are in session, the members of which have more or less use for these volumes, makes it very difficult in the first place for the judges to get possession of the books when they want them, and then they get possession only first by sending to the library and then by hunting them up. They represent that it is very necessary for them to have a collection of the leading works in their consultation-room permanently, so that they can refer to them at any time; and upon their application and their testimony as to the necessity of such a collection the Joint Committee on the Library unanimously voted to ask for this appropriation, and I hope there will be no objection to making it. It is not a very large sum.

Mr. EATON. I did not understand it. I could not have supposed that the Library Committee proposed to get up a new library for the judges of the Supreme Court and that it was put in here in the way of an appropriation for new books of reference. My friend has explained it measurably; but it still strikes me, with all due deference, knowing something of the price of law-books, that they cannot require, in addition to the law library of Congress, $5,000 worth of new books of reference—more than five hundred volumes of new books. I desire that everything should be given the judges of the Supreme Court, as the honorable Senator from Maine intimates, which they may read in order to judge accurately. They should have all the books that are proper and necessary, but it really seems to me that the expenditure of $5,000 is unnecessary for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2147, after the words "chief clerk," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000;" after "assistant clerk," in line 2148, strike out "$1,600" and insert "$2,000;" in line 2149, after "bailiff," strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,500;" and at the end of the clause strike out "$28,640" and insert "$29,840;" so as to read:

For salaries of five judges of the Court of Claims, at $4,500 each; the chief clerk, $3,000; one assistant clerk, $2,000; bailiff, $1,500; and messenger thereof; in all, $29,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2153, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500;" and in line 2158, to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$3,500;" so as to make the clause read:

For stationery, books, fuel, labor, postage, and other contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $2,500; for reporting the decisions of the court, clerical hire, labor in preparing and superintending the printing of the eleventh volume of the Reports of the Court of Claims, to be paid on the order of the court, $1,000; in all, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the Department of Justice, in line 2162, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of the Solicitor-General from $6,000 to $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2163, to strike out "two" and insert "three," and strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

Three Assistant Attorneys-General at $5,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2165, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of one Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department from $3,600 to $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think in line 2165 the word "of" should be "for." This seems to separate this Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, to make him exclusively an officer of that Department. If you change "of" to "for" it will bring it into harmony with the rest under the Department of Justice, to which he belongs.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That should be so.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 2167, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue from $4,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2168, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of the Naval Solicitor from $3,150 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2169, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the examiner of claims from $3,150 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2171, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of law clerk and examiner of titles from $2,700 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2173, to increase the appropriation for compensation of stenographic clerk from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2174, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One law clerk, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2175, after the word "four," to insert:

Additional for disbursing clerk, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2179, to increase the total appropriation for the force of the Department of Justice from $64,060 to $76,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2191, after the words "subsistence of," to strike out "one horse" and insert "horses;" in line 2192, after the words "repairs of," to strike out "one wagon" and insert "wagons;" and in the same line, after the word "harness," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand;" so as to read:

For care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons and harness, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2194, to increase the appropriation for official postage-stamps for the Department of Justice from $1,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2197, to increase the appropiation for compensation of Solicitor of the Treasury from $4,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2197, to increase the appropriation for salary of the Assistant Solicitor of the Treasury from $2,700 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2199, to increase the appropriation for salary of the chief clerk of the Solicitor of the Treasury from $1,800 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2199, to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2200, to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 2202, to increase the amount of the appropriation for the force in the Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury from $21,161 to $28,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, the annual compensation of clerks of class four shall not exceed $1,600; and the annual compensation of clerks of class three shall not exceed $1,450; and the annual compensation of clerks of class two shall not exceed $1,300. And paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of section 167 of the Revised Statutes, or so much thereof as provides a different compensation for said clerks, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section, are hereby repealed. And the several sums appropriated by this act for each of the several offices and employment therein mentioned shall be the salaries and compensations for such offices and employments respectively from and after the 30th day of June, 1876. And no officer or employé of the Government shall require or request, give to, or receive from, any other officer or employé of the same, or other person, directly or indirectly, any money, property, or other thing of value, for political purposes; and any such officer or employé who shall offend against the provisions of this act shall at once be dismissed from the service of the United States, and also be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, fined not less than $500 nor more than $3,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, at the discretion of the judge trying the case: Provided, That hereafter all appointments of clerks of either the fourth, third, or second class shall be made clerks of the class next below the one to which the appointment shall be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [3,] 2, to strike out all after the word "same," in line 5, as follows:

And he is hereby required to issue regulations directing a reduction of 10 per cent. of the annual salaries of all the collectors of customs and officers employed in such service and their subordinates of every grade whose compensation exceeds $1,200 per annum, to take effect on and after July 1, 1876: Provided, That the reduction of 10 per cent herein provided for shall not apply to those salaries or compensations already reduced by the Secretary of the Treasury since June 30, 1875, below that percentage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [4,] 3, to strike out all before the word "whenever," in line 7, as follows:

That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, either in the reduction of salaries or of the number of officers or of employés, as made by the provisions of this act, or conflicting with any other of its provisions, are hereby repealed; and the words "during the session," as used in this act, are intended to, and shall be construed to mean, four months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 5, in the following words:

SEC. 5. That the executive officers of the Government are hereby prohibited from employing any clerk, agent, engineer, draughtsman, messenger, watchman, laborer, or other employé in any of the Executive Departments in the city of Washington, or elsewhere, except those for whom specific appropriations are made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call attention to some slight amendments which should be made to the bill. On page 6, line 127, after the word "day," I move to insert "when actually employed;" and at the end of the paragraph, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, however, That any portion of said sum may be used in the discretion of said superintendent for piece-work.

So as to make the whole paragraph read:

For four folders, at not exceeding $3 per day when actually employed, under the direction of the superintendent of the folding-room, $3,000: Provided, however, That any portion of said sum may be used, in the discretion of said superintendent, for piece-work.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 10, line 234, in the appropriations for the House of Representatives, I move to strike out "eighteen" and insert "fourteen;" so as to read:

Fourteen messengers, at $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 11, line 241, I move to strike out "$4,200" and insert "$5,000;" so as to read:

Two stenographers for committees, $5,000.

Mr. EATON. I understand the motion is to add to the $4,200 already in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It adds $500 to each stenographer and it corrects an error in the bill.

Mr. EATON. I wish my friend from Maine to understand distinctly that if the old law provides for the sum of $5,000 I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is the law.

Mr. EATON. Then I make no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My attention has been called to that matter from the other side.

Mr. EATON. Not that I do not think the committee were right in proposing $4,200, but I do not desire that they should go back on their views of the law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My attention has been called to it outside of the Chamber. We have made an error. We have not followed our own rule.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line 247, in the appropriations of the House of Representatives, I move to strike out "two" and insert "three," and strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Three clerks in the folding-room, two at $1,500 and one at $1,200.

I offer that on the same information.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line 253 I move to strike out "eighteen" and insert "twelve;" and after the word "dollars" in the same line, to insert "eleven messengers, at $1,440 each;" so as to read:

Eleven messengers, at $1,440 each; twelve messengers to be employed during the session, at $125 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On the following page the total of the appropriations for the House of Representatives should be changed in lines 267 and 268 from $209,243.20 to $221,103.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 15 in the appropriations for the Botanic Garden, in lines 358 and 359, I move to strike out "$1,440" and insert "$1,600;" so as to read:

For pay of superintendent, $1,600.

And in line 362, to make the total $7,600 instead of $7,440.

Mr. HOWE. Before that total sum is agreed to I want the Senate to make one or two other amendments in the paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator please, we shall come back to that presently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be open to amendment as soon as the committee have concluded their amendments.

Mr. HOWE. Yes; but I want an amendment made which may change this sum total.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We shall not object to that being acted on. That can be done at the same time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 17, line 401, in the appropriation for the employés at the Executive Mansion, I move to insert after the word "ushers" the words "one at the President's door and one at the secretary's door." The purpose is to designate two ushers, instead of two policemen, and to describe their duties.

Mr. DAVIS. Without adding anything?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And in the same line, instead of $1,200 I propose to say $1,320; so as to read:

Two day ushers, one at the President's door and one at the secretary's door, at $1,320 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The total amount appropriated in that paragraph should be corrected in line 403 by striking out "$7,764" and inserting "$8,004."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. At the bottom of that page, after line 412, I move to insert:

For watchman in Lincoln Square, $540.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On page 24, line 584, in the appropriations for the Office of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, the committee desire to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Ten clerks, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. The footing in line 506 should be amended so as to make it $101,180.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 32, line 785, I move to strike out after the word "salaries" the words "expenses and fees of storekeepers, agents, surveyors, gangers, and miscellaneous expenses," and insert:

And expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gangers, for salaries of store-keepers, and for miscellaneous expenses.

So as to read:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gangers, for salaries of store-keepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $1,800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 33, in the same paragraph, after the word "hereafter" in line 789, I move to strike out the words:

No gauger shall receive a greater compensation than $5 per day; and

That is surplusage; the same thing is in the line above.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line 793, in the same paragraph, I move to strike out the word "said" before "compensation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 48, line 1164, in the appropriation for the office of the Director of the Mint, I move to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read:

One clerk of class three.

And in the next line to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

One clerk of class two.

It is simply a transposition of the clerks, without changing the total.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 55, line 1332, in the appropriation for the assay office at Boise City, Idaho Territory, I move to strike out "$1,200 and insert "$2,500;" so as to read:

For wages of workmen, fuel, crucibles, chemicals, repairs, and other incidental expenses, $2,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is your authority for it?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Express application from the Secretary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will you please read it?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. O, yes! I was going to say that it only arises from an omission. The legislation of Congress on the silver question has made it necessary to increase in all these places somewhat the expenditures, and this was omitted. Throughout the bill we have done that, but at this point we did not; and since it has been reported my attention has been called to it by the Director of the Mint.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line 1334, the word "salaries," should be changed into "salary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 57, line 1401, in the appropriations for the Territory of New Mexico, I move to insert after the word "five" the word "hundred;" so as to read:

For salaries of governor, chief justice and two associate judges, secretary, and interpreter and translator in the executive office, $15,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 3, line 63, in the appropriations for the Senate, I move to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four mail-carriers, at $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The footing should be changed in lines 92 and 93 to correspond with that amendment, to $165,522.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have two amendments sent to me from the Department. The first is a simple modification of lines 796 to 800. It does not change it, except in one particular. I will read it. After the word "service," in line 794, I move to strike out:

And from and after the 30th day of June next there shall be no more than one hundred and thirty-one collection districts.

In line 798, after the word "the," to insert "number of;" in line 799, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "the number aforesaid" and insert "one hundred and thirty-one;" and in line 800, after the word "law," to insert:

Which reduction shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1876, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable.

The reason for the change in these lines is that the bill as it now reads requires the reduction to take place on or before the 30th day of June. The impracticability of this will be apparent when we consider the uncertainty of the time when the bill will become a law, and the time necessary to make such consolidation and preparation by the bonds of collectors. I have no doubt from former experience it will take sixty or ninety days. I will say the only effect is to allow the consolidation to go on as rapidly as possible. It does not change the number at all, but gives time to do it. As a matter of course, it cannot be by the 1st of July.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 794, after the word "service," it is moved to strike out:

And from and after the 30th day of June next there shall be no more than one hundred and thirty-one collection districts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 798, after the word "the," it is proposed to insert "number of;" and in line 799, after the word "exceeding," strike out "the number aforesaid" and insert "one hundred and thirty-one;" and in line 800, after the word "law," to insert:

Which reduction shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1876, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable.

So as to read:

And it shall be the duty of the President, and he is hereby authorized and directed, to reduce the number of internal-revenue districts to not exceeding one hundred and thirty-one, in the manner heretofore provided by law, which reduction shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1876, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate have restored lines 800 to 804 in the following words:

And sections 1359 and 1360 of the Revised Statutes and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of the foregoing paragraphs relating to the internal-revenue service are hereby repealed.

I propose now to add after the word "repealed," in line 804, this clause, so as to transfer certain power now imposed on supervisors to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

And the powers of transfer and of suspension of officers conferred on supervisors by section 3163 of the Revised Statutes are hereby vested in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and all other powers conferred and duties imposed by said section upon supervisors are hereby conferred and imposed upon collectors of internal revenue within their respective districts. In case of the suspension of a collector under the power hereby conferred, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, as soon thereafter as practicable, report the case to the President through the Secretary of the Treasury for such action as he may deem proper.

Under the law now a supervisor of internal revenue has the power to suspend officers temporarily. That power is here conferred on the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The supervisors have also certain powers of seizure. Those powers are conferred on the collector of internal revenue in each district.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is introducing distinct new legislation into this appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is made absolutely necessary by the fact that in the bill as it came to us there is legislation abolishing the office of supervisor of internal revenue. The Senate have concurred in abolishing that office, and it is necessary to transfer the duties conferred on those officers to other officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I merely say I am opposed to both propositions, for I have always tried to stand up for keeping appropriation bills free from legislation, with one notable exception that I will not refer to now. I will put in my simple negative to this proposition and the other, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. On page 17 an amendment was passed over which has not yet been agreed to. I ask to have it amended on line 391 by striking out "the" and inserting "other;" and in the same line by striking out the words "in charge of public buildings and grounds;" so as to read:

That all the duties relative to the Capitol building heretofore performed by other officers shall hereafter be performed by the architect of the Capitol, whose office shall be in the Capitol building.

And after the word "building" I move to strike out:

And who shall have the appointment and direction of the employés connected therewith.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as it will read when amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after line 385:

Provided, That the architect of the Capitol shall have the care and superintendence of the Capitol, including lighting, heating, and ventilating, and repairs; and shall submit, through the Secretary of the Interior, estimates thereof: And provided further, That all the duties relative to the Capitol building heretofore performed by other officers, shall hereafter be performed by the architect of the Capitol, whose office shall be in the Capitol building.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. On page 17 I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the watchmen for a great many of the public grounds, including the Smithsonian, Judiciary Square, and various other squares, have been left out. I think a portion of them might very well be left out; for instance, the watchman on Rawlings Square and the watchman for Pacific Place, and watchman for the Washington Circle; but there are others that manifestly ought to be included in the bill. We cannot quite afford to leave the Smithsonian grounds without watchmen; there are a great number of trees there, and they are perhaps more necessary than at any other spot. There is a watchman needed for the circle at the intersection of Massachusetts and Vermont avenues, one of the most highly-decorated circles in the city, and where we have very extensive wrought-stone-work, seats, and other ornaments, and a large number of young trees and plants. Then as to the watchmen for the Capitol grounds; the grounds have been doubled in extent; and it is indispensable that there should be enough watchmen, so as to have some upon the grounds all the time. We now have eight; and in order to give them the sufficient number of four to be upon the grounds all the time, I shall offer an amendment for four additional. I offer this amendment to come in after line 410:

For four watchmen for Smithsonian grounds, at $720 each, $2,880.
For one watchman for circle at the intersection of Massachusetts and Vermont avenues, $540.
For one watchman for Judiciary Square, $720.
For four additional watchmen for Capitol grounds, at $720 each, $2,880.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not like to oppose an amendment offered by so careful a legislator as the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but it seems to me that for squares where there are merely trees and grass, where there are no statues or works of art or flowers, the ordinary police of the city should be sufficient. That I understand to be the theory of the House bill. In a square where there are flowers to be taken care of and a fountain, as at the junction of Massachusetts and Vermont avenues, and at Lincoln Park, where there is a very beautiful statue and there are fountains and conveniences for both sexes, &c., it seems to me there should be some one in charge to see that the water arrangements do not get out of order, to see that the works of art are not mutilated, and that the flowers are not destroyed. But for a large reservation like the Smithsonian, where none of these things exist, it seems to me it would be very much better to rely upon the general police. I make the suggestion with some deference.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not think the criticism of the Senator from California applies to anything that I have proposed, with the exception of Judiciary Square. It is possible that we might dispense with the use of a watchman there; but at the same time there has been a number of young trees set out there, and unless they are carefully looked after they will be inevitably injured and destroyed. In relation to the Smithsonian grounds, there are other reasons besides the protection of the trees that are there, although we have perhaps assembled there a larger number of beautiful trees than on any other spot in the city. There are not only day-walkers but night-walkers there, and it is absolutely indispensable perhaps to the public morals that there should be watchmen there.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw all objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. I offer the following amendment, to be added to section 3:

That the appointments in all the Executive Departments of the Government shall be so arranged as to be equally distributed between the several States of the United States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, according to population; and the principle of equal distribution of appointments as above provided for shall apply in making reductions of force in said Departments.

The amendment is recommended by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it the words:

And all such appointments shall be made upon a careful and impartial examination of the candidate therefor by a board composed of not less than five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the most capable and worthy of the competitors so examined shall be selected for such appointments.

This amendment, Mr. President, explains itself, in endeavoring to provide a careful scrutiny into the qualifications of persons who are selected for performing clerkly duties in the civil service of the Government, and I hope every Senator will vote for it.

Mr. SARGENT. Is the original amendment liable to a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not. It proposes no new item of appropriation. The Chair holds that it does not propose an item of appropriation, and therefore is not open to a point of order.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment to the amendment; but I object to the principle of the original proposition. I think it is a very bad system, and it is very unjust to this District. We have a large number of people brought here by the necessities of the Government from all parts of the Union, and without the employment which the Government gives being received by them with some regularity, there is a liability to very great distress and want in this District. If we were to say that the residents of this District should not receive more of these offices than their proportion when compared with the distant States, I think it would produce scenes here which would be very painful indeed. I do not believe in making the public offices in this District an object of scramble among the different States. I know it is sometimes disappointing where an impecunious constituent calls upon a member of Congress to find that it is impossible to get him a place in a Department; but these cases are comparatively rare to the others which are brought to our attention nearly every day of people living in this District where their parents may die, who may be orphan girls or young men who need employment, or where they are struggling widows seeking to get along and to educate their children or even to provide bread for them, and who are turned away simply because they do not come from California, Minnesota, or Arkansas.

We are liable to produce a very bad state of things in this District, in my judgment, by refusing employment to people who are here—who were brought here originally from the fact that their parents had some such employment, or from any cause have settled in this District. This is not a manufacturing city nor a commercial city in any large sense, and the people here necessarily depend upon the employment which the Government gives them. Many of them are liable to misfortune, are continually overtaken by it, and absolutely need the bread which the Government can dispense in return for honest service rendered by them. I should be very sorry indeed to see it out of our power, where these cases of distress are brought to us, to recommend worthy persons to the Departments and procure them such relief.

I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to forego any of that fancied claim of my State to have a dozen persons in the Treasury and eight or ten more in the Interior Department simply because they are Californians. It appeals very much more strongly to my sympathy when some worthy, excellent girl, well educated and able to do good work for the Government, in some neighboring street comes to me and shows me a case of distress existing in her own family which can be relieved provided the Government will give her employment; and many a time I have gone to the Departments and asked in such cases and in similar cases employment for these persons. It seems to me that we cut off any opportunity for doing good in this direction and are liable to have cases of distress brought to our attention where we are entirely unable to relieve them except by the very inadequate means of putting our hands in our pockets and giving out of our limited means mere charity to people who want honorable work. For this reason I am opposed to the original proposition, and I really hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, this is a proposition not new at all in legislation, but is almost the exact language of the law as it now applies to one of the Departments of this Government, and that is the Treasury Department. That is a law which was passed on an appropriation bill of this kind, I think, at the last session of Congress. It has been in operation since January last. It has worked well, so far as we know, and I can see no reason why we should apply one rule to one Department and not to another. If there are any reasons, I should be glad to hear them. If the arguments of the Senator from California are correct, then we ought to repeal the similar provision which now applies to the Treasury Department; but I do not think we ought. I do not look upon these employments as appointments merely. They are appointments to labor. They are honorable, and labor is as sensitive as capital is in this country. The people take good care where they have appointments to make, that they are distributed according to population over the country. In your military arm of the Government you distribute them equally over the country. Why not let the people in distant States who desire to come here and labor honorably for the Government have the same privilege that people have in the District of Columbia or some of the adjoining States?

I cannot see any good reason why we should not open the door to all to this honorable employment and give all an equal chance. It is not a scramble for office that I propose; but where you have a citizen in the State of California, or in the State of Arkansas, or some other State, who desires to enter upon this labor, give him the same chance that the individual has who is lying around Washington here. But the fact of the business, if you get at the facts, is that nearly all the appointees from the District of Columbia came originally from some of the States; but they have been so long here that they have become citizens of the District of Columbia.

I do not think there will be any harm in carrying out this law, when we make reductions, make them from those States which are very largely in excess of their quota. I have taken the trouble to examine this matter somewhat. I find that the State of Maryland has more appointees in the Departments of the Government than nearly all the Southern States put together. It is true that there are some few States that have more than their quota. The District of Columbia, however, has more in the Departments than all the Southern States, or I might almost add the Western States put together. I cannot see any good reason why the people here should monopolize this honorable employment.

I do not say turn out; I do not say re-organize; but where you have to remove let the curtailment come from those States that have more than their proportion; but do not turn out a man who is a good clerk; keep him there; but if some of the States that have less than their proportion have men who are inefficient, turn them out. That power already exists. This is not for the purpose of putting in men simply because they come from States that have not had their quota, who are not qualified. No one would ask for that; but, where everything else is equal, let this honorable labor be open to all parts of the country alike.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I want to say a word or two about this matter, not upon the merits of it at all, but as a matter of business. If this is desirable to be enacted, it can be put upon almost any other bill of this character during the session. There are reasons, and particular reasons, I submit to the Senate, why this bill ought to pass to-night. If it had been considered upon objection, and amendments had been passed over, of course I should not think of passing it to-day; but in the way it has been considered, so little, if anything having been controverted, it seems to me if it were in the Senate we could pass it to-night. If it goes over, the court intervenes to-morrow. We are now within less than a month of the end of the fiscal year. We cannot afford to have the fiscal year expire with this bill on our hands. Therefore we ought to get it to the House of Representatives at the earliest day practicable. My honorable friend from Arkansas I trust will be content to propose his proposition to some other bill not so urgent as this, the sundry civil, or the very next bill that is brought forward.

Mr. CLAYTON. It properly belongs here.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It does not properly belong to this bill. It is legislation. It is not an appropriation. It is as properly here as on any other bill; but I do not see that it is any more so.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this particular point. Everybody will see it, and I hope the Senate will appreciate it: It has become an absolute necessity for us to return this bill to the House of Representatives at the earliest period we can, so that the two Houses may confer upon the various items and upon the disagreeing votes of the two branches at a day so early as that there shall be no hitch in the public service. To that end I will try the sense of the Senate whether they will act upon this proposition now definitely, or reserve my honorable friend to some other time to present it. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas upon the table.

Mr. LOGAN rose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If any gentleman wishes to address the Chair upon the amendment I will withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to ask a question. I do not know whether or not under the rule the new legislation which is proposed by the Senator from Vermont, appointing five officers a board to be confirmed by the Senate, is an appropriation. It is true that no salary is fixed, but that of course will follow afterward. Therefore it is as much in the character of legislation as if it were a direct appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understood the Chair to rule that as it does not increase an appropriation it is not out of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the pardon of the Chair, however, if I differ from him; but it is only in order because there is no salary attached to the appointment, and a salary necessarily must be attached before the bill bec omes a law, and it will be done by the conference committee, I suppose. If these men are to be confirmed by the Senate, they will have to be paid. Hence, although the salary does not appear upon its face, there must be a salary attached to the appointment. I insist that it is increasing indirectly the appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I will not spend the time of the Senate in discussing the point of order, inasmuch as the Chair has ruled it is in order, and that I think is obviously according to the rule; but I might say to my friend from Illinois that there is a provision in the statutes now, an existing law which this merely provides for carrying out, and is only a change in the manner. The President, by law, is now authorized to appoint a board of examiners, &c. This merely changes that existing law and carries it out, by furnishing a more definite means and regulating the method by which that means shall be applied to the service of the country.

I am very glad to have the opportunity on the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas of bringing directly to the vote of the Senate the proposition I have submitted, and that is one which I believe, if we are to take protestations of desire for the public service, ought to make the bill a great deal more acceptable in the other quarters to which it is to go than it will be in its present state, because the chief burden of the song of public men this winter has been a reformation of the civil departments of the Government. It has been stated that the service was badly performed by too many persons and at too large salaries, and all that sort of thing. Now, if we can propose to the other branch of the Legislature a measure which provides in a clear and sensible way for ascertaining in a definite manner who are persons competent to perform these duties in the Department, then we shall be able to ascertain when we get them how few we can get along with and how many we can dispense with.

I think therefore the Senator from Maine ought not to be alarmed, taking the public talk about the good things that ought to be done for this Government, in respect of this measure of the Senator from Arkansas with the amendment to it which I have proposed, which I am glad to see no gentleman has made any objection to on its merits. My friend ought not to be put in any trouble on the score that it is going to embarrass the passage of the bill. We are bound in theory to suppose that it will promote the passage of the bill. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of my amendment now offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that the Senator from Maine having moved to lay the amendment on the table, debate is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask pardon of the Chair. I thought the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I yielded simply to allow Senators to address the Chair. I now renew the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine insists on his motion and the enforcement of the rule. The Chair cannot recognize any Senator for debate.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to debate the question, but I merely wish to make a statement which I presume is well known to all Senators. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont is now the law. I have no reference to the question whether the President has a right to appoint, but I refer to the law of 1853, by which each Department is required to have a commission appointed of persons in the Department for the purpose of examining all clerks who apply for an appointment. That is the law and it is the rule followed in each one of the Departments without extra pay for extra service. They are appointed in each Department and these examinations are made just as the Senator desires, except in a different form.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, no, let us stick it out.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What has become of my motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. That would carry the amendment of the Senator from Vermont with it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will carry the whole thing with it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nay 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnum, Cooper, Cragin, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Sargent, and Sherman—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Davis, Edmunds, Hamilton, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Ransom, Stevenson, Wadleigh, and Windom—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Kelly, Kernan, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, West, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—38.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-five Senators have responded to their names, which is less than a quorum.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 5, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

IDAHO CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. HALE. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise for the purpose of submitting a report from the Committee of Elections in the case of Fenn vs. Bennett.

Mr. HALE. Is there anything in order on Monday morning except a call of the States?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; but the gentleman from Tennessee rises to submit a privileged report from the Committee of Elections.

Mr. HOUSE. I move that the report be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed, merely asking now that the resolutions accompanying the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That T. W. Bennett was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seatin the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Idaho.

Resolved, That S. S. Fenn was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Idaho.

The motion was agreed to; and the report was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour now begins at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes; and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing.

BENJAMIN F. RICE'S HEIRS.

Mr. JOYCE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3637) authorizing the extension of letters-patent to the heirs of Benjamin F. Rice, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

Mr. CUTLER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3638) authorizing the Bureau of Education to occupy the "Armory" and making an appropriation for the repair and refitting of the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. J. MOORE.

Mr. HENKLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3639) for the relief of James W. J. Moore, late of Saint Mary's County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH FORREST.

Mr. HENKLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3640) for the relief of Joseph Forrest, of Saint Mary's County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WESTERN CHEROKEES.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3641) to refer the claim of the Western Cherokees, or "old settlers," to the United States Court of Claims for adjudication; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. DURHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3642) to amend article 3, section 3244, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, title 35, internal revenue; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SINKING FUND.

Mr. DURHAM also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3643) to amend section 1 of an act approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the expenses of the Government;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. SARAH B. M'CAMPBELL.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3644) to re-imburse Mrs. Sarah B. McCampbell, of Jessamine County, Kentucky, for the payment of a succession tax erroneously assessed and collected; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN LEWIS SOWARDS.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3645) for the benefit of Captain Lewis Sowards, of Pike County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IRA WELLS.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3646) granting an increase of pension to Ira Wells; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HARMAN COLLEY.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3647) to remove the charge of desertion against Harman Colley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MONEY-ORDER OFFICES.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3648) establishing a money-order office in the post-office at every county seat in the several States of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

DISABILITY PENSIONS.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3649) repealing section 4698½ of the United States Statutes at Large, and providing that an increase of pension shall date from the existence of the disability; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NUMBER OF MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3650) reducing the number of members of the House of Representatives to two hundred, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES L. CAIN.

Mr. McFARLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3651) for the relief of James L. Cain, administrator of Hugh Cain, deceased, late of Hawkins County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES L. HIGH.

Mr. CAULFIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3652) for the relief of James L. High; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and ordered to be printed.

A. B. GREENWOOD.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3653) for the relief of A. B. Greenwood, of Barry County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM F. RUSSELL.

Mr. FINLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3654) to relieve William F. Russell, of Florida, of political disabilities; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MARY JANE VEAZIE.

Mr. CATE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3655) for the relief of Mary Jane Veazie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HORACE K. DRAKE.

Mr. KIMBALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3656) for the relief of Horace K. Drake; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

C. N. FELTON.

Mr. PIPER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3657) for the relief of C. N. Felton, late assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

J. E. REDFIELD.

Mr. GOODIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of J. E. Redfield, late receiver of public moneys at Humboldt, Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY OF INDIANS DESTROYED DURING LATE WAR.

Mr. GOODIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3659) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint a commission to ascertain the amount and kind of property and effects belonging to the Indians of the Indian Territory, and the value of the same, used, lost, and destroyed during and on account of the late war of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM FUDGE.

Mr. JACOBS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3660) for the relief of William Fudge, by confirming his title to lands in Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The call of States and Territories for bills on leave and joint resolutions for reference has now been completed.

CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3661) donating cannon for monumental purposes to Post No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, of Taunton, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOONE. I move that the rules be suspended——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has not yet expired. The next business of the morning hour on Monday is the second call of States and Territories for resolutions, at which time bills on leave may be introduced, and all resolutions which shall give rise to debate shall lie over for discussion. The call rests with the State of New York; and the unfinished business under this call is the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ADAMS] which was pending at the expiration of the morning hour on Monday last, the vote ordering the main question having been reconsidered on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON.] The Clerk will read the resolution.

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

The Clerk read the preamble and resolution offered by Mr. ADAMS, as follows:

Whereas the fact is apparent that all branches of manufacturing, mechanical, and mining pursuits are at this time greatly depressed, and that all legislation which tends to embarrassment by the unsettling of values or the rendering of manufacturing, mechanical, or mining operations uncertain is unwise and injudicious: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House legislation affecting the tariff is at this time inexpedient.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the reference of that resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. COCHRANE. I call for the reading of the resolution again.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

The question was on seconding the demand for the previous question; and, being put, the previous question was seconded.

The question recurred upon ordering the main question to be put.

Mr. ADAMS and Mr. TOWNSEND of New York called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the mover of that resolution to modify it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. KASSON. I am not debating; I ask him to modify it by inserting the word "proposed" before the word "legislation;" so as to make it read "that in the judgment of this House the proposed legislation affecting the tariff is at this time inexpedient."

Mr. ADAMS. I am willing to modify it in that way.

Mr. KASSON. I construe that to be the meaning of it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is now operating on the motion for reference, and no modification is in order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 99, not voting 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Culberson, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Goodin, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Hays, Henkle, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, Hooker, House, Hunton, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Knott, Lamar, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, McDill, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Seelye, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Tarbox, Terry, Thomas, Throckmorton, Robert B. Vance, Gilbert C. Walker, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Fernando Wood, and Yeates—116.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Blaine, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Burleigh, Cason, Caswell, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Freeman, Frost, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Lapham, Lawrence, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, Miller, Monroe, Mutchler, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, John Reilly, John Robbins, Robinson, Miles Ross, Sampson, Sheakley, Simonson, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Teese, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walsh, G. Wiley Wells, White, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodworth—99.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Bliss, Chittenden, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Dobbins, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Frye, Gibson, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Abram S. Hewitt, Hubbell, Hyman, Frank Jones, Ketcham, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Lord, Lynde, L. A. Mackey, McMahon, Money, New, Phelps, Purman, Randall, James B. Reilly, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Schleicher, Schumaker, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Swann, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Walling, Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Young—73.

So the motion to refer was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ATKINS. My colleague, Mr. YOUNG, is necessarily absent from the House.

Mr. CABELL. My colleagues, Mr. GOODE and Mr. TUCKER, are absent by leave of the House; if here they would vote "ay."

Mr. HARTRIDGE. My colleague, Mr. COOK, is absent by leave of the House on account of sickness.

Mr. DURAND. Upon this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CONGER, who is absent by order of the House, and I also desire to say that my colleague, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, is also absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. FORT, is absent by leave of the House.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded with the second call.

JAMES DICKSON.

Mr. TEESE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3662) for the relief of James Dickson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EMMA A. RAMSEY.

Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3663) granting a pension to Emma A. Ramsey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GRANT OF LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

Mr. HARALSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3664) granting the proceeds of public lands of the United States for educational purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WALLING introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3665) to regulate the survey of the public lands in those portions of the United States where irrigation is necessary for agriculture; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LIZZIE F. RIED.

Mr. RICE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3666) granting a pension to Lizzie F. Ried, widow of William F. Ried, late sergeant Company D, Thirteenth United States Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF RESUMPTION ACT.

Mr. NEAL. I introduce a bill to repeal the resumption act, upon which I call the previous question.

The bill, which was read, proposes to repeal the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875.

The question was taken upon seconding the call for the previous question, and upon a viva voce vote the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KASSON. I do not think this bill is distinctly understood. I ask that it be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. KASSON. I raise the point of order on this bill that no notice of its introduction has been given, and that it is not now in order to introduce it without such notice.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill has been read the second time, and the point of order is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would decide that the point of order is well taken; that it is not too late to raise it on a bill of which no previous notice has been given.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill has been read the second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled upon the point of order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I would suggest to the Chair that his predecessor in the last Congress held that under the second call of States during the morning hour of Monday, when resolutions are called for, a member having the right to offer a resolution could introduce a bill for immediate action without previous notice.

Mr. HALE. On the contrary, I think it is very clear that the ruling of the Chair was always the other way; that upon this second call of States previous notice was always required when the point was made.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] himself held the latter part of the morning hour of Monday for nearly the whole of one session of the last Congress by a bill introduced under this call.

Mr. HALE. In regard to which I took good care to give notice, so that I should not be tripped up by a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that notice of this bill has already been given; it was not required that it should be given by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule, which the Chair will read, is this, to be found on page 154 of the Digest:

In the case of a bill introduced by a motion for leave, at least one day's notice shall be given of the motion in the House, or by filing a memorandum thereof with the Clerk, and having it entered on the Journal, and the motion shall be made and the bill introduced, if leave is given, when resolutions are called for; such motion, or the bill when introduced, may be committed.

The only question is whether it is too late to raise the point of order. The Chair rules that the point of order is in time.

Mr. HOLMAN. This same bill was offered before.

Mr. MORRISON. This bill was never offered before.

Mr. HOLMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The question was taken upon laying the appeal on the table, and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 134, noes 35.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I would ask the Chair if the attempt to introduce this bill this morning will be regarded as notice for its introduction next Monday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine the question and decide when it arises, and consult with the gentleman from Indiana on the subject.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAINE. If the morning hour has expired, I will rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, on the 2d day of May this resolution was passed by the House:

Whereas it is publicly alleged, and is not denied by the officers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, that that corporation did, in the year 1871 or 1872, become the owner of certain bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company, for which bonds the said Union Pacific Railroad Company paid a consideration largely in excess of their actual or market value, and that the board of directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, though urged, have neglected to investigate said transaction: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire if any such transaction took place, and, if so, what were the circumstances and inducements thereto, from what person or persons said bonds were obtained and upon what consideration, and whether the transaction was from corrupt design or in furtherance of any corrupt object; and that the committee have power to send for persons and papers.

That resolution on its face, and in its fair intent, was obviously designed to find out whether any improper thing had been done by the Union Pacific Railroad Company; and of course, incidentally thereto, to find out with whom the transaction was made. The gentleman who offered that resolution offered it when I was not in the House, and my colleague, [Mr. FRYE,] after it was objected to, went to the gentleman and stated that he would have no objection to it, as he knew I would not have if I were present in the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. TARBOX,] to whom I refer, took especial pains to say to my colleague that the resolution was not in any sense aimed at me. The gentleman will pardon me if I say that I had a slight incredulity upon that assurance given by him to my colleague.

No sooner was the subcommittee designated than it became entirely obvious that the resolution was solely and only aimed at me. I think there had not been three questions asked until it was obvious that the investigation was to be a personal one upon me, and that the Union Pacific Railroad or any other incident of the transaction was secondary, insignificant, and unimportant. I do not complain of that; I do not say that I had any reason to complain of it. If the investigation was to be made in that personal sense, I was ready to meet it.

The gentleman on whose statement the accusation rested, Mr. Harrison, was first called. He stated what he knew from rumor. Then there were called Mr. Rollins, Mr. Morton, and Mr. Millard from Omaha, a Government director of the Union Pacific road, and finally Thomas A. Scott. The testimony was completely and conclusively in disproof of the charge that there was any possibility that I could have had anything to do with the transaction.

I expected (and I so stated to the gentleman from Virginia, the honorable chairman of the subcommittee) that I should have an early report; but the case was prolonged and prolonged and prolonged; and when last week the witnesses had seemed to be exhausted, I was somewhat surprised to be told that the committee would now turn to investigate a transaction of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company on a newspaper report that there had been some effort on my part with a friend in Boston to procure for him a share in that road, which effort had proved abortive, the money having been returned. I asked the honorable gentleman from Virginia on what authority he made that investigation—not that I cared about it; I begged him to be assured I did not; and the three witnesses that he called could not have been more favorable to me within any possibility. But I wanted to know on what authority I was to be arraigned before the country upon an investigation of that kind; and a resolution offered in this House on the 31st of January by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] was read as the authority for investigating that little transaction in Boston. I ask the House to bear with me while I read a somewhat lengthy resolution:

Whereas the several railroad companies hereinafter named, to wit, the Northern Pacific, the Kansas Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Central Branch of the Union Pacific, the Western Pacific, the Southern Pacific, the Sioux City and Pacific, the Northern Pacific, the Texas and Pacific, and all Pacific roads or branches to which bonds or other subsidies have been granted by the Government, have received from the United States, under the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, the act March 3, 1874, and the several acts amendatory thereof, money subsidies amounting to over $64,000,000, land subsidies amounting to over 220,000,000 acres of the public domain, bond subsidies amounting to $——, and interest amounting to $——, to aid in the construction of their several roads; and whereas it is but just and proper that the Government and people should understand the status of such roads and the disposition made by such companies in the construction of their roads of the subsidies granted by the Government: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be, and are hereby, instructed and authorized to inquire into and report to this House, first, whether the several railroad companies hereinbefore named, or any of them, have, in the construction of their railroads and telegraph lines, fully complied with the requirements of law granting money, bonds, and land subsidies to aid such companies in the construction of their railroads and telegraph lines; second, whether the several railroad companies or any of them have formed within themselves corporate or construction companies for the purpose of subletting to such corporate or construction companies contracts for building and equipping said roads or any portion thereof, and, if so, whether the money, land, and bond subsidies granted by the Government have been properly applied by said companies or any of them in the construction of their road or roads; third, whether the several railroad companies or any of them have forfeited their land subsidies by failing to construct and equip their road or roads or any portion of them as required by law; and, fourth, that, for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of the several Pacific railroads or any of them, the Judiciary Committee shall have full power to send for persons and papers, and, after thorough investigation shall have been made, shall report to this House such measure or bill as will secure to the Government full indemnity for all losses occasioned by fraudulent transactions or negligence on the part of said railroad companies or any of them, or on the part of any corporate or construction company, in the expenditures of moneys, bonds, or interest, or in the disposition of land donated by the Government for the construction of the roads or any of them or any portion thereof, and for the non-payment of interest lawfully due the Government, or any other claim or claims the United States may have against such railroad company or companies.

Now, that resolution embraces a very wide scope. It undoubtedly embraces a great many things which it is highly proper for the Government to look into; but I think the gentleman from California who offered that resolution will be greatly surprised to find that the first movement made under it to investigate what the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has done was to bring the whole force of that resolution to find out the circumstances of a little transaction in Boston which never became a transaction at all. I asked the gentleman from Virginia how he deduced his power. Well, he said it would take three months to go through the whole matter, but in about three months it would reach this point, and that he might as well begin on me right there. Well, he began; and three witnesses testified precisely what the circumstances were. I had no sooner got through with that, than I was advised that in another part of the Capitol, without the slightest notice in the world being given to me, with no monition, no warning to me, I was being arraigned before a committee known as the Real Estate Pool Committee, which was originally organized to examine into the affairs of the estate of Jay Cooke & Co., and whose powers were enlarged on the 3d day of April by the following resolution:

Whereas, on the 24th day of January, A. D. 1876, the House adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a special committee of five members of this House, to be selected by the Speaker, be appointed to inquire into the nature and history of said real-estate pool and the character of said settlement, with the amount of property involved, in which Jay Cooke & Co. were interested, and the amount paid or to be paid in settlement, with power to send for persons and papers and report to this House:" Therefore,

Be it resolved, That said committee be further authorized and directed to likewise investigate any and all matters touching the official misconduct of any officer of the Government of the United States or of any member of the present Congress of the United States which may come to the knowledge of said committee: Provided, That this resolution shall not affect any such matter now being investigated by any other committee under authority of either House of Congress; and for this purpose said committee shall have the same powers to send for persons and papers as conferred by said original resolution.

They began an investigation which I am credibly informed, and I think the chairman of that committee will not deny, was specifically aimed at me. I had no notice of it, not the remotest; no opportunity to be confronted with witnesses. I had no idea that any such thing was going on, not the slightest. So that on three distinct charges I was being investigated at the same time and having no opportunity to meet any one of them; and I understand, though I was not present, that the gentleman from Virginia has this morning introduced a fourth, to find out something about the Kansas Pacific Railroad, a transaction fifteen years old if it ever existed, and has summoned numerous witnesses.

Mr. HUNTON. What was the statement the gentleman just made? I did not fully understand it.

Mr. BLAINE. That an investigation has been set on foot by the gentleman, aimed at me, in regard to the Kansas Pacific Railroad, and that witnesses have been summoned on that question, the transaction out of which it grew being fifteen years old.

Now, I say—and I state it boldly—that, under these general powers to investigate Pacific railroads and their transactions, the whole enginery of this committee is aimed personally at me; and I want that to be understood by the country. I have no objection to it; but I want you by name to organize a committee to investigate JAMES G. BLAINE. I want to meet the question squarely. That is the whole aim and intent; and the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] will pardon me for saying that when this investigation was organized I felt that such was the whole purpose and object. I will not further make personal references; for I do not wish to stir up any blood on this question; but ever since a certain debate here in January it has been known that there are gentlemen in this Hall whose feelings were peculiarly exasperated toward me. And I beg the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to remember that when this matter affecting me went to his committee, while there were seven democratic members of that committee, he took as the majority of the subcommittee the two who were from the South and had been in the rebel army.

Mr. KNOTT. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. BLAINE. After a moment; I have not a great deal of time.

Mr. KNOTT. As the gentleman has made an insinuation, I prefer to answer it now.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well.

Mr. KNOTT. These railroad investigations were referred to that committee before I ever heard the gentleman's name insinuated in connection with them; and I will say furthermore that I had no act or part in instituting any investigation implicating the gentleman at all.

Mr. BLAINE. Then when the investigation began, the gentleman from Virginia who conducted it insisted under that resolution, which was obviously on its face limited to the seventy-five thousand dollar transaction—the transaction with the Union Pacific Railroad—he insisted on going into all the affairs of the Fort Smith Railroad as incidental thereto, and pursued that to such an extent that finally I had myself through my colleague, Mr. FRYE, to take an appeal to the whole committee, and the committee decided that the gentleman had no right to go there. But when he came back and resumed the examination he began again exactly in the same way, and was stopped there and then by my colleague who sits in front, not as my attorney, but as my friend.

When the famous witness Mulligan came here loaded with information in regard to the Fort Smith road, the gentleman from Virginia drew out what he knew had no reference whatever to the question of investigation. He then and there insisted on all of my private memoranda being allowed to be exhibited by that man in reference to business that had no more connection, no more relation, no more to do with that investigation than with the North Pole.

And the gentleman tried his best, also, though I believe that has been abandoned, to capture and use and control my private correspondence. This man had selected out of correspondence running over a great many years letters which he thought would be peculiarly damaging to me. He came here loaded with them. He came here for a sensation. He came here primed. He came here on that particular errand. I was advised of it, and I obtained those letters under circumstances which have been notoriously scattered throughout the United States, and are known to everybody. I have them. I claim I have the entire right to those letters, not only by natural right, but upon all the precedents and principles of law, as the man who held those letters in possession held them wrongfully. The committee that attempted to take those letters from that man for use against me proceeded wrongfully. They proceeded in all boldness to a most defiant violation of the ordinary private and personal rights which belong to every American citizen, and I was willing to stand and meet the Judiciary Committee on this floor. I wanted them to introduce it. I wanted the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Virginia to introduce that question upon this floor, but they did not do it.

Mr. KNOTT, (in his seat.) I know you did.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well.

Mr. KNOTT. I know you wanted to be made a martyr of. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. And you did not want to, and there is the difference. [Laughter and applause.] I go a little further: you did not dare to.

Mr. KNOTT. We will talk about that hereafter.

Mr. BLAINE. I wanted to meet that question. I wanted to invoke all the power you had in this House on that question.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I rise to a question of order. Is this language parliamentary?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; entirely so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I do not ask the gentleman. I ask the Speaker. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I want to know whether it is in order for one gentleman on this floor to say to another he dare not do so and so?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey calls the gentleman from Maine to order, and under the rules the gentleman from Maine will be seated, and if there be objectionable words, they will be taken down.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say the point of order is simply to the use of the second person, and I hope gentlemen on both sides will use the third person.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not.

Mr. KASSON. You said "you."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to gentlemen who have the privilege of the House, that this display of cheering is entirely out of order.

Mr. BLAINE. It never ought to be done, and never has been done so much as during this Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will enforce the order, and the doorkeepers will assist the Chair, and, if necessary, the Sergeant-at-Arms under the rules will assist the doorkeepers. The gentleman from Maine will now proceed in order.

Mr. BLAINE. I repeat, the Judiciary Committee I understand have abandoned that issue against me. I stood up and declined not only on the conclusion of my own mind, but by eminent legal advice. I was standing behind the rights which belong to every American citizen, and if they wanted to treat the question in my person anywhere in the legislative halls or judicial halls, I was ready. Then there went forth everywhere the idea and impression that because I would not permit that man or any man whom I could prevent from holding as a menace over my head my private correspondence there must be something in it most deadly and destructive to my reputation. I would like any gentleman on this floor—and all gentlemen on this floor are presumed to be men of affairs, whose business has been varied, whose intercourse has been large—I would like any gentleman to stand up here and tell me that he is willing and ready to have his private correspondence scanned over and made public for the last eight or ten years. I would like any gentleman to say that. Does it imply guilt? Does it imply wrong-doing? Does it imply any sense of weakness that a man will protect his private correspondence? No, sir; it is the first instinct to do it, and it is the last outrage upon any man to violate it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that I have defied the power of the House to compel me to produce those letters. I speak with all respect to this House. I know its powers, and I trust I respect them. But I say this House has no more power to order what shall be done or not done with my private correspondence than it has with what I shall do in the nurture and education of my children; not a particle. The right is as sacred in the one case as it is in the other. But, sir, having vindicated that right, standing by it, ready to make any sacrifice in the defense of it, here and now if any gentleman wants to take issue with me on behalf of this House I am ready for any extremity of contest or conflict in behalf of so sacred a right. And while I am so, I am not afraid to show the letters. Thank God Almighty I am not ashamed to show them. There they are, [holding up a package of letters.] There is the very original package. And with some sense of humiliation, with a mortification that I do not pretend to conceal, with a sense of outrage which I think any man in my position would feel, I invite the confidence of 44,000,000 of my countrymen while I read those letters from this desk. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doorkeepers will enforce the rule.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg gentlemen who are my friends to make no manifestation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has directed the doorkeepers to enforce the rule, and to remove from the Hall persons who are not entitled to its privileges who are making these manifestations.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that so far as my observation extends the applause was within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doorkeepers are authorized to remove from the Hall any persons who violate its privileges.

Mr. BLAINE. Now as regards many of these letters I have not the slightest feeling in reading them. Some of them will require a little explanation. Some of them may possibly, as I have said, involve a feeling of humiliation. But I would a great deal rather take that than take the evil surmises and still more evil inferences which might be drawn if I did not act with this frankness.

The first letter I shall read, marked "private and personal," is as follows:

[Private and personal.]

AUGUSTA, MAINE, August 31, 1872.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I have been absent so much of late that I did not receive your last letter until it was several days old. When I last wrote you I was expecting to be in Boston on a political conference about this time, but I found it impossible to be there, and it is now impossible for me to leave here until after our election, which occurs Monday week, the 9th. I will try to meet you at the Parker House on the 10th or 11th, availing myself of the first possible moment for that purpose.

I cannot, however, allow a remark in your letter to pass without comment. You say that you have been trying to get a settlement with me for fifteen months, you have been trying to induce me to comply with certain demands which you made upon me, without taking into account any claims I have of a counter kind. This does not fill my idea of a settlement, for a settlement must include both sides.

No person could be more anxious for a settlement than I am, and if upon our next interview we cannot reach one, why then we try other means.

But my judgment is that I shall make you so liberal an offer of settlement that you cannot possibly refuse it.

As one of the elements which I wish to take into account is the note of $10,000 given you in 1863 for Spencer stock, I desire that you will furnish me with the items of interest on that note. My impression is that when that note was consolidated into the large note, which you will still hold, that you did not charge me full interest, possibly omitting one or two years.

I will be obliged if you will give me information on this point, for I intend to submit to you a full and explicit basis of settlement, and in making it up it is necessary that I should have this information. Please send it as promptly as you may be able to give it to me.

In haste, very truly yours,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, JR., Esq.

There is an allusion there to Spencer stock. I took this letter up first because I wish to make an explanation as to that. In the month of November, 1861, I was summoned to Boston by a telegram to meet Mr. Fisher and another gentleman on some urgent business. I immediately responded. On getting there I found that they were the proprietors of a newly-invented rifle. The other gentleman was Mr. Ward Cheney, of Connecticut, recently deceased, well known for his eminence in the silk manufacture, and a gentleman of great wealth and high character. One of the ingenious mechanics in his employ named Spencer had invented a repeating rifle. It had been tested in various private ways, but it had not received the official sanction of the Government. They had employed various persons to come to Washington during the summer of 1861, the first of the war; but these various agents reported, and these gentlemen so reported to me, that what they called a gun-ring in Washington were so close and were so powerful that they could not get an opportunity to bring that new arm to the attention of the Secretary of War, the present venerable Senator from Pennsylvania, and they asked me if I thought I could do it. That was two years and more before I entered Congress.

I told them that I thought I could. And going back home and making preparations I immediately came to Washington, and in a very short time I had an interview with Secretary CAMERON at the War Department. He looked at the gun, was satisfied there was something in it, and gave an order to have it tested by the Ordnance Bureau. It was thoroughly tested, and in the course of two weeks the experiment was so satisfactory that they gave a preliminary order for 20,000 rifles. It was of course, as every gentleman who is familiar with the war knows, a most eminent success. It was one of the wonderful arms of the war: the Spencer rifle.

The company immediately proceeded to erect an armory in Boston, but, with all that ingenuity and capital could do, they did not produce, as every gentleman on this floor who was familiar with the operations of the war knows, half as many arms as the service wanted. They paid me not an extravagant but a moderate fee for that service, which I was then as much at liberty to take as any lawyer or agent on this floor would be in his private relations at home. I was not in Congress, was not nominated to Congress, was not here for two years afterward.

The winter afterward, or next spring, Mr. Fisher and Mr. Cheney, both together, offered me $10,000 stock in the concern, and I took it.

A MEMBER. And paid for it?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, of course; and paid for it, and owned, and had the dividends on it. I made no concealment of it. But I never was at the War Department about in any shape or form in my life. Now, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] wants to investigate that case I will save him all the trouble. I will just cut that short. If he wants the list of stockholders, why they are all private citizens, and very respectable ones, and the corporation is dissolved, dead, merged in the Winchester Rifle Company. I will give him all the trail there is to the whole story, and he can strike it and follow it out. The whole story, that I had so much per gun as a royalty of any sort, is simply absurd. I was an ordinary stockholder, just as a man is in a bank. A gentleman asks me if I paid for this stock. I tell him yes, I did, emphatically. The truth is the Department was only too anvious to urge in every direction to have these guns manufactured.

I take these letters up quite miscellaneously. The next is dated Augusta, Maine, August 9, 1872:

[Personal.]

AUGUSTA, MAINE, August 9, 1872.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: On my return home yesterday I found your favor of 6th from Stonington, asking for my notes, $6,000, on account. It seems to me that a partial settlement of our matter would only lead to future trouble, or at all events to a mere postponement of our present difficulties.

I deem it highly desirable that we should have a conclusive and comprehensive settlement, and I have been eager for that these many months.

The account which you stated June 20, 1872, does not correspond precisely with the reckoning I have made of my indebtedness on the note you hold. You credit me, April 26, 1869, with $12,500 dividend from Spencer Company; but there were two subsequent dividends, one of $3,750, the other of $5,800, of which no mention is made in your statement, though I received in June, 1870, your check for $2,700 or $2,800, which was a part of these dividends, I believe. I think my "cash memorandum" of June 25, 1869, for $2,500, with which you charge me, represented at the time a part of the dividends; but being debited with that, I am entitled to a credit of the dividend.

In other words, as I reckon it, there are dividends amounting to $9,550 due me, with interest since June, 1870, of which I have received only $2,700 or $2,800, entitling me thus to a credit of some $7,500.

Besides the cash memorandum January 9, 1864, $600, which with interest amounts to $904.10, was obviously included in the consolidated note which was given to represent all my indebtedness to you and which you repeatedly assured me would be met and liquidated in good time by Spencer dividends.

You will thus see that we differ materially as to the figures. Of course each of us is aiming at precisely the facts of the case, and if I am wrong, please correct me. I am sure that you do not desire me to pay a dollar that is not due, and I am equally sure that I am more than ready to pay every cent that I owe you.

The Little Rock matter is a perpetual and never-ending embarrassment to me. I am pressed daily almost to make final settlement with those who still hold the securities—a settlement I am not able to make until I receive the bonds due on your article of agreement with me. That is to me by far the most urgent and pressing of all the demands connected with our matters, and the one which I think in all equity should be first settled, or certainly settled as soon as any.

If the $6,000 cash is so important to you, I would be glad to assist in raising the same for you on your notes, using Little Rock bonds as collateral at same rate they are used in Boston, four for one. I think I could get the money here on four or six months on these terms. If I had the money myself, I would be glad to advance it to you, but I am as dry as a contribution-box, borrowing indeed to defray my campaign expenses.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, Jr., Esq., Boston.

That is a very important communication to the American people. The next letter I hold is dated Augusta, Maine, July 3, 1872. The witness Mulligan said that there was nothing in this about the Northern Pacific Railroad.

AUGUSTA, MAINE, July 3, 1872.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I was detained far beyond my expectations in New York and Pennsylvania, being there quite a week. I was in Boston on Monday en route home, but I was so prostrated by the heat that I had no strength or energy to call on you.

It seems to me, as I review and recall our several conferences, that we ought not to have any trouble in coming to an easy adjustment, as follows: First, I am ready to fulfill the memorandum held by you in regard to the Northern Pacific Railroad, as I always have been; second, you are ready to consider the land bonds in my possession as surrendered in payment of the debt to which they were originally held as collateral; third, I am ready to pay you the full amount of cash due you on memoranda held by you provided you will pay me half the amount of bonds due me on memoranda held by me, the cash to be paid and the bonds to be delivered at same time. As to further sale of the share in Northern Pacific Railroad, that could be determined afterward. I am ready to do all in my power to oblige you in the matter.

If we can adjust the first and second points herein referred to, the third might be left, if you desire it, to the future.

Hitherto I have made all the propositions of settlement. If this is not acceptable to you, please submit your views of a fair basis in writing.

Sincerely yours,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, Jr., Esq.

That letter calls for no special comment. Now, any one who hears this letter will observe that there was a dispute between the parties that ran over a very considerable period, and here is a letter in which he asks me to get him a letter of credit for $10,000 from Jay Cooke & Co., of this city. My answer, dated Washington, D. C., April 26, 1872, as follows:

WASHINGTON, April 26.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: Yours of 24th received. There seems to be one great error of fact under which you are laboring in regard to my ability to comply with your request about the $10,000 letter of credit. I would gladly get it for you if I were able; but I have not the means. I have no power of getting a letter of credit from Jay Cooke except by paying the money for it, and the money I have not got, and have no means of getting it. You ask me to do therefore what is simply impossible. Nothing would give me more pleasure than to serve you if I were able; but my losses in the Fort Smith affair have entirely crippled me and deranged all my finances. You would, I know, be utterly amazed if you could see the precise experience I have had in that matter. Very bitter, I assure you. Among other things, I still owe nearly all of the $25,000 which I delivered to Mr. Pratt, and this is most harassing and embarrassing to me.

If you will give me the $76,500 of bonds which I propose to throw off as payment of the notes which you say I owe you, I will gladly get your ten-thousand-dollar letter of credit; but if I release those bonds to you as I propose, you can do the same for yourself.

I am at a loss to know what you mean by your repeated phrase that "I have denied everything." What have I denied? I do not so much as understand what you mean, and would be glad to have you explain.

You reject the name of Ward Cheney as a friendly referee. Please suggest a name yourself of some one known to both of us. I mean for you to suggest a name in case you do not accept my basis of settlement proposed in my last letter preceding this.

Yours, very truly,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, Jr., Esq.
When do you propose to sail for Europe?

Some of these letters were witten by the gentleman who sits on my right and who was my clerk during my Speakership, acting as my amanuensis.

Here is a letter dated April 22, 1872, again showing the accuracy of the witness Mulligan, who said that it contained no allusion to the Northern Pacific Railroad:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1872.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: Your brief note received. I do not know what you mean by my "not mentioning Northern Pacific and denying everything else."

You have my obligation to deliver to you a specified interest in Northern Pacific which I was to purchase for you, and in which I never had a penny's interest—direct or indirect. Some months ago you wrote me (twice) declaring that you would not receive the share, but demanding the return of the money. This was impossible, and I therefore could do nothing but wait.

Nothing I could write would make my obligation plainer than the memorandum you hold. Nothing you could write would change my obligation under that memorandum.

The matters between us are all perfectly plain and simple, and I am ready to settle them all comprehensively and liberally. I am not willing to settle those that benefit you and leave to the chances of the future those that benefit me.

I am willing to forego and give up a great deal for the sake of a friendly settlement, and I retain a copy of this letter as evidence of the spirit of the offer I make. I think, if we cannot settle ourselves, a friendly reference would be the best channel, and I propose Mr. Ward Cheney, who stands nearer to you certainly than he does to me. If this name does not suit you, please suggest one yourself.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, Jr.

Here is one dated Washington, May 26, 1864.

This correspondence, you will observe, stretches over a considerable march of time, and this refers to the Spencer Rifle Company:

WASHINGTON, May 26, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor received. I am very glad, all things considered, that the Government has accepted your proposition to take all your manufacture till 1st September, 1865. It gives a straight and steady business for the company for a good stretch of time.

In regard to the tax provision you can judge for yourself, as I send herewith a copy of the bill as reported from the Finance Committee of the Senate and now pending in that body—see pages 148, 149, where I have marked. In looking over the bill you will please observe that all words in italic letters are amendments proposed by the Senate Finance Committee, while all words included in brackets are proposed to be struck out by same committee.

The provision which you inquire about was not in the original bill, but was an amendment moved from the Ways and Means Committee by Mr. KASSON, of Iowa, to whom I suggested it. It is just and proper in every sense, and will affect a good many interests, including your company. I am glad to hear such good accounts of your progress in the affairs of the company, of which I have always been proud to be a member.

Tell Mr. Welles that his brother has been nominated by the Senate for commissary of subsistence, with rank of captain. He will undoubtedly be confirmed as soon as his case can be reached. I will advise as soon as it is done.

In haste, yours, truly,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, Jr., Esq.

I have looked up the provision which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] moved, and it was this: that where the Government had contracted for the delivery of a specific article of manufacture, and after the contract was made with the Government, an additional tax was levied on that article, the Government should stand the loss, and not the seller. The gentleman from Iowa understands the point.

Mr. KASSON. I do remember the fact of the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. It is a very simple matter; in fact all the manufacturing interests in the United States where contracts were made were interested in it, and where new tax bills were passed every few months.

The next letter to which I refer was dated Washington, District of Columbia, April 18, 1872.

This is the letter in which Mulligan says and puts down in his abstract that I admitted the sixty-four-thousand-dollar sale of bonds:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 18, 1872.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I answered you very hastily last evening, as you said you wished an immediate reply; and perhaps in my hurry I did not make myself fully understood.

You have been for some time laboring under a totally erroneous impression in regard to my results in the Fort Smith matter. The sales of bonds which you spoke of my making, and which you seem to have thought were for my own benefit, were entirely otherwise. I did not have the money in my possession forty-eight hours, but paid it over directly to the parties whom I tried by every means in my power to protect from loss. I am very sure that you have little idea of the labors, the losses, the efforts, and the sacrifices I have made within the past year to save those innocent persons, who invested on my request, from personal loss.

And I say to you to-night solemnly that I am immeasurably worse off than if I had never touched the Fort Smith matter.

The demand you make upon me now is one which I am entirely unable to comply with. I cannot do it. It is not in my power. You say that "necessity knows no law." That applies to me as well as to you, and when I have reached the point

I am now at I simply fall back on that law. You are as well aware as I am that the bonds are due me under the contract. Could I have these, I could adjust many matters not now in my power, and so long as this and other matters remain unadjusted between us I do not recognize the equity or the lawfulness of your calling on me for a partial settlement. I am ready at any moment to make a full, fair, comprehensive settlement with you on the most liberal terms. I will not be exacting or captious or critical, but am ready and eager to make a broad and generous adjustment with you, and if we can't agree ourselves, we can select a mutual friend who can easily compromise all points of difference between us.

You will, I trust, see that I am disposed to meet you in a spirit of friendly cordiality, and yet with a sense of self-defense that impels me to be frank and expose to you my pecuniary weakness.

With very kind regards to Mrs. Fisher, I am yours truly,

J. G. BLAINE.

W. FISHER, Jr., Esq.

I now pass to a letter dated Augusta, Maine, October 4, 1869; but I read these letters now somewhat in their order. Now, to this letter I ask the attention of the House. In the March session of 1869, the first one at which I was Speaker, the extra session of the Forty-first Congress, a land grant in the State of Arkansas to the Little Rock road was reported. I never remember to have heard of the road until at the last night of the session, when it was up here for consideration. The gentleman in Boston with whom I had relations did not have anything to do with that road for nearly three or four months after that time. It is in the light of that statement that I desire that letter read.

In the autumn, six or eight months afterward, I was looking over the Globe, probably with some little curiosity if not pride, to see the decisions I had made the first five weeks I was Speaker. I had not until then recalled this decision of mine, and when I came across it all the facts came back to me fresh, and I wrote this letter:

[Personal.]

AUGUSTA, MAINE, October 4, 1869.

MY DEAR SIR: I spoke to you a short time ago about a point of interest to your railroad company that occurred at the last session of Congress.

It was on the last night of the session, when the bill renewing the land grant to the State of Arkansas for the Little Rock road was reached, and Julian, of Indiana, chairman of the Public Lands Committee, and, by right, entitled to the floor, attempted to put on the bill, as an amendment, the Frémont El Paso scheme—a scheme probably well known to Mr. Caldwell. The House was thin and the lobby in the Frémont interest had the thing all set up, and Julian's amendment was likely to prevail if brought to a vote. Roots and the other members from Arkansas who were doing their best for their own bill (to which there seemed to be no objection) were in despair, for it was well known that the Senate was hostile to the Frémont scheme, and if the Arkansas bill had gone back to the Senate with Julian's amendment the whole thing would have gone on the table and slept the sleep of death.

In this dilemma Roots came to me to know what on earth he could do under the rules; for he said it was vital to his constituents that the bill should pass. I told him that Julian's amendment was entirely out of order, because not germane; but he had not sufficient confidence in his knowledge of the rules to make the point, but he said General LOGAN was opposed to the Frémont scheme, and would probably make the point. I sent my page to General LOGAN with the suggestion, and he at once made the point. I could not do otherwise than sustain it; and so the bill was freed from the mischievous amendment moved by Julian, and at once passed without objection.

At that time I had never seen Mr. Caldwell, but you can tell him that without knowing it I did him a great favor.

Sincerely yours,

J. G. BLAINE.

W. FISHER, Jr., Esq.,
24 India Street, Boston.

The amendment referred to in that letter will be found in the Congressional Globe of the first session of the Forty-first Congress, page 702. That was before the Boston persons had ever touched the road.

Mr. JULIAN. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill.

And then the Clerk read the whole of the El Paso bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I rise to a question of order, that this amendment is not germane to the pending bill. The bill is to revive a certain land grant and to extend the time, while the amendment is another charter for a Pacific railroad, authorizing the building of bridges, granting the right of way and everything else of the sort. I have been in favor of the pending Arkansas bill, but I do not wish to be made to carry this Pacific railroad bill. I do not think the amendment is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order for two reasons. It is expressly prohibited by the rule that where a land grant is under consideration another grant to a different company shall be entertained. This is not a specific land grant, but it does give away the public land of the United States so far as to give the right of way. Again, by the rules no proposition upon a subject different from that under consideration can be admitted under color of amendment.

Therefore the amendment was out of order on either ground. If it was a land grant, of course it was out of order, because no land grant could be attached to another; and if not a land grant, it was out of order, because it was attempting to introduce a different subject under color of amendment. Therefore in either way the amendment was excluded.

Mr. FRYE. At the time that ruling was made did you have any interest whatever in this railroad?

Mr. BLAINE. Never had, and never expected to have; never remembered to have heard of it at that time.

Mr. FRYE. Did you know or expect any personal friend of yours to have any interest in that road?

Mr. BLAINE. None in the world, not the slightest, never had heard of it. And I want to say, (and the interruption by my colleague [Mr. FRYE] enables me to do so,) that what I did in that case, and every occupant of the chair will bear me out in the statement, is what is very frequently done by the Speaker. It was helping a member in that direction, nothing in it unusual, nothing extraordinary at all. Only by wresting it from its connection and giving it an evil construction could I be said at that time to have had the slightest possible interest in this road. But I never remembered that night to have heard of this road, and it was only three or four months afterward that these Boston parties themselves, with whom I was interested, took any interest in it. On the same day I wrote another letter:

AUGUSTA, October 4, 1869.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: Find inclosed contracts of the parties named in my letter of yesterday. The remaining contracts will be completed as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

I inclose you a part of the Congressional Globe of April 9, containing the point to which I referred at some length in my previous letter of to-day. You will find it of interest to read it over and see what a narrow escape your bill made on that last night of the session. Of course it was my plain duty to make the ruling when the point was once raised. If the Arkansas men had not, however, happened to come to me when at their wit's end and in despair, the bill would undoubtedly have been lost, or at least postponed for a year. I thought the point would interest both you and Caldwell, though occurring before either of you engaged in the enterprise.

I beg you to understand that I thoroughly appreciate the courtesy with which you have treated me in this railroad matter; but your conduct toward me in business matters has always been marked by unbounded liberality in past years, and of course I have naturally come to expect the same of you now. You urge me to make as much as I fairly can out of the arrangement into which we have entered. It is natural that I should do my utmost to this end. I am bothered only by one thing, and that is definite and expressed arrangement with Mr. Caldwell. I am anxious to acquire the interest he has promised me, but I do not get a definite understanding with him as I have with you.

I shall be in Boston in a few days and shall then have an opportunity to talk the matter over fully with you. I am disposed to think that whatever I do with Mr. Caldwell must really be done through you.

Kind regards to Mrs. Fisher.

Sincerely,

J. G. BLAINE.

W. F., Jr., Esq.

Then in July I wrote this letter; they began then to speak of the road:

AUGUSTA, MAINE, July 2*d*, 1869.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: You ask me if am satisfied with the offer you make me of a share in your new railroad enterprise.

Of course I am more than satisfied with the terms of the offer. I think it a most liberal proposition.

If I hesitate at all, it is from considerations no way connected with the character of the offer. Your liberal mode of dealing with me in all our business transactions of the past eight years has not passed without my full appreciation. What I wrote you on the 29th was intended to bring Caldwell to a definite proposition. That was all.

I go to Boston by same train that carries this letter, and will call at your office to-morrow at twelve m. If you don't happen to be in, no matter. Don't put yourself to any trouble about it.

Yours,

J. G. B.

W. FISHER, Jr.

Here is a letter which was written just before that:

AUGUSTA, June 29, 1869.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I thank you for the article from Mr. Lewis. It is good in itself, and will do good. He writes like a man of large intelligence and comprehension.

Your offer to admit me to a participation in the new railroad enterprise is in every respect as generous as I could expect or desire. I thank you very sincerely for it, and in this connection I wish to make a suggestion of a somewhat selfish character. It is this: You spoke of Mr. Caldwell disposing of a share of his interest to me. If he really designs to do so, I wish he would make the proposition definite, so that I could know just what to depend on. Perhaps if he waits till the full development of the enterprise he might grow reluctant to part with the share; and I do not by this mean any distrust of him.

I do not feel that I shall prove a dead-head in the enterprise if I once embark in it. I see various channels in which I know I can be useful.

Very hastily and sincerely, your friend,

J. G. BLAINE.

Mr. FISHER,
India street, Boston.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask my colleague if the trade which is alluded to there between him and Mr. Caldwell, called a share, or scheme, or something of that kind, was ever entered into between him and Mr. Caldwell?

Mr. BLAINE. It was not. That was a proposition to sell me a share in what was called the bed-rock of the road, to let me be interested in the building of it. That transaction was never consummated. All that I ever had to do with the road was this most unfortunate transaction of my life, pecuniarily and otherwise, in buying and selling some of the bonds.

WASHINGTON, May 14, 1870.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I think on the whole I had better not insist on the $40,000 additional bonds at same rate. My engagement was not absolute, and I can back out of it with honor. I would rather do this than seem to be exacting or indelicate.

Besides, I have always felt that Mr. Caldwell manifested the most gentlemanly spirit toward me and designed to treat me handsomely in the end. On the whole, therefore, I shall be better off perhaps to let things remain as they are. But I will follow your judgment in this matter if I can find what it is.

Very hastily,

J. G. BLAINE.

W. FISHER, Esq.

—

AUGUSTA, October 1, 1871.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I am doing all in my power to expedite and hasten the delivery of that stock. The delay has been occasioned by circumstances wholly beyond my control. But I shall reach a conclusion within a few days and make the formal delivery then. It will be an immense relief to get it off my hands, I assure you; far greater than it will be for you to receive it.

You must have strangely misunderstood Mr. Caldwell in regard to his paying those notes. He has paid me in all just $6,000, leaving $19,000 due, which I am carrying here at 8 and 8½ per cent. interest, and which embarrasses me beyond all imagination. I do not really know which way to turn for relief. I am so pressed and hampered. The Little Rock and Fort Smith matter has been a sore experience to me, and if you and Mr. Caldwell between you cannot pay me the $19,000 of borrowed money, I don't know what I shall do. Politically I am charged with being a wealthy man. Personally and pecuniarily I am laboring under the most fearful embarrassments, and the greatest of all these embarrassments is the $19,000 which I handed over under your orders, and not one dollar of which I have received. Of the $25,000 original debt Mr. Caldwell has paid $6,000, and $6,000 only. Can you not give me some hope of relief in this matter? It is cruel beyond measure to leave me so exposed and so suffering.

You know my profound regard for you and my faith in you. We have been friends too long and too intimately to allow a shade between us now.

Yours truly,

J. G. BLAINE.

That will surprise a great many people.

AUGUSTA, MAINE, October 4, 1871.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: You must have strangely misunderstood Mr. Caldwell's statement in regard to his paying me all but $2,500 of the $25,000 borrowed money which I loaned the company through him and you last January. Mr. Caldwell paid me in June $3,500, and in July $2,500 more, accepting at same time a draft for $2,500, July 10, ten days, which draft remains unpaid. I have therefore received but $6,000 from Mr. Caldwell, leaving $19,000 (besides interest) due me to-day.

For this $19,000 I am individually held, and, considering all the circumstances, I think you and Mr. Caldwell should regard it as an honorary debt, and you should not allow me to suffer for money which I raised under the peculiar circumstances attending this. It is a singularly hard and oppressive case, the features and facts of which are familiar to you and Mr. Caldwell.

And then, again, I have been used with positive cruelty in regard to the bonds. I have your positive written contract to deliver me $125,000 land bonds and $32,500 first-mortgage bonds. The money due you on the contract was all paid nearly a year and a half ago. Of this whole amount of bonds due me I have received but $50,000 land grants, leaving $75,000 of those and $32,500 first mortgage still due. I know you are pressed and in trouble, and I don't wish to be too exacting; rather I wish to be very liberal in settlement.

Now, I make this offer: Pay me the cash due on the borrowed money account; call it $19,000 in round numbers, and $40,000 land bonds, and we will call it square.

Mr. Caldwell has repeatedly assured me that I should be paid all the bonds due me under contracts with you, and outside of that $20,000 due me from him. I now voluntarily offer to make a very large reduction if I can have the matter closed.

I am without doubt the only person who has paid money for bonds without receiving them, and I think you will agree with me that I have fared pretty roughly. It would be an immense, immeasurable relief to me if I could receive the money in time to pay off the indebtedness here within the next six weeks, so that I can go to Washington this winter with the load taken off my shoulders. It was placed there in the fullest faith and confidence that you and Mr. Caldwell would not let me suffer. I still cling to that faith and confidence. You will much oblige me by showing this letter to Mr. Caldwell.

Yours, very truly,

J. G. BLAINE.

W. FISHER, Jr., Esq., Boston.

I will inform gentlemen for their benefit, especially those who are so eager to search the records of the circuit court at Little Rock, Arkansas, that it was this $25,000 which I recovered through the courts of Arkansas; I think it was the 1st of May this spring.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1872.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I have your favor of the 12th. I am not prepared to pay any money just now in any direction, being so cramped and pressed that I am absolutely unable to do so. Please send me a copy of the notes of mine held by you with indorsed payments thereon.

I would have been glad, instead of a demand upon me for payment of notes, if you had proposed a general settlement of all matters between us that remain unadjusted. There is still due to me on articles of agreement between us $70,000 in land bonds and $31,000 in first-mortgage bonds, making $101,000 in all. For these bonds the money was paid you nearly three years ago, and every other party agreeing to take bonds on same basis has long since received its full quota. I alone am left hopeless and helpless, so far as I can see. Then there is the $25,000 which I borrowed and paid over, under your orders, to Mr. Pratt, for which I have received no pay. Mr. Caldwell paid me a small fraction of the amount as I supposed, but he now says the money he paid me must be credited to another account on which he was my debtor, and that he denies all responsibility, past, present, and future, on the $25,000, for payment of which I must, he says, look solely to you. I only know that I delivered the money to Mr. Pratt on your written order. I still owe the money in Maine, and am carrying the greater part of it at 8 per cent.—nearly $2,000 per annum steady draw on my resources, which are slender enough without this burden.

Still further, I left with Mr. Mulliken, January, 1871, $6,000 in land-grant bonds Union Pacific Railroad, to be exchanged for a like amount of Little Rock land bonds with Mr. Caldwell, he to change back when I desired. Mr. Caldwell declined to take them, and you took them without any negotiation with me or any authority from me in regard to the matter. You placed the Little Rock land bonds in the envelope, and I have the original envelope with Mr. Mulliken's indorsement thereon of the fact of the delivery to you. Now, I do not complain of your taking the bonds, provided you hold yourself bound to replace them. The worst of the whole matter was that the bonds were only a part mine, and I have had to make good the others to the original owner.

There are other matters to which I would refer; but my letter is already long.

I do not think, under the circumstances, it would be quite wise or kind in you to place any note or notes of mine that may happen to be in your possession in the hands of third parties as collateral.

In any event I ask as a simple favor that you will not do so, and that you will send me by return mail a copy of all obligations of mine in your possession.

Mrs' Blaine joins me in very kind regards to Mrs. Fisher and in the expression of the hope that you may have a pleasant and profitable tour in Europe.

Sincerely yours,

J. G. BLAINE.

WARREN FISHER, Jr., Esq.

There is mentioned in this letter $6,000 of land-grant bonds of the Union Pacific Railroad for which I stood as only part owner; they were only in part mine. As I have started out to make a personal explanation, I want to make a full explanation in regard to this matter. Those bonds were not mine except in this sense: In 1869 a lady who is a member of my family and whose financial affairs I have looked after for many years—many gentlemen will know to whom I refer without my being more explicit—bought on the recommendation of Mr. Samuel Hooper $6,000 in land-grant bonds of the Union Pacific Railroad as they were issued in 1869. She got them on what was called the stockholder's basis; I think it was a very favorable basis on which they distributed these bonds. These $6,000 of land-grant bonds were obtained in that way.

In 1871 the Union Pacific Railroad Company broke down, and these bonds fell so that they were worth about forty cents on the dollar. She was anxious to make herself safe; and I had so much confidence in the Fort Smith land bonds that I proposed to her to make an exchange. The six bonds were in my possession; and I had previously advanced money to her for certain purposes and held a part of these bonds as security for that advance. The bonds in that sense, and in that sense only, were mine—that they were security for the loan which I had made. They were all literally hers; they were all sold finally on her account—not one of them for me. I make this statement in order to be perfectly fair.

I have now read those fifteen letters, the whole of them. The House and the country now know all there is in them. They are dated and they correspond precisely with Mulligan's memorandum, which I have here. I keep this memorandum as a protection to myself; for it is very valuable as showing the identity of the letters in every respect.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman allow that memorandum to be read?

Mr. BLAINE. Wait just a moment. There was a contract also among these—the same that was put in evidence by Mulligan—of the parties in Maine who bought Little Rock bonds. I only refer to that because it is the same in every respect with that which has already been made public. He also testified to something as being among Mr. Fisher's papers about the Northern Pacific Railroad. That makes eighteen papers. I will put them all in; let them all go.

Mr. HALE. Does the exhibit which the gentleman has made cover every paper of every kind whatever that came from Mulligan?

Mr. BLAINE. Every solitary scrap and "scrimption," as the children say. (These papers will be appended in a foot-note to these remarks.)

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman from Maine now respond to the request I made, that the memorandum of Mr. Mulligan be read at the Clerk's desk?

Mr. BLAINE. O, yes; I shall be glad to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No. 1. Oct. 4, '69, relating to debate in the House and Blaine's ruling, and favors he was to receive from C. for pressing bill extending time on first 20 miles.

Mr. BLAINE. This is what Mr. Mulligan puts down as the substance of the letters.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

No. 2. Oct. 4, '69, on same subject.

No. 3 June 27, '69, thanking Fisher for admitting him to participation in L. & F. R. R., and urging him to make call; say how much he would give him, and for what. He knew he would be no dead-head, but would render valuable assistance.

No. 4. July 25, '69, on the same subject.

No. 5. Sep. 5, '69, contract with different parties.

No. 6. Contract with Northern Pacific.

No. 7. May 14, '70, Caldwell designs to treat him handsomely in the end.

No. 8. Oct. 24, '71, Fisher to Blaine, urging settlement of N. P. R. account, $25,000.

Mr. BLAINE. There was no such letter in the package. The letter he speaks of seems to have been a letter from Mr. Fisher to myself. There was no such letter in the package; and the numbers he gives do not call for it. There are fifteen letters and three pieces of paper. At any rate that was not a letter from me.

The Clerk continued the reading as follows:

No. 9. Oct. 4, '71, Blaine admits that there was $6,000 paid on the $25,000 loan and to have received $50,000 from Fisher.

No. 10. Oct. 1, '71, admits being paid $6,000 on account of loan.

Mr. BLAINE sold sundry parties $125,000 in first-mortgage bonds, and common stock $125,000, preferred stock $125,000; for which was paid by them $125,000 cash; and Mr BLAINE was to receive for his share of the transaction $125,000 in land-grant bonds, and $32,500 in first-mortgage bonds. Total, $157,500.

Now, calling land and first-mortgage bonds equal in value, and stock valueless for $125,000 plus $157,000 equals $282,000 bonds; cash $25,000 equals $44^{29}/_{113}$%.

Mr. BLAINE also sold sundry parties $63,000 bonds and $56,000 stock for cash $43,150.

$15,150 less cash paid Mr. BLAINE for his share in the transaction.

$28,000 net cash received by Mr. Fisher for the above $63,000 bonds and $56,000 stock, equal $44^{28}/_{63}$ per cent. for the bonds, calling stock nothing.

Mr. BLAINE, in final settlement, Sept. 21, 1872, claimed only $101,000 bonds due Dec. letter, (Dec. 3, '72;) he previously received $61,000, and was to look to Caldwell for balance.

Sept. 21, '72, received $40,000.

No. 11. Apl. 13, 1872, saying there was $101,000 bonds due him, and claiming that there was due him on Union Pacific bonds exchanged $6,000, and admitting that there were some of them his own.

No. 12. Apl. 18, 1872, admits the $64,000 sale bonds, and paid the money over in forty-eight hours to Maine parties.

Mr. BLAINE. See the abstract that he makes:

Admits the $64,000 sale bonds, and paid the money over in forty-eight hours to Maine parties.

There is not a word said about it in the letter.

The Clerk continued and concluded the reading, as follows:

No. 13. Aug. 9, '72, as dry financially as a contribution-box, and borrowing money to defray his campaign expenses.

No. 14. Aug. 31, '72, about settlement.

No. 15. May 26, '64, says he was a partner in the Spencer Rifle Co.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have any gentleman who desires to be frank examine these letters, as they will be printed in the RECORD, and see the obvious intent and animus of Mulligan in making up this memorandum; I will not further comment on it. I desire to call attention to the fact that these are the letters for which I was ready to commit "suicide," and do sundry and divers other desperate things in order to acquire them.

I do not wish to detain the House, but I have one or two more observations to make. The specific charge that went to the committee of which the honorable gentleman from Virginia is chairman, so far as it affects me, was whether I was a party in interest to the sixty-four-thousand-dollar transaction; and I submit that up to this time there has not been one particle of proof before the committee sustaining that charge. Gentlemen have said what they had heard somebody else say, and generally when that somebody else was brought on the stand it appeared that he did not say it at all. Colonel Thomas A. Scott swore very positively and distinctly under the most rigid cross-examination all about it. Let me call attention to that letter of mine which Mulligan says refers to that. I ask your attention, gentlemen, as closely as if you were a jury while I show the absurdity of that statement. It is in evidence that with the exception of a small fraction the bonds which were sold to parties in Maine were first-mortgage bonds. It is in evidence over and over again that the bonds which went to the Union Pacific road were land-grant bonds. Therefore it is a moral impossibility the bonds taken up to Maine should have gone to the Union Pacific Railroad. They were of different series, different kinds, different colors, everything different, as different as if not issued within a thousand miles of each other. So on its face it is shown it could not be so.

There has not been, I say, one positive piece of testimony in any direction. They sent to Arkansas to get some hearsay about bonds. They sent to Boston to get some hearsay. Mulligan was contradicted by Fisher, and Atkins and Scott swore directly against him. Morton, of Morton, Bliss & Co., never heard my name in the matter. Carnegee, who negotiated the note, never heard my name in that connection. Rollins said it was one of the intangible rumors he spoke of as floating in the air. Gentlemen who have lived any time in Washington need not be told that intangible rumors get considerable circulation here; and if a man is to be held accountable before the bar of public opinion for intangible rumors, who in the House will stand?

Now, gentlemen, those letters I have read were picked out of correspondence extending over fifteen years. The man did his worst, the very worst he could, out of the most intimate business correspondence of my life. I ask gentlemen if any of you, and I ask it with some feeling, can stand a severer scrutiny of or more rigid investigation into your private correspondence? That was the worst he could do.

There is one piece of testimony wanting. There is but one thing to close the complete circle of evidence. There is but one witness whom I could not have, to whom the Judiciary Committee, taking into account the great and intimate connection he had with the transaction, was asked to send a cable dispatch, and I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if that dispatch was sent to him?

Mr. FRYE. Who?

Mr. BLAINE. To Josiah Caldwell.

Mr. KNOTT. I will reply to the gentleman that Judge HUNTON and myself have both endeavored to get Mr. Caldwell's address and have not yet got it.

Mr. BLAINE. Has the gentleman from Kentucky received a dispatch from Caldwell?

Mr. KNOTT. I will explain that directly.

Mr. BLAINE. I want a categorical answer.

Mr. KNOTT. I have received a dispatch purporting to be from Mr. Caldwell.

Mr. BLAINE. You did?

Mr. KNOTT. How did you know I got it?

Mr. BLAINE. When did you get it? I want the gentleman from Kentucky to answer when he got it.

Mr. KNOTT. Answer my question first.

Mr. BLAINE. I never heard of it until yesterday.

Mr. KNOTT. How did you hear it?

Mr. BLAINE. I heard you got a dispatch last Thursday morning at eight o'clock from Josiah Caldwell completely and absolutely exonerating me from this charge, and you have suppressed it. [Protracted applause upon the floor and in the galleries.] I want the gentleman to answer. [After a pause.] Does the gentleman from Kentucky decline to answer?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend until order is restored. The doorkeepers will remove from the Hall those not entitled to the floor; and the galleries will be cleared if this applause is repeated. So long as the present occupant is in the chair that rule will be enforced.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to offer the following resolution as a matter of privilege in this connection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will suspend until order is restored. The Chair is not responsible for this disorder, and the doorkeepers have failed to keep out men not authorized to come into the Hall. There are in this Hall those not members double the number of members. The doorkeepers will enforce the rules of the House. Those who are not entitled to the floor will leave it. Members of the House will be seated. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Maine will proceed.

Mr. BLAINE. I want the gentleman from Kentucky to answer me, or rather to answer the House, that question.

Mr. KNOTT. I will answer that when I get ready. Go on with your speech.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report forthwith to the House whether in acting under the resolution of the House of May 2, relative to the purchase by the Pacific Railroad Company of seventy-five land-grant bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad, it has sent any telegram to one Josiah Caldwell, in Europe, and received a reply thereto. And, if so, to report said telegram and reply, with the date when said reply was received, and the reasons why the same has been suppressed.

Mr. BLAINE. After that add, "or whether they have heard from Josiah Caldwell in any way." Just add those words, "and what." Give it to me and I will modify it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the modification of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

And whether they have heard from the said Josiah Caldwell, in any other way, and to what effect.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Kentucky in responding probably, I think, from what he said, intended to convey the idea I had some illegitimate knowledge of how that dispatch was obtained. I have had no communication with Josiah Caldwell. I have had no means of knowing from the telegraph office whether the telegram was received. But I tell the gentleman from Kentucky that murder will out.

Mr. GLOVER. That is true.

Mr. BLAINE. And secrets will leak. And I tell the gentleman now, and I am prepared to state to this House, that at eight o'clock on last Thursday morning, or thereabouts, the gentleman from Kentucky received and receipted for a message addressed to him from Josiah Caldwell, in London, entirely corroborating and substantiating the statements of Thomas A. Scott, which he had just read in the New York papers, and entirely exculpating me from the charges which I am bound to believe from the suppression of that report the gentleman is anxious to fasten upon me.

I call the previous question on that resolution.

[Protracted applause from the floor and the galleries.]

Foot-note.—Papers I, J, and K, found with the letters surrendered by Mulligan, are hereto appended. The papers relating to the Northern Pacific road are not remembered by Mr. BLAINE; the handwriting is not known to him, and he can recall no connection with them in any respect. They are, however, quite unimportant.

I.

Cost of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 share, $466,667, is	$58,333
$\frac{1}{2}$ of $416,667, to receive in bonds, is at par $52,083, at 90 c., would be	46,875
	11,458

for which you will get $\frac{1}{2}$ of 541,234 stock, which is $67,654; and when the road is finished you will get $\frac{1}{2}$ of 3,416,708, which is 427,088 in stock, beside your interest in the Land Company, which is proportionate. Bonds at par would make the above amount of stock cost about $6,250.

J.

Whereas, under certain agreements with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, dated May 20, 1869, and January 1, 1870, Messrs. Jay Cooke & Co. become fiscal agents for the negotiations of the securities of said company upon the terms therein stated; and whereas, under said agreements, Jay Cooke & Co. become possessed of twelve of the twenty-four interests constituting the company and representing its franchises; and whereas Jay Cooke & Co. for the purpose of furnishing funds under their agreements as fiscal agents, for the construction and equipment of the road from its intersection with the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad to the Red River, near the mouth of the Cheyenne, a distance of about two hundred and twenty-five miles, forming a complete road from Lake Superior to the Red River, have offered to the subscribers for the first five millions of dollars of the first-mortgage bonds of the company the following terms, namely:

The subscribers to purchase of Jay Cooke & Co. the said bonds bearing 7.3 gold interest at par, $5,000,000, and twelve interests in the company at $50,000 each, $600,000, amounting in all to $5,600,000; or, say, twelve shares of $466,667 each to be paid for in installments, extending through about fifteen months, as the funds may be required by the company, for which each share shall receive as follows:

Bonds, one-twelfth of $5,000,000		$416,667
Preliminary issue of stock	$93,400
Twenty per cent. stock commissions on bonds	83,334
		476,734

and $40,500 stock upon completion of each section of twenty-five miles of the road.

Thus upon completion to Red River, estimating the distance at two hundred and twenty-five miles, (nine sections of twenty-five miles each,) each share will have received nine times $40,500, equal to $364,500, in addition to previously stated $176,734, say $541,234 stock; and this proportionate issue continuing with the progress of the road, upon completion to the Pacific each share will have received in all $416,667 bonds and $3 416,708 stock, (the fractions in all cases being adjusted in even figures,) and the entire five millions of bonds will thus carry with them a total of $41,000,500 stock.

It is designed in addition to organize a private land company for the purchase and sale of desirable town sites and other valuable lands, from which large profits are anticipated; the interests in such company to be held in the same proportion with the subscriptions to the present agreement and the funds required to be assessed correspondingly from time to time, of course, with the consent of the parties.

Upon the foregoing terms, we, the undersigned, subscribe the shares and portions of shares set opposite our names, to be paid for in installments as called, the bonds to carry interest from date of payments.

It is also hereby agreed by the subscribers whose names are hereby annexed that they will leave with Jay Cooke & Co. their proxies on all stock acquired under the terms of this agreement, and that they will not dispose of any of the first-mortgage bonds subscribed for unless with the consent of said Jay Cooke & Co., or until such sales shall cease to interfere with the plans of the fiscal agents for providing of necessary funds for the completion and equipment of the whole line of road.

K.

BOSTON, September 5, 1869.

Whereas I have this day entered into agreements with A. & P. Coburn, and sundry other parties resident in Maine, to deliver to them certain specified amounts of the common stock, preferred stock, and first-mortgage bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company, upon said parties paying to me the aggregate sum of $130,000, which several agreements are witnessed by J. G. Blaine and delivered to said parties by said Blaine:

Now this agreement witnesses, that upon the due fulfillment of the several contracts referred to, by the payment of the $130,000, and for other valuable considerations, the receipt of which is acknowledged, I hereby agree to deliver to J. G. Blaine, or order, as the same come into my hands as assignee of the contract for building the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad, the following securities, namely: Of the land bonds 7 per cents, $130,000; of the first-mortgage bonds, gold, sixes, $32,500. And these $130,000 of land bonds and $32,500 of first-mortgage bonds thus agreed to be delivered to said Blaine are over and above the securities agreed to be delivered by Warren Fisher, jr., assignee to the parties making the contracts, which parties, with the several amounts to be paid by each and the securities to be received by each, are named in a memorandum on the next page of this sheet.

And it is further agreed, that in the event of any one of said parties failing to pay the amount stipulated, then the amount of securities to be delivered to said Blaine under this agreement shall be reduced in the same proportion that the deficit of payment bears to the aggregate amount agreed to be paid.

WARREN FISHER, JR., Assignee.

Witness:
ALVAN R. FLANDERS.
[Stamp.]

Parties contracting with Warren Fisher, jr., assignee, as referred to in preceding agreement.

	To pay.	To receive.
	Cash.	Common stock.	Preferred stock.	First-mortgage bonds.
1. A. & P. Coburn	$50,000	$50,000	$50,000	$50,000
2. Peter F. Sanborn	10,000	10,000	10,000	10,000
3. Anson P. Morrill	10,000	10,000	10,000	10,000
4. Ralph C. Johnson	10,000	10,000	10,000	10,000
5. P. R. Hazeltine	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
6. C. B. Hazeltine	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
7. N. P. Monroe	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
8. A. W. Johnson	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
9. H. H. Johnson	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
10. Philo Hersey	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
11. Lot M. Morrill	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
12. A. B. Farwell	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
13. Joseph H. Williams	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
14. Charles M. Bailey	5,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
	130,000	130,000	130,000	130,000

In addition to the above there are to be delivered to J. G. Blaine's order of the land bonds in 7s, currency, $130,000; first-mortgage bonds, 6s, gold, $32,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. KNOTT rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine insist on the demand for the previous question?

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman from Kentucky desires to speak, I do not insist on it. But I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine, not yielding the floor, insists on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the resolution is only in order on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BLAINE. O, no; I hold most decidedly, and I am sure the honorable occupant of the chair will sustain me in so holding, that the resolution embraces a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am making no point against the resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the gentleman will not take the ground that this is not a privileged resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not making the point; but it seems to me there is the same right to call for a report on any matter which may have been referred to that committee.

Mr. BLAINE. No, sir. I say that this involves the good faith and the honor of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah! that is a different matter. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] rose, as I understood, with a desire to submit some explanation. If the previous question should now be seconded would that exclude the gentleman from Kentucky from that privilege?

Mr. BLAINE. I am quite willing that the gentleman from Kentucky should be heard. I do not want to stop him, but I wish a vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine insists on a vote on his motion for the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not insist on that now. I insist on the right to call the previous question, but not to the exclusion of the gentleman from Kentucky from speaking.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Maine does not yield the floor the Chair has no other alternative than to put the question on the motion for the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I will yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. BLAINE. I know that the honorable Speaker will of course recognize me at the proper time hereafter to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide that when the time comes.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Maine must see the fairness of allowing the gentleman from Kentucky to make an explanation.

Mr. BLAINE. I do; and I withdraw for the present the motion for the previous question, knowing that the Chair will recognize me hereafter to renew the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not decide that now.

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair could not do otherwise.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I reserve the right to make the point of order on the competency of the resolution at this time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not too late. Does the gentleman from Missouri make that point of order?

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been repeatedly decided by Speaker KERR that a resolution following an explanation of this kind is in order. That decision has been made several times this session.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, I desire to say a word. When I rose a while ago my motive might have been misunderstood. I intended to say if the question asked by the gentleman from Maine was a proper question it ought to be answered, and I intended to demand myself that it should be answered.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The question, if a proper one, ought to be answered, and I have no doubt it will be when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] sees fit.

Mr. KNOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HUNTON. I claim the indulgence of the House for a very brief period.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs to state to the House that the doorkeepers report to him that it is utterly impossible to clear this Hall unless the Capitol police be called in. The doorkeepers are instructed to call in the police, if necessary, and clear the Hall of outsiders.

Mr. ATKINS. Has the Sergeant-at-Arms any duties in this matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms is bound by the rules to assist in that duty. The officers of the House will also clear the cloak-room of those who are not entitled to the privileges of the Hall.

After a pause of some minutes,

Mr. KASSON said: I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is that the House be in order.

Mr. KASSON. The House is in more disorder than when the Chair suspended proceedings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take care that the regular order is called at the proper time. Gentlemen who are in the cloak-room and not entitled to the privileges of the Hall will retire. The Chair has given the order and he intends that it shall be enforced; but the order has not yet been enforced, and the Chair is utterly powerless unless the doorkeepers assist. There are many persons on the floor who are here without authority and who refuse to go out. [After a pause, during which order in the Hall was restored.] The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the subcommittee to whom allusion has been frequently made in the statement of the gentleman from Maine, to detain the House to make a short statement of the matters to which he has alluded, and I trust that in doing this I shall speak as a member of the committee, and tell calmly, dispassionately, fairly, what has occurred before that subcommittee of which the gentleman from Maine complains.

I beg leave to say in advance that the House has witnessed this morning a remarkable, not to say an unexampled scene, a scene which may have its example in the history of legislation, but if so, it has escaped my observation and reading on the subject.

During the present session of this House two resolutions were adopted, each of which ordered an investigation, each of which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of this House, and each of which was referred to a subcommittee consisting of Mr. ASHE of North Carolina, Mr. LAWRENCE of Ohio, and myself as chairman of the committee, and before the committee has finished the taking of testimony, before that committee has reached a conclusion, an effort is made by the gentleman supposed to be mostly concerned in these investigations to take the consideration of these questions from the organ of the House and report upon them in person. I need not remind the House what sort of a report would come from that committee if it were allowed to be made by the gentleman from Maine. But I say that after this House has ordered an investigation and has committed that investigation to a committee of the House it is not only unexampled, but entirely against legislative proceedings for a gentleman to rise and undertake to anticipate what the conclusion of that committee shall be and to state what the action of that committee has been.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the action of this committee, I will endeavor to follow some of the points made by the gentleman from Maine, and if I state any of the facts wrong I hope either of the gentlemen of that committee will correct me, because I desire to state nothing but what is accurately true in the statement I shall submit to the House.

The first point made by the gentleman from Maine was that it very soon was discovered that the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] was aimed at him, although his name was not mentioned in the resolution, and that he learned this from the proceedings of the subcommittee.

I beg to say to the House that the subcommittee and its chairman first learned from the gentleman from Maine that he was the man aimed at. He does not forget that after the resolution of Mr. TARBOX was referred to the subcommittee at his instance I had an interview with him in the committee-room of the Committee of Ways and Means, and in that interview the gentleman from Maine spoke of it as a resolution affecting him. Not only that, but he expressed himself satisfied and pleased with the personnel of the subcommittee, although two of them were confederates. And at the instance of the gentleman from Maine a day was appointed upon which the subcommittee was to enter upon its duties. And yet he tells this House that he learned from the subcommittee that he was the party to be investigated, and not the Union Pacific Railroad, as set out in the resolution of Mr. TARBOX. The first I heard either from a member of the House or a member of the committee on the subject was from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] himself, that the resolution referred to him, and he wanted the investigation commenced on a given day, and proceeded with, with as much dispatch as possible from that day. I told the gentleman from Maine that the investigation I should undertake should be as kindly as I could make it, and it should be as fairly conducted as I could conduct it, but as thorough as it could possibly be.

I acceded to his wish that the investigation should not commence until a day not very distant in the future, I think about ten days off. The reason why he did not want the investigation to begin at once was that he wanted to go to Philadelphia during what is known as the Centennial week, and did not want the investigation to commence until the following week. This request was granted with a great deal of pleasure and on the very day indicated by him, the very day he requested the investigation to begin, it was begun, and from that day to this there has been no hour that the committee could devote to this investigation that has not been devoted to it, except when the gentleman himself prevented it, and I say that more than two weeks' time has been lost to this committee because of the conduct of the gentleman from Maine; I do not mean to attach any blame to him; the first was the postponement until the week after the Centennial, and the next was a week of indisposition on his part, and even this morning I rose at the hour of four o'clock to come to this city, a distance of sixty miles, to renew the investigation and get through with it as soon as possible. The gentleman from Maine and his friends were not present, and the investigation had to be postponed. And yet he tells the House that the investigation is "prolonged, prolonged, prolonged," and seeks to make the impression on the House that it is the purpose of the committee to prolong this investigation for some sinister purpose. Why he might just as well have said that we desired to postpone it until after the 14th of June, and every member of the committee will bear me witness to every word I say, that the committee worked in season and out of season; sitting on one occasion nearly the entire day in order to get through with this investigation before the 14th day of June, and every delay that has occurred, every day when the committee was not able to be in session, it was either because the gentleman from Maine was absent or requested an adjournment. I will not say "every day," for it is possible that there were one or two days when we had a meeting of the full committee, or something of that kind. But the delay has been at his instance, has been caused by him; for this subcommittee has worked as (I say) no other subcommittee of this House has ever worked. So much for the prolonging of this investigation.

I had no desire, God knows, to prolong it. I had no desire to enter upon it; but it was a duty imposed upon me by the House, and I intended to discharge that duty, as I have endeavored to discharge every such duty here, with fairness, impartiality, and a due regard to my duty to the House of Representatives.

But the gentleman says that when we had been examining witnesses under what is known as the Tarbox resolution, to his surprise he found that I claimed, or the committee claimed, that they had jurisdiction to investigate certain Pacific railroads, and that he was to be involved in the investigation of those Pacific railroads as well as under the Tarbox resolution.

Now, the gentleman cannot have forgotten what occurred in that connection; and, not having forgotten it, it was his duty in fairness to have stated it to this House. He knows that this resolution of Mr. LUTTRELL, of California, directing an investigation into all the Pacific railroads that had received subsidies from the Government, was alluded to almost from the start of the investigation by the subcommittee; therefore he could not have been surprised in the least to learn in the last day or two that there was to be an investigation under the Luttrell resolution.

I desire to state specifically what occurred on this subject a day or two ago in the committee-room. I was asked, "Is there to be an investigation under this Luttrell resolution?" I said to Mr. BLAINE, "The resolution will require an investigation that will take months at the hands of this committee. You have expressed a desire that all the investigation touching you shall be done speedily and concluded as soon as possible. If you desire it, I will not take up any other road except the Northern Pacific and the Kansas Pacific, because as to these two railroads your name has been mentioned as involved in an unpleasant way; and for your sake, that you may get a report before the tedious examinations of the affairs of all these Pacific railroads, we will take up first the matter which touches you, if you desire it." Mr. BLAINE said that he desired us to go on.

Yet he is very much surprised after all these things occurred in the committee-room. He is surprised to find that an investigation is to be undertaken by this subcommittee which involves an examination in these specific railroads, and it is to be prolonged, prolonged, prolonged, when we agreed for his sake and at his instance to skip all the other inquiries under the Luttrell resolution, until we had disposed of those which seemed to attach to Mr. BLAINE.

Mr. FRYE. Will my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. HUNTON] allow me to ask him a question in relation to that which he has just mentioned?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Did not Mr. BLAINE, in that last conversation, object that under the resolution the committee had no jurisdiction of a stock transaction between two individuals?

Mr. HUNTON. Is that your only question?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer it. I think it very likely he did. And I think also that if we had left the question of jurisdiction to Mr. BLAINE there would have been a great many questions ruled out. [Laughter.] But the committee had to decide the question of jurisdiction for themselves, and they decided that they had jurisdiction to go on.

Mr. FRYE. I will ask you——

Mr. HUNTON. I do not desire to be interrupted any further, if the gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. FRYE. Very well.

Mr. HUNTON. I say that there was no ground for the surprise of the gentleman, and instead of bad faith on the part of this committee in undertaking this investigation into the affairs of the Pacific railroads, it was our bounden duty as the organ of the House to undertake it, and to do what we could, whether we got through this session or not. And for the purpose of bringing to a close the matters which seemed to bear upon Mr. BLAINE—and this House and the country knows that there have been publications which drew from him certainly once if not twice a personal explanation on this floor—for the purpose of getting at them speedily and getting a report into this House as soon as we could, I said: "If you wish, Mr. BLAINE, we will not go into all these other roads, but take up the Northern Pacific Road and the Kansas Pacific Road, because there is connected with those two roads a charge against you." Now, if there is anything unfair in that I cannot see it, and I guarantee that this House cannot see it.

Then about these letters; and that I believe is the gist of his complaint before this House. In order to set that question before the House properly, I desire to state it as it arose in the committee-room on the evidence. And I beg leave to state here, before I go from this point, that every witness that has been examined before the Committee, whether his testimony was made in favor of Mr. BLAINE or against him, was summoned by the committee without any suggestion from Mr. BLAINE or any of his friends. He did on one occasion send me a memorandum of witnesses to summon, and my reply on the back of the memorandum was that every one of those witnesses had already been summoned (or were ordered to be summoned) by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Therefore, every witness who has appeared before the committee, under either resolution, was summoned by the committee without any suggestion from Mr. BLAINE or any of his friends.

Among these witnesses appeared Mr. James Mulligan, of the city of Boston, a gentleman whose character is unimpeached and, according to the testimony, unimpeachable. Mr. Fisher was put on the stand to state some things differently from Mr. Mulligan, and he was asked the question: "What sort of a man is James Mulligan?" He was put upon the stand by Mr. BLAINE, and, after his examination-in-chief had ended, he was asked this question. His reply was substantially, if not literally: "He is as good as any man I ever knew, or the best man I ever knew." Mr. Atkins, another witness introduced for the same purpose, said substantially the same thing of Mr. Mulligan. I desire to say to this House in the beginning that Mr. Mulligan stood before that committee with a reputation for truth and veracity equal to that of any gentleman on this floor. What may be his character I know not; I never saw him until he appeared in the committee-room.

Mr. FRYE. Will my colleague on the committee pardon me one moment?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. From the gentleman's statement in relation to these questions as to the character of Mr. Mulligan, the impression might go out that Mr. BLAINE asked those questions. Will the gentleman please state whether or not he, as chairman of the committee, asked them?

Mr. HUNTON. I did, sir.

Mr. FRYE. That is all.

Mr. HUNTON. And the witness answered just as I have stated. I wanted to know what sort of a witness I was dealing with. I put the question for the information of the committee. This witness, who had been summoned from Boston, was put upon the stand, and I did not know what he would testify to. If anybody had ever informed me what Mr. Mulligan's testimony would be or what it would relate to I had forgotten it entirely. In the course of his examination the first day Mr. Mulligan was testifying very quietly; there was no excitement in the committee-room at all when he happened to mention that he had in his possession certain letters written by Mr. BLAINE to Warren Fisher, jr. The mention of these letters seemed to have a remarkable effect upon Mr. BLAINE, for in a moment or two afterward he whispered to Mr. LAWRENCE, the republican member of that committee, "Move an adjournment." It so happened that I heard the suggestion. Mr. LAWRENCE got up with great solemnity on his countenance and said, "Mr. Chairman, I am very sick and I hope the committee will adjourn." [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWRENCE rose.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the gentleman is better to-day.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will my colleague on the committee allow me to ask a question or make a statement?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will ask my colleague whether, when I went into the committee-room on that morning, the first thing I said to him before I had spoken to anybody else, was not that I had been exceedingly sick during the night? [Laughter.] I had been to Baltimore on the day before; and though I had not indulged in anything that would necessarily make me sick, yet I was extremely sick, so much so that it was with difficulty I sat there at all. I said simply what was true when I said that I was extremely unwell; and as the gentleman knows I have been quite unwell ever since. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. What time was it when it was proposed to adjourn?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It was then half past twelve o'clock, half an hour beyond the time when the committee usually adjourns to attend the sittings of the House. Now, my friend says that he heard the remark of Mr. BLAINE asking me to move to adjourn. It was not necessary that I should state what Mr. BLAINE had said to me.

Mr. HUNTON. Nobody asked you to do so.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman says he heard it; but it was not necessary that I should state every ground for asking the adjournment.

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly not.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It was sufficient that I deemed it necessary to ask an adjournment. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman has stated the matter exactly as it occurred. He did come in in the morning sick.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTON. But he went to work in a most vigorous style for two hours.

Mr. LAWRENCE. But I became exhausted.

Mr. HUNTON. When those letters were mentioned the gentleman became sick, and somebody else sicker. [Laughter.] And the motion to adjourn was made at his suggestion.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It ought to be said in justice to Mr. BLAINE that so far as anything said by him to me could indicate his purpose, the motion to adjourn suggested by him was not caused by any fear of what was going on.

Mr. HUNTON. I never intimated such a thing. The gentleman is raising men of straw just to knock them over. But I do say that after these letters were mentioned incidentally by Mr. Mulligan, the reference being brought out without a question, (for I had not the remotest conception that he had any such letters in his possession,) the gentleman from Ohio did rise, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, and move an adjournment; and he put it upon the ground that he was sick, and we had been sitting over our time anyhow. These are the exact facts. Now, why the motion to adjourn was suggested to the gentleman, and whether he was absolutely taken sicker at that moment, I cannot tell and do not propose to inquire; but an adjournment was had. We did not like to keep our colleague there in misery and distress; on account of his sickness and because we had sat over the hour which we were allowed to sit, an adjournment was had. The committee adjourned until the next morning at ten o'clock; and when we met, James Mulligan was put upon the stand again to complete his examination, which had been interrupted by the motion to adjourn. He was asked a question which did not look to the letters, which had no reference to them whatever. He said: "Mr. Chairman, before I proceed to answer that question, I desire to make a personal explanation painful to myself."

I will commence at the beginning of his personal explanation. I will state it substantially as he did, and if I err in any important particular I trust I will be corrected. Upon the evening of his first arrival in the city of Washington, before I knew he was in the city, he and Warren Fisher were waited on by Mr. BLAINE. They were invited to the house of Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Mulligan said, "Mr. BLAINE I decline to go to your house; I do not want to talk about what I have been brought here for. I desire to take the stand to-morrow untrammeled by conversation of any kind with anybody." Warren Fisher went to the house of Mr. BLAINE. Twice Mr. BLAINE sent a messenger down to induce Mulligan to come to his house. Mr. Mulligan still declined, and presently Mr. BLAINE and Warren Fisher came into the hotel where Mulligan stopped in the city of Washington, (the Riggs House.) Mr. Mulligan was in the barber-shop undergoing the pleasant operation of shaving, or about to undergo it, and Mr. BLAINE followed him into the barber-shop and commenced to entreat and earnestly to request that Mulligan would give up those letters which BLAINE had addressed to Warren Fisher. Mulligan declined to do it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman——

A MEMBER. I object to interruption.

Mr. FRYE. I ask my colleague of the committee if I may interrupt him?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, you may.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman is now stating evidence, and I desire him to be very careful, because, as I remember it, there is no testimony whatever showing or tending to show that Mr. BLAINE, in a barber-shop, in the presence of the barber, entreated Mulligan for those letters.

Mr. HUNTON. It matters not where he entreated him. I am under the impression it was there, but I am not certain.

Mr. FRYE. The letters were not read in any barber-shop.

Mr. HUNTON. I will take him out of the barber-shop. It does not matter in the least where the entreaty was made. Mr. BLAINE entreated him. I give you now the substance of the language of the witness. He entreated him with tears in his eyes, going down on his knees, or almost on his knees——

Mr. FRYE. In the barber-shop?

Mr. HUNTON. I did not say in the barber-shop. I do not care where it was. It was in his room, I believe; but he made this entreaty. The witness said, "with tears in his eyes, almost, if not quite, on his knees;" "'if you do not deliver those letters to me, I am ruined and my family disgraced.'" Of course I mean to be understood here that the witness meant that BLAINE's family would be disgraced through the ruin of Mr. BLAINE. He also threatened to commit suicide. Mr. Mulligan refused to deliver the letters. He said: "Mr. BLAINE, I see by the evening paper that my testimony given to the committee to-day is to be assailed"—to use his own word, "impugned"—"and in case my character and testimony are assailed, I want those letters to justify me in my testimony before the committee." Mr. BLAINE asked: "Do you suppose I am going to assail you?" The witness said: "If you do not assail me others may, and my character is too dear to me not to vindicate it if I can." Mr. BLAINE then tried politics with him, and he asked the witness: "Are you content with your station?" To this Mulligan said he would like to improve it if he could. Mr. BLAINE said: "Would you like a political office?" Mulligan replied he did not like politics, and did not care about it. Mr. BLAINE then asked how he would like a foreign consulship? He said he would not like it; and after that BLAINE said: "Let me see the letters to peruse them." The witness objected, but he said finally, upon a pledge of honor from Mr. BLAINE that he would return the letters, they were given him to read. He read them over once or twice, and returned them to the witness. Again he made an effort to obtain those letters, and Mr. Mulligan left the company and went into his room. In a short time Mr. BLAINE followed him into his room, and this scene occurred between the parties without any witnesses: Mr. BLAINE again endeavored to get possession of the letters. The witness again declined to deliver them. The witness says that Mr. BLAINE said: "I want to reread those letters again, and I want to have them for that purpose."

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask my colleague a question there.

Mr. HUNTON. Very well.

Mr. FRYE. I want to call his attention——

Mr. HUNTON. I trust you will, if I misstated the testimony.

Mr. FRYE. The impression I received from the statement just made is that this effort and threat to commit suicide was in the presence of witnesses.

Mr. HUNTON. No; I did not say it was.

Mr. FRYE. It was not?

Mr. HUNTON. It was not.

Mr. FRYE. Do not you know he testified it was to himself?

Mr. HUNTON. I think he did; that it was to himself alone. He asked the witness to let him see the letters again; and the witness said that on a like pledge of honor to return them to him he delivered these letters over a second time to Mr. BLAINE to read and return them; and when Mr. BLAINE had read them and kept them a short time he refused to deliver them. The witness became excited, demanded his letters, and followed Mr. BLAINE into the room of Mr. Atkins on the floor below, and there demanded his letters from Mr. BLAINE; and he not only demanded his letters, but he demanded the private memorandum which the witness himself had made to use on his examination before the committee to refresh his memory. This was taken by Mr. BLAINE, and this also he refused to deliver.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman pardon me again for interrupting him?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Do I understand the gentleman as stating that Mr. Mulligan testified that he demanded in addition to the letters the private memorandum?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir. He said that Mr. BLAINE took it when the letters were handed to him. The memorandum was with the letters when they were handed to him.

Mr. FRYE. It was in the bundle?

Mr. HUNTON. That may be.

Mr. FRYE. Was it so?

Mr. HUNTON. I think it was. And when Mr. BLAINE refused to deliver the letters he refused also to deliver the memorandum.

Now this was the statement made by the witness before the committee charged with the investigation of these subjects. Who has a right to complain? The gentleman from Maine or the committee? Who has a right to complain? The gentleman from Maine or this House? Here was a witness summoned from Boston. He did not appear as a volunteer in the case. He came under the compulsory process of the House, and was entitled to the protection of the House as long as he was in the city of Washington under his subpœna. Is the authority of this House in bringing witnesses here to testify to subject-matters of inquiry which the House has thought proper to make to be protected or not? It is a question which concerns this House more than the subcommittee of which I have the honor to be chairman.

But the gentleman from Maine says that these were his letters. Why, sir, it is an utter mistake as to the law of the case—an utter, complete mistake. I say to this House, without the fear of successful refutation, that according to the well-settled principles of law those letters belonged to Mr. Warren Fisher from the time he received them from the mail until he delivered them over to Mr. Mulligan, and Mr. Mulligan was entitled to the possession and ownership of those letters from that period.

In regard to how Mr. Mulligan got possession of those letters, he says, and Mr. Fisher corroborates his statement, that those letters were taken possession of and brought to the city of Washington by James Mulligan with the full consent and approbation of Warren Fisher. There was no surreptitious possession of these letters on the part of the witness, but they were brought here with the knowledge and consent of Warren Fisher, and witness brought them for the purpose of sustaining his testimony on the stand if it became necessary to use them. And I say, Mr. Speaker, that from the very moment Warren Fisher received those letters from Mr. BLAINE, Mr. BLAINE ceased to have any control of them. He had no more right to the possession or control of those letters than he has to my watch now in my pocket or any other piece of property which I may own. Some of the authorities go so far as to say that the publication of private correspondence may be enjoined by the writer or author of the correspondence if it is attempted on the part of the holder to use that correspondence to the detriment of the writer's property. But until that is attempted or threatened the writer has no right to interfere with any sort of use that the recipient of those letters chooses to make of them.

I will not go further into this question, because my friend, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] is fortified with authorities on this subject and will state the law more clearly than I can. But if Mr. BLAINE—as I have said the law declares—was not entitled to the possession and had no right to the letters, I ask how he can justify his course before this House in taking the letters under a promise on his honor to return them and then withhold them.

Well, the subcommittee thought that, as the letters were obtained by Mr. BLAINE under circumstances such as I have detailed, it was right and proper that they should be given up to the committee or returned to the witness, the rightful owner of these letters; and when the demand was made upon Mr. BLAINE for the production of them he asked for time to consult counsel. His demand was cheerfully granted, and an adjournment took place from that day until ten o'clock the next morning. At ten o'clock the next morning we heard from Mr. BLAINE that he had not gotten through with the consultation; that owing to peculiar circumstances he had not been able to get the two counsel together the preceding night. We gave him until twelve o'clock. Twelve o'clock arrived; and he still was not ready. At two o'clock he came before the subcommittee with the opinion of Judge Black and Mr. Carpenter stating that we had no right to demand these letters; that they were private property pertaining to the private business of Mr. BLAINE; and that we had no right to demand them, and Mr. BLAINE should resist the demand.

Now, the committee may have very high respect for the authority of Judge Black and Mr. Carpenter, but they were investigating a question for the House, and not according to the rules prescribed by Mr. Carpenter and Judge Black. They did not choose that Mr. Carpenter and Judge Black should decide a question which the House had ordered them to decide.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Did not Mr. Mulligan on three different occasions testify that there was not more than one letter which touched however remotely any subject under investigation, whether the Union Pacific Railroad, the bonds sold the company by Tom Scott, or the Northern Pacific, or the Central Pacific, or all of the rest of those roads named in that resolution? Did he not testify in answer to your interrogatories at three different times that only one letter however remotely touched any matter which the subcommittee were investigating?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; he did not so testify, according to my recollection. I will tell you what he did testify.

Mr. FRYE. Well, sir.

Mr. HUNTON. He testified on one or two or perhaps on three occasions that he did not think that there were but two letters in the batch which bore upon the subject-matter of inquiry before the committee, one in regard to the Northern Pacific and the other in regard to the Union Pacific.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTON. That is what he said, but the committee thought that as the letters had been obtained in the manner in which Mr. BLAINE had obtained these letters, it was not only their right but their duty to determine the question for themselves whether the letters were pertinent to the subject-matter of inquiry or not.

Mr. FRYE. One other question. The gentleman says in response to my question that there were two letters, one relating to the Union and the other to the Northern Pacific Railroad. On the day before yesterday, when you were pursuing the Northern Pacific inquiry, did he not swear distinctly that there was not one letter which related at all to the Northern Pacific?

Mr. HUNTON. He mentioned a statement which related to it.

Mr. FRYE. A statement but not a letter, and that statement not in Mr. BLAINE's handwriting.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Did he not state that the statement was not in Mr. BLAINE's handwriting?

Mr. HUNTON. I stated so.

Mr. FRYE. One more question.

Mr. HUNTON. I yield for one more.

Mr. FRYE. Was there, when this witness was subpœnaed to Washington, any subpœna duces tecum at all?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. FRYE. That is all.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not see what difference it makes whether there was a subpœna duces tecum or not. The object of a subpœna duces tecum is to require the witness to bring papers. If he brings them without a subpœna duces tecum, the object is attained, because the letters are there; and the witness had a right to bring them without a subpœna duces tecum for the purpose for which he indicated he did bring them.

Now I say, sir, that when these facts came out that there was a letter and a statement, which I believe was stated by Mr. BLAINE to have been written by his clerk—when we found from the witness that one of these letters in that statement did relate to the subject-matter under inquiry, that when the solicitude was manifested to obtain possession of the letters, I ask the House whether it was not only the right but the duty of the subcommittee to demand at the hands of Mr. BLAINE the restoration of these letters to the witness or their production to the committee? The committee told Mr. BLAINE, "If you say these letters are your private papers, surrender them to the committee; you did not get possession of them in a manner which the committee think rightful, whatever may be your opinion about it, and we desire to see those letters, not to be made public, not to be published as a part of the proceedings of the committee, not to be given to the correspondents of newspapers to be spread throughout the length and breadth of the land, but to be inspected by the committee in private and used only when found pertinent."

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HUNTON. I thought you said that you were only going to ask one question more?

Mr. FRYE. Ah! at that time, allow me to ask if Mr. BLAINE did not ask the chairman of the subcommittee——

Mr. HUNTON. I am coming to that, if the gentleman will let me. I do not mean to omit an important particular; but let me state the case in my own way.

Mr. FRYE. Very well.

Mr. HUNTON. I stated that the committee ought to inspect those letters in private, and that wherever there was one that did not refer to the subject-matter of this investigation, either under the Luttrell resolution or the Tarbox resolution, those letters which were found to be private should not be made public.

Mr. FRYE. That is not what my inquiry was about.

Mr. HUNTON. I am coming to your inquiry; do not be impatient, if you please.

Mr. FRYE. Very well.

Mr. HUNTON. I know what the gentleman wants to ask me: if Mr. BLAINE did not invite me to his house to read these letters.

Mr. FRYE. That was not it.

Mr. HUNTON. What was it?

Mr. FRYE. I know Mr. BLAINE did invite you, and told you that you might read all the letters. But I want to ask you if Mr. BLAINE did not ask the subcommittee whether, if he produced these letters and gave them to them, they should be examined privately and only those put on record that related to the case, and if Mr. HUNTON, the chairman of the subcommittee, did not say no, he would not examine them privately?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. FRYE. You say you did not say that?

Mr. HUNTON. I say I refused individually to examine them privately.

Mr. FRYE. Was not that inquiry addressed to you when the subcommittee was in session?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Then I understand you to say that you understood that inquiry to be addressed to you privately?

Mr. HUNTON. I understood it so.

Mr. FRYE. I understood it differently.

Mr. HUNTON. I understood it as I have stated, and I do not think I am mistaken. I said to Mr. BLAINE over and over again, "Mr. BLAINE, I do not want to see your correspondence either public or private. I have no right to read it except as a committee-man; and these two gentlemen who sit on either side of me have the same right I have." I did not mean to receive at the hands of Mr. BLAINE any letters or any papers that my colleagues on the committee could not see and inspect with me.

When I had the honor of an invitation to the gentleman's house to read these letters, I replied to it in the same way: "Mr. BLAINE, I have no right to go to your house as a private citizen and read your correspondence; if I have the right to look at it at all, it is as a member and as the chairman of this committee; and if I have no right to look at it in that way, I have no right to look at it at all, and will not do it."

I believe he has stated on this floor to-day, and if I am wrong I hope I may be corrected, that forty-four gentlemen have read these papers. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE,] reminds me that when Mr. BLAINE refused to produce these letters, he or one of the members of the committee asked that the memorandum of the witness should be surrendered to the committee that we might examine it and see whether these letters were public and bore upon the subject of this investigation, or were private. That was refused.

When I refused to go to the gentleman's house and read these letters, I did it because I did not want, and God knows I do not want now, to pry into his private correspondence; but I thought it was my duty as a member of the committee, and my duty to this House, to demand at his hands the production of letters and memorandum obtained in the manner in which I have stated. Now it is for this House to determine whether I did right or wrong, whether the committee did right or wrong. If I did wrong I did it in pursuance of what I thought was my duty to this House to investigate thoroughly, and I trust impartially, the subject-matters of inquiry addressed by the House to the Judiciary Committee. If I have erred it has been an error of the judgment, and I say to-day that it is a job I never fancied.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the gentleman know of a dispatch received from Josiah Caldwell in London?

Mr. HUNTON. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. KNOTT,] will reply to you in full on that subject.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman if he knows——

Mr. HUNTON. I do not mean to answer a question addressed properly to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. But I address it to the chairman with whom I have been dealing. I ask the gentleman who is the chairman of the subcommittee to state to this House whether on Thursday morning last the chairman of the full committee, Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, did not come to the committee-room and call the gentleman from Virginia out, and then or at some other time acquaint him with that fact?

Mr. HUNTON. Now you are done.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know; it depends upon your answer.

Mr. HUNTON. You are done, unless I choose to yield to you again.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask you that question.

Mr. HUNTON. And I answer you that if my friend from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] does not answer you fully I will.

Mr. BLAINE. Ah, that is not what——

Mr. HUNTON. I will not yield to the gentleman any further.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman yield on another point?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman will pardon me for a moment; I will give him more of my time in exchange. The gentleman has commented with an attempt at severity upon the fact that I saw these witnesses before they testified. Has it not been the habit of the gentleman from Virginia to see witnesses before they testified?

Mr. HUNTON. Not my habit, sir; I have seen several.

Mr. BLAINE. I have received this letter which I wish to read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I arrived here last night to give my testimony in the case concerning yourself before the Judiciary Committee. I was summoned to the committee-room at ten o'clock this morning and was sorry to find the investigation postponed until to-morrow on account of your illness. I shall endeavor to call and pay my respects this evening. I was greatly taken by surprise at being taken aside by Mr. HUNTON and somewhat closely interrogated privately as to the points of the testimony I should be able to give against you. All his inquiries seemed to be made with an animus, and the thorough questioning he gave me in this informal manner astonished me beyond measure. I had no idea that congressional investigations were conducted in this way. If they are they cease to be fair and honorable and degenerate into prosecutions and then into persecutions.

I learned after leaving Mr. HUNTON that he has been pursuing this course with other witnesses who are presumed to have some testimony to give against you. Mr. HUNTON's inquiries were not merely general, but were, it seemed to me, about as minute as they could well be, and put with an apparent desire to have every fact stated in a manner that would inculpate you.

I have felt that I was in honor bound to communicate this to you as early as possible for your own protection.

I am, very truly yours,

A. P. ROBINSON.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE.

He came that evening and had some conversation with me; and when the gentleman asked if he had seen me, he supposed it was in reference to the testimony. He did not come to tell me what he could testify to, but——

Mr. HUNTON. I did not give way for a speech.

Mr. BLAINE. I have made speech enough.

Mr. HUNTON. The animus of that witness is shown by his letter more than mine is shown by it. I do not deny, I never have denied, that I have talked with some half a dozen witnesses.

Mr. BLAINE. But he said it was understood you "coached" the witness; that is the phrase he used.

Mr. HUNTON. I say that if he or any other man says that I undertook to "post" the witness or to "coach" him, or intimates by any other technical term which I may not understand that there has been an attempt on my part to influence his testimony, it is false, absolutely false.

Now I confess that I had talked to these witnesses; but never, never have I attempted to influence their testimony in the slightest degree. My object in talking to the witnesses was to learn how to examine them; I thought it my right and my duty.

Mr. BLAINE. That is just what Mr. Robinson says—that the object was to get the strong points against me.

Mr. HUNTON. I did not give way to the gentleman. I beg him to recollect that I have the floor, and not to attempt to take it from me until I yield to him.

I want him to recollect also that I was not under investigation; I was not interested in the result; and though I may have talked to witnesses before their examination, was that as bad as for the gentleman from Maine, who was interested in the result, to take them to his house? I say here upon my personal responsibility that not once have I attempted to influence the testimony of a witness summoned before me in any investigation ordered by this House. Why, sir, the gentleman knows that a witness in his examination in the open committee-room stated, "In my conversation with you, Mr. HUNTON, this statement occurred." I never attempted to conceal the fact that on several occasions—probably four or five, it may be less or it may be more—I did talk with witnesses, that I might know under which resolution their testimony came; that I might know how to bring out the facts in the possession of the witness. If that is wrong, Mr. Speaker, it is an error of judgment on my part. I cannot see it.

Now, these are the facts in this case; and I beg the House to bear in mind that they have committed these investigations to the hands of a committee; and while that committee is proceeding with its investigation the gentleman from Maine, who supposes that he is involved in this investigation, undertakes to forestall the conclusions of that committee, and make his own statement to the House of the result of that investigation. Mr. Speaker, if this practice is to be observed in the House, let all references to committees be discontinued; and whenever there is an inquiry here which may possibly involve a member, let that member get up on the floor and make his statement; let that be received as the report of the committee; let it be adopted, and thus let the matter end. If that is not to be the practice, let this committee go on with its investigation. If the testimony does not implicate Mr. BLAINE, I undertake to say that the committee will not only cheerfully and promptly, but with pleasure report that fact to the House. If, on the other hand, the testimony shall involve him in the charges which are under consideration by the committee, then rest assured that I, as one of the members of the committee, mean to report the facts to the House and the conclusions to be drawn from these facts.

Mr. KNOTT obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read to those who will listen the rule as to those entitled to the privilege of admission to the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

No person except members of the Senate, their Secretary, heads of Departments, the President's private secretary, foreign ministers, the governor for the time being of any State, Senators and Representatives elect, judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Court of Claims, and such persons as have by name received the thanks of Congress shall be admitted within the hall of the House of Representatives or any of the rooms upon the same floor or leading into the same; provided that ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and shall so register themselves, may also be admitted within the hall of the House; and no persons except those herein specified shall at any time be admitted to the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that numbers of persons on the floor have defied the officers of the House in remaining and force has been required to put them outside of the Chamber. The Chair will also state that it is the duty of the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant-at-Arms to enforce this rule; and in order that gentlemen may conduct the public business the Chair states that this rule will be enforced, if necessary, by the police belonging to the Capitol. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, within the last two hours I have listened to imputations upon myself upon this floor which, coming from a different source or elsewhere, I might, perhaps, answer very differently from the manner in which I shall attempt to answer them now. Those who are intimately acquainted with me know that I am the last man in the world to seek a personal altercation, and I assure the House that of all men in the world the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] is the last man with whom I would seek such a conflict. He is entirely too immense in his proportions for me to presume to attack.

> Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world
> Like a Colossus, and we petty men
> Walk under his huge legs and peep about
> To find ourselves dishonorable graves.

Personal controversy seems to be his forte, and whenever he is engaged in a conflict of that kind on this floor the gentleman reminds me of Homer's description of Diomede:

> Dire was the clang and dreadful from afar,
> Was armed Tydides rushing to the war.

No; the gentleman, as my old friend Jim Johnson would say, is habitually and entirely "too pompious and uzurpious" for me to seek a contest with. [Laughter.] Two-thirds of the time when he is in the House he does not seem to realize whether he is in the Speaker's chair or on the floor, and to a stranger it would be an insoluble enigma.

The gentleman quite unnecessarily, as I shall show, has dragged me into this personal matter of his own. In the first place, he insinuates that from some unworthy motive, I as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, appointed upon the subcommittee which has charge of this investigation the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] and the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE.] Well, in answer to that I have to say, first, that either of those gentlemen is his peer in any sense of the word, and, in point of honor, it is no disparagement to the gentleman from Maine to say they are both his superiors. [Hisses on the republican side of the House.] That is all right. There are but three animals in this world that hiss: vipers, geese, and fools. Hiss on! [Laughter and applause.]

In the second place this subcommittee was, as I remarked a while ago, selected long before there was any insinuation, public or private that I knew of, that the gentleman from Maine was in any manner implicated in any of the alleged fraudulent transactions on the part of any of these railroad corporations, and it did seem to me, when the gentleman flung his imputation at me, as a little strange that he could ascribe any motive to me under the circumstances, even granting the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from North Carolina were his personal enemies.

I repeat, sir, it does seem a little remarkable to me that you cannot touch one of these railroad companies but what the gentleman from Maine squeals. [Laughter.] Yes, sir, and I have no doubt it struck Mr. Harrison as a little remarkable, when that seventy-five-thousand-dollar bond transaction was mentioned in a meeting of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad, that the treasurer should say: "Do not say anything about that; it involves BLAINE." [Renewed laughter.]

I will say furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that when this subcommittee was raised, long before I had any intimation that Mr. BLAINE was involved in any manner in the railroad companies to be investigated, I went to his particular friend and colleague and asked him to take a position on that subcommittee, which he declined. So much for the appointment of the subcommittee.

Now as to the celebrated Mulligan letters——

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I suppose the gentleman referred to me.

Mr. KNOTT. I referred to you, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I presume if that is so—I have no recollection about it, but I have no reason to question the gentleman's word in the matter—if that was so, as a matter of course it was to take the place occupied by Mr. LAWRENCE.

Mr. KNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. It was not to take the place occupied by the gentleman from Virginia or the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. KNOTT. Of course not.

Now with regard to the correspondence which seems to have brought up this attack by the gentleman from Maine upon the Judiciary Committee so far as I have had anything to do with that, I will proceed to state it. The facts were laid before the committee that Mr. Mulligan had been summoned here to give testimony touching the subject-matters referred to the subcommittee; that he had appeared before the subcommittee and informed them upon his arrival he had been approached by Mr. BLAINE for a private interview, which he declined; that Mr. BLAINE had asked him to show certain letters which were in his possession—lawfully in his possession—placed there by the recipient of those letters, Mr. Fisher, with his permission to the witness to make whatever use of them he might see proper; that he surrendred those letters to Mr. BLAINE upon the personal promise of Mr. BLAINE that he would return them to him after he had inspected them, which Mr. BLAINE had refused to do; and that thereupon the subcommittee asked the advice of the committee as to the course they were to pursue. While the discussion of that matter was pending the challenge was thrown out by the gentleman's friends, which has been thrown out by the gentleman himself here to-day, that he should be brought before the bar of the House and compelled to produce those letters. I then remarked as I now remark, if the gentleman desires to join the noble army of martyrs, he must volunteer as he has done. I will never act as conscripting officer to get him a position in that glorious band. [Laughter.]

More than that, the gentleman insinuates that it is the settled purpose of the Judiciary Committee to do something or other that may, peradventure, prevent him from receiving the nomination at the coming convention at Cincinnati. I beg the gentleman to understand that, so far as I am concerned, and I believe so far as any of my colleagues are concerned, we are perfectly willing that he shall receive that nomination. If, in the pending campaign, we cannot defeat the gentleman from Maine, God knows our case is hopeless, entirely so. If he should receive the nomination and be elected in the face of all the facts, all we can say is, may the Lord have mercy on the American people. [Laughter.]

In the discussion as to what should be done by the subcommittee under the circumstances I have stated I did take occasion to say what I now repeat here in the face of this House and the world, that so far as those letters were concerned they were legally the property of Mr. Fisher, and legally in the possession of his baillee, Mr. Mulligan, and that Mr. BLAINE had no more right to the possession of them than I had; and that if he could procure letters under even an implied pledge of his personal honor to return them, and withhold them in the face of that pledge, it was a question for him to settle with the American people whose suffrages he seeks.

I care not whether Mr. Mulligan extorted from him an express promise to return them or not. He received them, knowing that Mulligan expected him to return them, and kept them with a strong hand when they were not his property. I say they were not his property, and I say that in view of the law of the case. I affirm that the only right the gentleman from Maine had at all in those letters was to publish their contents for his own private use if he thought proper, or restrain by injunction their publication by another.

In one of the most celebrated cases upon this subject, where the whole question was thoroughly discussed and all the authorities reviewed, the famous case of Grigsby and wife against Breckenridge, one of the most illustrious jurists that ever adorned the bench on this continent, Chief Justice Robertson, of Kentucky, says:

> A majority of the American cases even deny the right of the author to enjoin the publication of a private letter on the ground of property. But, as before suggested, we incline to the conclusion that the weight of authority, fortified by analogy, preponderates in favor of the author's special property in the publication, and in his consequential right to publish if he keep or can procure a copy. But the recipient is not bound to keep the original for his transcription, inspection, or other use. There is no adjudged case or elementary dictum extending the author's right of property beyond this circumscribed and contingent range. And all the cases cited in this case thus limit and define it.
>
> Publication by the author is circulation before the public eye by printing or multiplied copies in writing. The like publicity by the act of the recipient would be an infringement of the author's exclusive right, which he may prevent by injunction.

He goes on to say:

> In an able article on the author's right to enjoin the publication of private letters, Parker, an eminent judge in Massachusetts and professor in the Harvard law school, said:
>
> "The receiver of a letter is not a bailee, nor does he stand in a character analogous to that of a bailee. There is no right to possession, present or future"—

Mark you—

> "no right to possession, present or future, in the writer."

Then where did the gentleman from Maine get the right to waylay Mr. Mulligan and procure these letters in the manner in which he admits himself he did, and hold on to them in defiance of the bailee's right of possession?

> The only right to be enforced against the holder is a right to prevent publication, not to require the manuscript from the holder in order to a publication by himself.
>
> The right of the receiver—

The right of the receiver—

> then, is to the whole letter. He may read it himself and to others, and recite it at meetings. He may do everything but multiply copies; and perhaps he may do this, if he do not print them.

Now, sir, there is the whole case. Mr. Mulligan was legally in the possession of the letters by the permission of the recipient, with the authority to use them in any manner he saw proper. Those letters were taken from him under an implied promise, to say the least, to return them, and they are kept from him by a strong hand. The question what the subcommittee was to do under the circumstances was submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. And now comes the strange part of the whole thing, which I believe has not yet been developed before the House.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. KNOTT. Here comes the strange part of the whole thing. The Committee on the Judiciary have done the gentleman from Maine no wrong. They have not even decided what shall be done with those letters. Nobody has even intimated that he shall be obliged to give them to any human being on the earth. The committee have taken no action in the matter at all, but on to-morrow morning that question was to be brought up, and yet in advance of their conclusion and in defiance of all parliamentary law that I have ever heard of, an Ex-Speaker of the House comes here on the pretext of a personal explanation and takes the matter away from the jurisdiction of a committee to which it has been committed and drags it before the House.

Now, that is simply the condition in which the question stands. It is still sub judice, not decided at all, and with no intimation from any one that a solitary one of those letters would be taken from him or given to the public, but with a very positive assurance on my part to the gentleman, through his friends, that he would not be martyred by the Committee on the Judiciary, at least not with my consent.

Mr. FRYE. Now, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. KNOTT. Why is all this noise made for so little wool?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KNOTT. The Judiciary Committee, upon whom the gentleman has made such violent assaults, has done him no wrong. On the contrary, that committee has extended to him every conceivable courtesy from the very beginning, as has been explained here by my honorable colleague from Virginia.

No disposition has been manifested by any member of that committee to do anything that would militate against the gentleman's interest in the slightest possible degree. Every request he ever made to the committee has been complied with. Every postponment asked for has been granted. When he has asked that the inquiry should be prosecuted without delay, it has been done, or at least attempted. When he has asked that the investigation be delayed, it has been delayed. When he has asked on technical grounds that evidence be excluded, it has invariably been excluded. Everything has been done to protect the gentleman; for God knows we want him nominated. [Laughter.] He need not be afraid of meeting any opposition to his nomination on this side of the House.

Now, sir, there might be, I do not know that it ever will be, but there might be a grave question presented to the consideration of the House growing out of this matter, and that question is this: Whether after the House has committed a matter to a committee for investigation its authority can be trifled with by having the witnesses who may be summoned before that committee met by the way-side by parties implicated, pumped, their documentary evidence taken from them, retained by force, and a contemptuous refusal given to the committee when it calls for the production of papers thus obtained. Such a question, I say, might be raised, but I do not know that it ever will.

Sir, the gentleman has read a letter from a Mr. Robinson, and although I was not present when he was examined, I believe when that witness was asked if he had had an interview with Mr. BLAINE he denied it, until after a great deal of questioning, and coaxing, and persuading he finally admitted that he had had such an interview.

Mr. HUNTON. Let me state in regard to that matter that Mr. ASHE asked the witness the question whether he had talked of this matter with any gentlemen since his arrival in Washington. He said he had talked to one or more. Mr. ASHE asked him to name them, and he named one. Mr. ASHE asked him whether with any one else, and he answered yes, with Mr. A. B. Mr. ASHE asked him if that was all, and he answered yes, to Mr. C. D. He was then asked, "Is that all?" and he answered, "Yes; that is all." At that point I asked him, "Have you not talked this matter over with Mr. BLAINE since you arrived in Washington City?" and he said he had.

Mr. BLAINE. Who is that?

Mr. HUNTON. The witness Robinson.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, he came to tell me how you had been coaching him. [Great laughter.]

Mr. KNOTT. I was remarking that every request preferred by Mr. BLAINE or his friends on the subcommittee has been granted. Whenever a legal question has been raised at his request or that of his friends and submitted to the whole committee, it has in every instance been decided, so far as I know and believe, with the utmost impartiality. When, for instance, a question was raised as to whether a certain witness should tell what Josiah Caldwell had told him about the seventy-five-thousand-dollar-bond transaction, it was objected on the part of Mr. BLAINE that Mr. Caldwell was out of the jurisdiction of the United States, and the witness was not allowed to say a word about Mr. Caldwell.

A proposition was then made that Mr. Caldwell should be telegraphed to know if he would come here and give his testimony. That was objected to by Mr. BLAINE and his friends. Why? Because, forsooth, Mr. Caldwell would not come if we were to telegraph for him. The question was submitted to the full committee, and it was determined not to telegraph to him. But other witnesses continually referring to matters of which they had heard showed the absolute necessity of having Mr. Caldwell's testimony if it could be obtained. After considerable delay the committee concluded that they would telegraph to him, and the chairman was instructed to do so. I asked my friend from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to ascertain Mr. Caldwell's address, and he endeavored to do so, and left this memorandum with one of the officers of the House:

Find some man from Arkansas and learn where in Europe is Josiah Caldwell.

After all the investigations that the officer of the House could make we could not find out where Mr. Caldwell was. I myself inquired of several gentlemen, and requested one of them to write to Boston to ascertain where Caldwell was. It is true—and now I am going to make the gentleman from Maine happy, I have no doubt—that on last Thursday morning, about eight o'clock—I do not know but it might have been a little after eight o'clock, or a little before eight o'clock, or at eight o'clock—I did receive such a telegram; but the gentleman from Maine seems to know precisely when it was——

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. KNOTT. He seems to know precisely from what point it came. He seems to know precisely the contents of the telegram. He seems to be thoroughly posted upon that subject. Now, right here, permit me to say with regard to the insinuation that that telegram was suppressed elsewhere, any man, high or low, whomsoever he may be, may make it and take the consequences here. I will hurl the falsehood into his teeth. I received it; but, so far from suppressing it, within less than thirty minutes after I received it I read it to several gentlemen. But there was no particular place designated in the dispatch as Caldwell's address, save London; no street, no house, no other locality whatever; and it did occur to me, and I am not altogether certain that I do not now believe, it was a fixed-up job; so I thought I would wait a while and see what would come of it.

Mr. FRYE. Allow me to ask you a question there?

Mr. KNOTT. Wait until I get through with this. That dispatch came last Thursday. On Friday we had a general meeting of the committee. I had not the dispatch with me. I am not sure that I would have read it to the committee at that time if I had had it with me, as we were engaged with other matters. I am free to say that I had a suspicion that it was a fixed-up job. I have that suspicion now. The reason why I have it is that other people seem to know so much about it. I am assured that none of the gentlemen to whom I showed it have ever said anything to any mortal man in relation to it.

And I will say further that no longer ago than Saturday last I again asked the friend whom I had asked to write to Boston if he had ascertained for me the address of this Mr. Caldwell, and was told by him that he had not. I intended to telegraph to him; I wanted an answer to a telegram of my own, so that I might know it was genuine. If I failed in that, I intended to hand the telegram I had received to the committee for them to make whatever use they could of it. Nobody is hurt by that. Even if it were published to the four winds of heaven, it is not evidence for any purpose on the Lord's earth, and no lawyer will insinuate that it is.

Now, sir, I will ask if I was under any obligation, legal or moral, to publish a telegram voluntarily sent to myself, without any solicitation upon my part, and in answer to no suggestion that I had made? It struck me as something strange that this man should know so well to whom to telegraph and what to telegraph, before he had ever had any communication at all with me on the subject; and it still strikes me as strange.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KNOTT. Yes, with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. HALE. The dispatch was received, was it not, upon Thursday morning last?

Mr. KNOTT. I have said so two or three times over distinctly.

Mr. HALE. I want to fix the point; that was the date?

Mr. KNOTT. And the word "London" was at the top of it.

Mr. HALE. Did not that indicate to the gentleman last Thursday morning where Josiah Caldwell was, in order that he might telegraph to him and make certain whether it was a real dispatch? And did the gentleman from Kentucky at once take that method of obtaining information as to the genuineness of the dispatch?

Mr. KNOTT. Now I will answer the gentleman. I had information that this Mr. Caldwell was somewhere in Italy. I had had that information from more than one, that he was on the Continent and not in London. And there being no point in London designated in the dispatch, no street or house in a city where there are millions of people, it struck me that I might as well have gone to hunt for a particular drop of water in the middle of the ocean.

Mr. HALE. Does not the gentleman know that the telegraph operator in London would have learned that address at once, because that is an every-day method of securing the address of a person who has not given his address definitely?

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman knows more about it than I do.

Mr. HALE. Does not the gentleman know that?

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman seems to know a great deal about it.

Mr. HALE. I know enough to know that.

Mr. KNOTT. Very well. Now, I say to this House and to the gentleman from Maine that any insinuation of my suppressing any paper, keeping it back illegitimately, for any purpose whatever, is not only gratuitous, but false.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman read the dispatch, in order that we may see what there is in it?

Mr. KNOTT. When I get ready I will.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman from Kentucky propose to read it upon the floor——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. KNOTT. I do not yield. I have asked the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] who seems to be so thoroughly posted, how he got his information about that dispatch, and he has declined to tell. Now let the matter rest right there, just where it is.

Mr. MCCRARY. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. KNOTT] whether he communicated the fact of the receipt by him of that dispatch to any of the republican members of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. KNOTT. I have not; and there are several of my democratic colleagues to whom I have not communicated that fact, and there are many of my most intimate personal friends to whom I have not communicated it. To tell the truth about it, after the day that I received it I gave but little, if any, thought at all to it until the subject was brought up here.

Mr. MCCRARY. I wish it understood for myself and republican colleagues on that committee that we had no knowledge of the receipt of that dispatch.

Mr. MCMAHON. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KNOTT. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MCMAHON. I would ask the gentleman whether the Committee on the Judiciary authorized him to telegraph to Mr. Caldwell and have Mr. Caldwell telegraph a statement in reply; or was it simply that he should telegraph where he could be found, in order that his personal presence could be secured, and he be subjected to oath and cross-examination?

Mr. KNOTT. I was going to speak of that. The order of the Committee on the Judiciary, as I understood it, was to telegraph to Mr. Caldwell to know if he would come here and give his testimony under oath as a witness, and not that he should volunteer any information at all upon the subject.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question right here. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state to the House what Mr. Caldwell said in that dispatch?

Mr. KNOTT. Has not your friend already stated it? Do you not believe your colleague from Maine?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNOTT. You do not? Well, I do. [Great laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. In other words, if the gentleman from Kentucky refuses to produce that dispatch to the House, I say it seems to be entirely supposable that Mr. BLAINE has not got the whole of that dispatch, and I desire to ask if there is not something else in the dispatch to keep it back?

Mr. KNOTT. No, sir. Does that satisfy you?

Mr. BLAINE and others. Read it, then.

Mr. KNOTT. Will gentlemen "possess their souls in patience?" Let us hear from the gentleman from Maine where he got his information; let us know who has violated the law and how he came to be the recipient of the secrets of this violator of law.

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman is through I desire to call the previous question on my resolution. I merely want to test by that whether this House is going to unite——

Mr. KNOTT. I have not yielded the floor. I want to state to the House that this telegraphic dispatch, that was sent to me without any solicitation upon my part, I have it still in my possession, but it is at my room. Its contents are substantially as stated by the gentleman from Maine. Whoever informed him, or however he got his information, I do not know that I can repeat the dispatch in its exact terms. It was to the effect——

Mr. BLAINE. I thought you refused to repeat it.

Mr. KNOTT. Well, who asked you to put in just at this particular time? [Laughter.] You will have an opportunity to tell where you got your information. I was going on to state my recollection of the contents of the dispatch. If I had it here I should not object to reading it. Whether it came from Mr. Caldwell or not I do not know. The purport of it was that he had seen Mr. Thomas A. Scott's testimony in the New York papers; that it was substantially correct; that he had not let Mr. BLAINE have any bonds, and he would send an affidavit to that effect, but that he was engaged in railroad enterprises there and could not come here to give his testimony without serious pecuniary loss. That is substantially what is in the dispatch.

Now, I desire to say that if the gentleman had only waited that dispatch would have been presented to the committee to be made use of in whatever way the committee may have seen proper. I repeat, that from the beginning I have had no desire to injure the gentleman from Maine personally, and especially politically; none whatever. But I have desired, as I still desire, that the truth may be told. As for myself, I had no knowledge of any transaction by the gentleman from Maine inconsistent with the highest personal integrity. I had no desire that he should be injured if innocent. I had, however, and still have, a desire that whoever may be guilty of wrong, we shall "turn on the gas" and let the people see it.

Mr. BLAINE. I now demand the previous question on the resolution, because the gentleman declines to furnish the dispatch to the House, and I want to see whether this House will justify him in that position. It is now admitted by the gentleman that well into the fifth day he has deliberately suppressed that dispatch, and I understand that it has been suppressed——

[Cries of "Order."]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Why not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman to demand the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. I rose to do so, but I have an hour before I do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at all.

Mr. BLAINE. Why not?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has spoken one hour already.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not spoken an hour in closing the debate. I merely want to state this point: I wish to see whether this House will approve of the fact that two members at least of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] have known for five days of that dispatch——

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will suspend. The Chair understood the gentleman to claim the right to occupy another hour before the question is taken on his demand for the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. I would not have any hour afterward. But I do not care anything about that. I demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. BANNING. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well; on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that will not be done.

Mr. BANNING. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BLAINE. Stick to your motion.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 101, noes 107.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine is not recognized. By the vote just taken, and as is customary, the gentleman loses control of the resolution. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.]

Mr. BANNING. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAINE. And pending that motion, I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] has been recognized.

Mr. BLAINE. But my motion comes in as of superior right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman lost the floor when the demand for the previous question was not sustained.

Mr. BLAINE. But pending the motion to refer, the motion to suspend the rules is in order.

Mr. BANNING. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAINE. Pending which I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCCRARY. Pending that I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. I have a right to make the motion.

Mr. BLAINE. By all the precedents.

Mr. BANNING. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman moves it as a substitute for the motion to refer. That may be in order.

Mr. MCCRARY. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. On Friday last, by unanimous consent, an order was made by the House that to-day after the morning hour—at two o'clock—the House should proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriation for the payment of the Geneva award, to the exclusion of all other business and especially to the exclusion of any motion to suspend the rules. That order was made on Friday last at the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine himself. Because otherwise the making of the Geneva award bill a special order for to-day would be of no avail, as it could be interrupted by motions to suspend the rules, which under the rules are privileged on Monday after the morning hour.

Mr. MCCRARY. That was to take effect at two o'clock to-day and has been waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When unanimous consent was asked on Friday last by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] to make the Geneva award bill a special order for to-day after the morning hour, and after much colloquy the gentleman from Maine called the attention of the Chair and of the House particularly to the fact that the order to set to-day at two o'clock for that business would not be worth making unless it was accompanied with the provision that it was to the exclusion of all motions to suspend the rules. The order was made in that way, and runs, by unanimous consent, until that bill is disposed of. The Chair is now bound to sustain that unanimous arrangement, and with it the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois. Therefore the motion to suspend the rules is not in order.

Mr. MCCRARY. Who has called up the Geneva award bill? It is not in the hands of the gentleman from Illinois. I do not think my colleague of the Judiciary Committee from New York [Mr. LORD] will take the responsibility of doing so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the responsibility of deciding that the point of order having been raised, and attention called to the conditions of the special order, he is bound to recognize the fact that a motion to suspend the rules is not in order at this time, and that, too, by virtue of the order made on Friday last.

Mr. KELLEY. I respectfully call the Speaker's attention to the purpose for which that order was made. It was that Mr. SCOTT LORD, of New York, who is to be absent from the House hereafter, should call up that bill to-day and make his speech; and it was suggested after that speech should be concluded we could go on with the general business of the House. I do not understand that Mr. LORD avails himself of the special object of the order to call up that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may assume that to be the fact; but it does not affect the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair has already decided it. Several gentlemen to-day have called the Chair's attention to the matter with a view to have the rules suspended, and the Chair has stated that he would refuse to entertain any motions to suspend the rules. The point of order being now raised, the Chair must decide that no motion to suspend the rules after two o'clock to-day is in order, that being the unanimous agreement of the House on Friday last.

Mr. KELLEY. Would it not be in order to suspend the rules after Mr. LORD had spoken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My point of order is this: It has been understood by the whole House that when this question of personal privilege came up all the previous orders of the House had to give way to it. Had it come up on any other day than Monday, the motion to suspend the rules would not have been in order on any question bearing upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand, when this privilege came, that any express or implied understanding was involved as to the previous orders.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Allow me to make my point before you decide it. But it is the right of a member rising to a personal question here to have that determined independently of any point of order, and to call into requisition all the rules of the House to enable him to do it; and to-day, this being Monday, the motion to suspend the rules on the resolution connected with that question of privilege I claim to be in order. The honorable Chair will take care in ruling on this question of personal privilege whether he is going to rule out the right of a member to have a hearing upon this floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has denied no right to be heard to the gentleman from Maine. He adheres to his decision, that after two o'clock to-day no motion to suspend the rules can be made.

Mr. McCRARY. I rise to appeal to the Chair whether a motion to refer the resolution is in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly it is in order.

Mr. McCRARY. How so, if the special order precludes everything? If it cuts off a motion to suspend the rules, does it not also cut off the motion to refer?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine rose to a personal explanation——

Mr. BLAINE. I did not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first finish his remarks.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. It was the statement of the Chair at the time that the gentleman rose to a personal explanation.

Mr. BLAINE. But it was not the statement of the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman rose to a privileged question, and the Chair stated it to the House as one of "personal privilege."

Mr. BLAINE. To a question of privilege, which is as different as anything can be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman rose to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLAINE. Of high privilege, which is different from a personal explanation.

Mr. BLAND. It is now five o'clock, and, as we cannot do anything to-day in the way of business, I move the House do now adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. O, no; withdraw it.

Mr. BLAND. Very well, I withdraw the motion. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCRARY. I rise to a point of order. The Chair has decided, when a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass the resolution, that motion was excluded by the fact that the special order for this day excluded all other business. My point of order is, that, if the special order is of such high privilege as to exclude the motion to suspend the rules, it is also of such high privilege as to exclude the motion to refer this resolution. I now call for the special order.

Mr. HOLMAN. This resolution is before the House regularly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this resolution has come up, as he supposes, properly before the House after the question raised by the gentleman from Maine of privilege or personal explanation, whichever it was; and the resolution at the end of his remarks was before the House without objection, but not to be disposed of irregularly. Now the disposition of the resolution is properly before the House upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] to refer it. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. In putting that motion no order of the House is violated and no one prejudiced.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 97, not voting 66; as follows.

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Canfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Culberson, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Lynde, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Powell, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stone, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Throckmorton, Robert B. Vance, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—125.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chittenden, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Goodin, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kimball, King, Lapham, Lawrence, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, Strait, Stowell, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodworth—97.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blaine, Bliss, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Cutler, Darrall, Davis, Dobbins, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Fuller, Gibson, Goode, Henry R. Harris, Abram S. Hewitt, Hubbell, Hyman, Frank Jones, Knott, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Luttrell, L. A. Mackey, Meade, Money, Morgan, New, Phelps, Purman, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Schumaker, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Swann, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Alphens S. Williams, James Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, and Woodburn—66.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. DURAND. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CONGER, who is absent by order of the House. My colleague, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, is also absent by order of the House.

Mr. VAN VORHES. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. VANCE, on all political questions. I regard this matter as more of a personal than a political question. If I am entitled to vote, I will vote "no;" but I will not vote, if there be objection.

Mr. WHITING. My colleague, Mr. FORT, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. CASWELL. My colleague, Mr. RUSK, is absent. If here he would vote "no."

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Nevada, Mr. WOODBURN, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am paired with Mr. WADDELL, of North Carolina, on all political questions.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 619) to carry out in part the provisions of the act entitled "An act to abolish the tribal relations of the Miami Indians, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873; and

A bill (S. No. 720) for the relief of Charles B. Phillips.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2456) to release any title of the United States to a certain tract of land in Braxton County, Virginia, to Sarah Wilson.

The message also informed the House that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. BOGY as conferees on the part of the Senate.

CAPTAIN J. M. HAMILTON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Captain J. M. Hamilton, United States Army, for change in date of his commission; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GEORGE W. CHILSON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of the papers in the case of George W. Chilson, recently decided in the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A. GATES LEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to papers in the case of A. Gates Lee, (House bill No. 2756;) which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

INSANE HOSPITAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MUTCHLER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department have permission to print the testimony taken in the investigation of the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane.

PASTURAGE LANDS IN ARID REGIONS.

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3667) to provide for the settlement of pasturage lands in arid regions of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT FOR INDIAN COUNTRY.

Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, presented the protest of the chiefs and head-men of the Great and Little Osage Nation of Indians, residents of the Indian country, against the establishment of a territorial government for said Indian country; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The protest is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, Washington, District of Columbia:

We, your petitioners, chiefs and head-men of the Osage Nation of Indians, resident in the Indian Territory, learn with some alarm of the introduction of several bills into Congress for the establishment of a territorial form of government over the Indian country heretofore guaranteed by treaties to the peaceable possession of the various Indian tribes resident therein forever, most of whom hold their titles in fee-simple by patent of the United States or by purchase of grantors holding such patents, which purchases have been confirmed by act of Congress. We entertain grave fears that the introduction of these bills is in the interest of extensive railroad corporations, for the purpose of securing land grants contingent upon the extinction of the Indian title. We fear that the establishment of a territorial government over our country would be regarded as but the stepping-stone to opening up the same to settlement by citizens of the United States and consequent extinction of the Indian title. In fact, we have grave apprehensions that the establishment of a duly-organized territorial government would be regarded by the courts as conferring, under existing laws, the rights to citizens to settle upon the unoccupied lands thereof. This, we feel, would be a grievous wrong upon the Indians, the rightful owners of the soil by purchase; a wrong committed by a great Government upon a weak people, in violation of its solemn treaties; a wrong which in itself seems almost to determine our future existence as a people. We cannot believe that the Government of the United States, our assumed protector and guardian, will perpetrate this wrong upon us, and for these and other reasons we do most earnestly protest against the establishment of a territorial government over the Indian country.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was given as follows:

To Mr. FAULKNER for ten days.

To Mr. PAYNE for eight days.

To Mr. FROST for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. RUSK for one week.

To Mr. BENNETT for ten days from the 7th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. HATCHER for five days, on account of business.

To Mr. THOMPSON for three days from Monday.

To Mr. WHITE for ten days from the 6th instant.

And then, on motion of Mr. LUTTRELL, (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ATKINS: The petition of Lytle Newton, for a reconsideration of his claim, disallowed by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, resolutions of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, in relation to the claim of Bethel College, to the same committee.

By Mr. HARTRIDGE: Memorial of the Atlanta (Georgia) Medical Academy against the passage of the bill to incorporate the National Surgical Institute of the District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LEVY: Memorial of John R. Williams, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States naval forces, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MACDOUGALL: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Macedon, via Macedon Center and West Walworth, to Lincoln, Wayne County, New York, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from North Huron to Lummisville, Wayne County, New York, to the same committee.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Walcott to North Walcott, Wayne County, New York, to the same committee.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Butler to Butler Center, Wayne County, New York, to the same committee.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Conquest to Spring Lake, Cayuga County, New York, to the same committee.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Waterloo, via Magee's Corners, to Tyne, Seneca County, New York, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of A. Senedacer, and 57 citizens of Wayne County, New York, that certain lands adjoining the navy-yard in Brooklyn, New York, be set aside for market purposes, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of W. H. Dennis and other citizens of Zurich, Wayne County, New York, of similar import, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: The petition of B. Deford & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, for compensation for the destruction of their tannery and other property at New Creek, Mineral County, West Virginia, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Francis A. Gibbons, for compensation for grain furnished the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, in 1854 and in 1863, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Henry Frank, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for compensation for subsistence furnished the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TEESE: The petition of James Dickson, of Newark, New Jersey, for compensation for the seizure of his vessel and cotton in 1863 by the United States authorities, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi: The petition of citizens of Mississippi, for such legislation as will secure the immediate consideration by the proper Government officials of their applications for pensions, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE: The petition of Ira Wells, for an increase of pension, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Lewis Sowards, for a pension, to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 6, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 3636) to remove the political disabilities of Richard S. Kinney and William R. Jones—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes, relating to merchant seamen—to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WINDOM presented the petition of 1,011 citizens of Minnesota, praying for an appropriation to complete the Fox River improvement and for the construction of a canal along the Wisconsin River from Portage City to Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, in accordance with the third plan recommended by General Warren; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of 655 citizens of Iowa, praying for an appropriation to complete the Fox River improvement and for the construction of a canal along the Wisconsin River from Portage City to Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, in accordance with the third plan recommended by General Warren; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Hugh Devlin, Daniel Strain, and other citizens of Webster County, Iowa, praying for the passage of a law requesting the Supreme Court of the United States to cause to be issued by the Federal courts of Iowa a general injunction restraining all persons from mining or any other operation whatever except the cultivation of the soil by the actual settlers, on all so-called Des Moines River lands in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, presented a petition of citizens of Lyon County, Nevada, praying Congress to adopt some legal measures to prevent the further immigration of Chinese; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WHYTE presented the petition of G. T. Beauregard, of Louisiana, praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 777) to incorporate the National Sanitary Abattoir Company of the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was rejected.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 815) to establish a zoological park near the Capitol in the District of Columbia, and to incorporate a company to maintain the same and construct a railroad thereto, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was rejected.

Mr. SPENCER. I am also directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I give notice that I shall call the bill up soon for action.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to submit a report on the resolution of the Senate of the 24th of January, instructing the Committee on Finance to investigate the books and accounts of the Treasury Department, with a view to explain certain discrepancies, &c. The committee have, in obedience to the order of the Senate, complied with their duty, and present the results of their investigation in a written report, which they ask to have printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed, under the rule.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 224) enabling claimants to lands within the limits of the Territories of New Mexico, Colorado, and Arizona to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 235) to give consent of the United States to the appropriation of certain proceeds arising from the sale of the swamp and overflowed lands in Alabama for the purpose of furnishing other and additional accommodations for the indigent insane and idiotic persons resident in said State, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the petition of J. A. Briggs, executor of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased, praying compensation for certain cotton taken by the United States military authorities during the late war and sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, with additional papers, have instructed me to report the same back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and recommend that the claim be rejected. I wish to state in this connection that the claim was referred at the last session of Congress to the Committee on the Judiciary. They reported adversely, and their report was concurred in. It was referred to the Committee on Claims at this session. We submitted a written report thereon, which was concurred in. Additional evidence in favor of the claim was afterward submitted and referred to the committee with the order of recommittal. We have examined this additional evidence and find nothing in it whatever to change or in any way to affect the conclusion to which we arrived at the time we made our former report. I am therefore instructed to report the petition back and recommend that the claim be rejected.

The report was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 903) for the relief of E. A. Clifford, postmaster at Evanston, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 904) for the relief of William C. Nichols, late assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 905) in relation to vacanciesin the office of appraiser of customs at any port of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BELLIGERENCY OF CONFEDERATE STATES.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I offer the following resolution for present consideration, to which I presume there will be no objection:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not inconsistent with the public interests, to furnish the Senate with a fac simile copy of the original draught of the letter of the Secretary of State to the minister of the United States at the court of St. James in May, 1861, in relation to the proclamation of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain recognizing the belligerent character of the Confederate States.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The words "in his opinion" are omitted accidentally.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to insert these words; so as to read: "If not, in his opinion, inconsistent with the public interests," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

RAILROAD GRANTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. MAXEY. I am requested by the Cherokee delegation to present a resolution of inquiry in relation to certain bonds issued by railroad corporations whose roads pass through the Indian Territory. As the resolution seems to raise certain questions of law, I shall ask to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, instructed to ascertain whether or not the railroad corporations, or any of them, mentioned under acts—

First, an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866.

Second, an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the southern branch of the Union Pacific Railway and Telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas," approved July 26, 1866.

Third, an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," approved July 27, 1866—

Have issued any bonds or securities of any kind predicated upon the conditional grants of the lands of the Indians of the Indian Territory claimed by said companies or corporations under the above-mentioned acts; and, if it be ascertained that such bonds or securities have been so issued, then it shall be the duty of the said committee to discover the amount of the same, in what hands they are held, and whether or not the public faith of the United States is pledged for their payment or redemption.

Resolved further, That the said committee, in the discharge of the duties hereby imposed, be, and they are hereby, authorized to call for persons and papers, and be required to report the result of their investigations to the Senate as early as practicable.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the resolution lie over. I wish to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the resolution goes over; and it will be printed.

JOSEPH WALSH.

Mr. CRAGIN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President, if not incompatible with the public service, be requested to furnish the Senate with copies of all the papers now on the files of the Department of State in the case of Joseph Walsh, who was unlawfully and in violation of existing treaty deprived of his property by certain parties in the republic of Mexico.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can we vote for that? We do not know that he was unlawfully deprived of his property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

FRANCIS T. NICHOLS.

Mr. THURMAN. If the morning business is through, I move that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. No. 26) to remove the political disabilities of Francis T. Nichols, of Louisiana. It has been reported upon favorably by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senate voting in favor thereof.

LUTHER HALL.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to take up Senate bill No. 398.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of Luther Hall was read the second time and considered as in Committe of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents, upon due application made to him therefor, and upon the same evidence and rules of law as in ordinary extension cases, to extend the patent granted to Luther Hall and S. S. Hemenway September 27, 1859, and numbered 25605, for a machine for shaping heels of boots and shoes, for the term of seven years from and after the passage of the act; and the patent so extended shall have the same effect in law as if originally granted to Hall for the term extending to the end of the term for which it shall be so extended; but no person shall be liable for infringing such extended patent by reason of any manufacture, use, or sale subsequent to the 27th day of September, 1873, and prior to the passage of the act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Patents, February 4:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Luther Hall, of Boston, praying that an act be passed authorizing the extension of the letters-patent hereinafter mentioned, respectfully report:

That said Hall is the first and original inventor of certain valuable improvements in machines for trimming the heels of boots and shoes, for which letters-patent of the United States were granted to him and S. S. Hemenway September 27, 1859, numbered 25605, which expired the 27th of September, 1873. The said Hall bestowed time, labor, and skill in inventing and perfecting the improvement patented, and the letters-patent were issued to him and said Hemenway, as his assignee, in consideration of pecuniary aid to a small amount, which was furnished him by Mr. Hemenway while he was engaged in inventing and perfecting the improvement. Without fault on the part of Mr. Hall, he has failed to secure or receive any adequate or considerable compensation for or on account of his said improvement. Prior to ninety days before the expiration of the patent, and on the 18th of June, 1873, Hall, the petitioner, entered into a written contract with the McKoy Heeling-machine Association of Boston, whereby he sold and conveyed to said association all his right to the invention during the term of the letters-patent, and the extension thereof when granted, and agreed to execute all necessary papers to procure the extension or re-issue of the letters-patent; and the association, in consideration thereof, agreed to make all reasonable efforts to procure the extension of the letters-patent, and to pay all the expenses thereof. In and by the contract, the association agreed to pay to the petitioner a royalty of $5 for each machine manufactured or sold by it during the term of the letters patent or their extension, containing any of the improvements secured by the patent. This, with other agreements contained in the contract on the part of the association, was the consideration for the sale and transfer by the petitioner of his title to the improvement. The petitioner was induced to enter into this contract by the representations of the agent of said heeling association, that it was then manufacturing machines embracing his said improvement, and that, if patent was extended, the royalty of $5 for each of the machines the association would make and sell during the extended term would amount to a large sum of money. Immediately after the making of such written contract, and more than ninety days before the patent expired, the petitioner, by the direction of the agent of the association, went to the attorney of the association and executed what he was informed were the necessary papers to apply for the extension of the letters-patent; and he fully believed that the application for the extension of the patent was properly made by the association, and would be granted. Subsequently, and about the time the letters-patent expired, the petitioner learned, for the first time, from the agent of the heeling association, that the application for the extension of the letters-patent had not been made to the Commissioner of Patents, said agent alleging in excuse that the omission was by the negligence of the attorney of the association. The petitioner relied upon the association to file in time and prosecute the application for the extension of the letters-patent, and, but for this reliance, he would have procured an application for the extension to have been made before it was too late to do so. It appears that the said McKoy Heeling-machine Association has been and is manufacturing and selling machines which embrace the improvement invented by the petitioner, and which was secured by the aforesaid letters-patent.

The petitioner has been and is without any considerable means, except his daily wages as a mechanic, and he has made a contract with a responsible party whereby, in the event that said letters-patent are extended for his benefit, it is believed he will realize a fair and just compensation for his invention and improvement.

The committee are of the opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported. All of which is respectfully submitted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL JONES.

Mr. WITHERS. I move the present consideration of Senate bill No. 774.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 774) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel Jones, of Virginia, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

FANNIE S. WHITE.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2288.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2288) granting a pension to Fannie S. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie S. White, widow of Chester B. White, a captain in the United States Army, at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRISON H. DODDS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move the present consideration of Senate bill No. 737.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 737) granting a pension to Harrison H. Dodds was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harrison H. Dodds, late private in Company C, Sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. F. M'MILLEN.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move to take up House bill No. 3033, which was reported yesterday from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of A. F. McMillen, late captain First United States Heavy Artillery, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to A. F. McMillen, late captain First Colored United States Heavy Artillery, $180, the amount of three months' pay proper, as provided by the acts approved March 3, 1865, and July 28, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. H. JENIFER.

Mr. DENNIS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 773.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 773) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry United States Army, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is there any report in this case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no written report. The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

VETO POWER IN ARIZONA TERRITORY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1970.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1970) relating to the approval of bills in the Territory of Arizona was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Territories proposed to amend the bill in lines 19 and 23 by striking out the word "three" and inserting "ten" as the number of days allowed to the governor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Territories to the language of the bill, which says that this territorial act passed in a certain way shall become a law, and suggest whether it is not necessary, in order to put it on the same footing as other territorial laws and not give it the approval of Congress in advance, to say "that all such laws shall be subject as in other cases to the disapproval of Congress." I am a little afraid that as by an act of Congress this bill provides for a specific way to pass a law and says it shall be a law, it would be a little out of the usual category and Congress would have no power afterward to rectify that legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would be a law undoubtedly without that until Congress should disapprove it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it would with that, precisely in the same manner.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the disapproval by Congress of a territorial law would have a different effect from the repeal by Congress of an act of Congress, I think. So I would suggest an amendment by putting in a proviso "that acts so becoming laws as aforesaid shall have the same force and effect, and none other, as the other laws of the Territory." I am sure there is no objection to that to guard against a possibility.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add:

Provided, That acts so becoming laws as aforesaid shall have the same force and effect, and none other, as other laws of the Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. McDONALD. I move to take up for present consideration Senate bill, No. 49, reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (S. No. 49) to confirm to the State of Florida the swamp and overflowed lands granted under the act of September 28, 1850, was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment to strike out the second and third sections, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That all lands in the State of Florida which have been returned as impracticable to survey by reason of being swamp or overflowed shall be certified to said State as swamp and overflowed lands by the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, however, That said Commissioner may require the governor of said State to furnish additional evidence with respect to the character of said lands before certifying the same as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. That in such townships in the State of Florida as are notoriously swamp or overflowed, or where satisfactory evidence shall be furnished to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that such townships are entirely swamp and overflowed, it shall not be necessary to subdivide such townships, but to run only the exterior lines; and where large quantities of land are notoriously swamp or overflowed, or are shown to be such by satisfactory evidence as aforesaid, the Commissioner may direct the surveyor-general to make segregation surveys thereof, running only the exterior lines, upon application to the surveyor-general by the governor of said State. And when surveys are made as herein authorized the surveyor-general shall report the same, with maps thereof, to the General Land Office, representing and describing what land was swamp and overflowed according to the best evidence he can obtain. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to certify over to the State of Florida as swamp and overflowed all the lands represented as such upon the maps or in the returns of the surveyor-general, or which shall be determined to be such upon the testimony taken before the surveyor-general, the decision of the surveyor-general thereon to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the Senator from Indiana to tell us what the bill means, and what is the necessity for passing it on the present state of the law?

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the act of 1850 granting swamp and overflowed lands to the State of Arkansas and other States named in that act. In 1860 a supplemental act was passed extending the provisions of the act of 1850 to the States that had been admitted into the Union since the passage of the first act. It also contained a proviso limiting the right of selection and confirmation to two years after there should be a regular session of the General Assembly of the State in which the lands were situate, where they had been previously surveyed; and if not surveyed, within two years after the survey should be made.

There was no legal Legislature in the State of Florida after the passage of the act of 1860 until after the close of the rebellion and the re-organization of the State, and then within two years from the re-organization of the State the State availed itself of the provisions of the act of 1860 so far as to make and certify its selections; but more than two years having passed, the Commissioner of the General Land Office declined to confirm the selections thus made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On what ground?

Mr. McDONALD. On the ground that the statute of limitations had run against the State; that is, more than two years had transpired after the passage of the act of 1860 before the selections were made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many acres are selected?

Mr. McDONALD. The report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the committee states the number of acres embraced in the selections, which I am not able to state. It is upon the files of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. About how many acres?

Mr. McDONALD. I am not able to state the quantity, because my memory does not serve me on that subject. If it is important, the files of the committee will show the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on that subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this bill recommended by the Interior Department?

Mr. McDONALD. It is not recommended nor is it opposed by the Department of the Interior. The Commissioner of the General Land Office simply declined to confirm the selections because more than two years had passed after the passage and taking effect of the act of 1860.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the sole point presented in the report from the Interior Department?

Mr. McDONALD. That is the sole ground on which the Interior Department refused to act; and the answer is that there was no legal Legislature, no legal body authorized to make these selections after that time had passed, and that the selections have been made within the time since there was a legal Legislature, within the two years. This matter was fully considered in the committee, and the second and third sections, which extended to lands that had not been surveyed, were stricken out, and the bill was confined simply to the surveys and selections. The committee were unanimous in favor of the bill as thus amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida—perhaps he knows—as a mere matter of public information, about how many acres of land are embraced in this bill?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am not prepared to state the number of acres that are embraced in the selections covered by the bill at this time, because I did not conceive it important to ascertain the number of acres.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Cannot the Senator give us an estimate?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I suppose there are at least from five hundred to eight hundred thousand acres. I am not sure as to, and cannot state positively what, the number of acres is. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that this is a matter that affects very deeply the interests of my State. The Supreme Court in 1869 gave a construction to the act of 1850 under which those lands passed to the State of Florida. Just one paragraph from that decision will show the view they take of it:

> By the second section of the act of 1850 it was made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain this fact and furnish the State with the evidence of it.
>
> This was swamp land.
>
> Must the State lose the land, though clearly swamp land, because that officer has neglected to do this? The right of the State did not depend on his action, but on the act of Congress; and though the States might be embarrassed in the assertion of this right by the delay or failure of the Secretary to ascertain and make out lists of these lands, the right of the States to them could not be defeated by that delay.

Under the act of 1850 the title to these lands rested absolutely in the State; the duty of making the selections was devolved on the Secretary of the Interior; and the Supreme Court held in the case before me, the case of the Railroad Company vs. Smith, in 9 Wallace, that the right of the State could not be affected by the failure or omission of the Secretary of the Interior to prepare the lists and have the selections made in accordance with the law. The lands are in this condition: The Government of the United States are not willing to make title to anybody; they say they have no right to regard these lands as part of the public domain; the State of Florida can make no title to anybody; and the matter is tied up in this way so that a settler going there can acquire title from nobody to any portion of these lands. Under this decision the Government cannot regard them as part of the public domain; and the State of Florida, not having the lands surveyed and patents granted, cannot deal with them. That is the condition of affairs.

Mr. McDONALD. There can be no question that but for the act of 1860, the title to these lands would be good in the State of Florida, by virtue of the act of 1850.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What did the act of 1850 provide in respect to the proceeds of such swamp lands?

Mr. McDONALD. It required that they should be applied to the reclamation of these lands, and that same provision is in the fourth section of this act precisely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly I have no disposition to stand in the way of the State of Florida; but there is a general impression in this country, more or less well founded, that this swamp-land business has been carried until it is pretty dry, and that wherever the dew has fallen States have appropriated large quantities of what are called in the statute swamp lands, but which when taken up for cultivation turn out to be arable and fine and good lands.

I do not know but that it is too late to make any criticism upon that species of disposition of these lands. Certainly the States get the benefit of them, and that perhaps is better than their going into the hands of private speculators. But in most of these cases it has turned out, if you take the opinion of intelligent travelers, writers, and citizens of the States, that what are called swamp lands are really in a large degree not swamp lands, but good lands, and that it is a mere means of getting into the hands of the State or its authorities large quantities of the public domain to be disposed of for such beneficial uses as they may think fit. Certainly, as this case seems to stand upon the old law, and is not an enlargement of it, and as it is said to stand merely upon a point of time, I shall interpose no opposition to the report of the committee on this bill.

Mr. McDONALD. That is all. It stands simply on the point of time.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HORACE GLOVER.

Mr. KEY. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 811) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, the surviving partner of James Cowan, deceased, heretofore trading and doing business under the firm name and style of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tennessee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to suggest to my friend from Tennessee that there are but five minutes left of the morning hour, and I am very certain that bill cannot pass in the morning hour, and I know the question has been up before and has always provoked discussion.

Mr. KEY. I do not wish to impose on the Senate this morning.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should willingly give way if I supposed the Senator could get the bill through.

Mr. KEY. I hope, then, I shall be allowed to bring it up to-morrow morning. I yield this morning to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not wish to be understood as antagonizing my friend, but I understand the case. There is a little House bill, No. 1592, that I should like to have passed. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1592) to re-imburse Horace Glover for property unlawfully seized and sold by the United States Government was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Treasurer of the United States to pay to Horace Glover or his legal assignee or representatives the sum of $388.50, being the amount realized by the United States Government through the unlawful seizure and sale of Glover's property; but Glover, or his legal assignee or representative, is to release and assign to the United States all claim or right of action against any officer of the United States or his sureties on account of the seizures.

The Committee on Claims report the bill with an amendment, which was in line 11, after the word "claim," to strike out the word "or" and to insert "to said money and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state to the Senator from Vermont in a moment that it seems that this man's property was seized because of an alleged violation of the revenue laws, and being perishable was sold, and the money passed into the hands of the United States officer. It turned out afterwad that he was acquitted entirely of any offense against the Government; it was found that he was entirely innocent. My friend suggests that the word "assignee" had better be stricken out of the bill because of the general feeling that it is thought to be true public policy and better that the person immediately interested should receipt for it. I have no objection to striking out those words, as there are amendments to the bill anyhow, and it will have to go back to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to strike out, in line 6 and line 10, the words "assignee or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Clerk be kind enough to read the first part of the bill? It is suggested that it says "the Treasurer of the United States," when it should be "the Secretary of the Treasury."

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> That the Treasurer of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, &c.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to strike out the word "Treasurer" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THEODORE GARDNER.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 767.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 767) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theodore Gardner, late sergeant First Battery, Kansas Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS F. WILDES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to act upon House bill No. 3179.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3179) granting a pension to Thomas F. Wildes, late lieutenant-colonel, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, legislative and executive business is suspended and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make proclamation.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session. The unfinished business of yesterday is the business in order.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] to lay upon the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] and the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understood that the vote was taken upon my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote was taken by yeas and nays, but there was no quorum voting, which leaves that the pending question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will withdraw that motion, if I can do so at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It cannot be withdrawn after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I supposed it could be done by general consent. If there is any disposition to object, I shall not ask to withdraw the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays were taken, the Chair understands, but there was no quorum. Therefore the motion can be withdrawn by common consent. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAYTON. I object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion can be withdrawn by leave of the Senate, I think, by the rules. I do not see what the point is of objecting.

Mr. CLAYTON. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have withdrawn my motion to lay the amendment on the table by general consent, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I inquire what the question is now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, which will be reported.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Before that is done, I ask the general consent of the Senate to allow me to move that the rule of five minutes be made to apply to any further debate on this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that will not be done until we dispose of this important matter pending.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care, however. I have expressed my views upon the amendment, and I make no objection to the proposition of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will not press the motion at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I venture to make the motion that debate be limited to five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that debate on this bill be limited to five minutes under the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment proposed by Mr. CLAYTON was to add to section 3 the following words:

That the appointments in all the Executive Departments of the Government shall be so arranged as to be equally distributed between the several States of the United States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, according to population; and the principle of equal distribution of appointments as above provided for shall apply in making reductions of force in said Departments.

Mr. EDMUNDS proposes to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

And all such appointments shall be made upon a careful and impartial examination of the candidate therefor by a board composed of not less than five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the most capable and worthy of the competitors so examined shall be elected for such appointments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont explain to me whether the amendment requires that they shall turn out the excess now in or whether it is only to operate upon appointments in the future?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that that point is not now precisely up. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, which merely provides that this appointment be made as proposed in the original amendment after an examination by a board, from which the most worthy and competent thus ascertained shall be selected. That is all the pending question.

Mr. THURMAN. The question, then, is not on the original proposition?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; but on the amendment to it.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I will state to him that the language of the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas is the language of the statute now relating to the Treasury Department, and the construction of that Department is to make no removals except when vacancies occur either by death, resignation, or otherwise. Then the changes are made in favor of the States which lack their quota; but the Department makes no removal under the statute, and this is a similar provision of law.

Mr. CRAGIN. Except the latter part of it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont be reported separately.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. I simply want to say that we already have upon the statute-book authority for the President to constitute a board and to take such steps for the ascertainment of the qualifications of those applying for positions in the Department, as fully in my judgment as a member of this body as seems necessary. If the Senator from Vermont desires to put in force the civil-service rules again, it seems to me that could be accomplished by offering an appropriation for that purpose. As I understand, the civil-service regulations fell to the ground for the lack of an appropriation to continue them. If we constitute this board, it will be simply doing by Congress what the President now has the authority to do, as I understand, provided you give him the appropriation needed for that purpose. It seems to me that the best way to meet this question, if it is desirable to establish the civil-service examinations, would be to propose an amendment to the bill making the necessary appropriation for that purpose. I shall not favor the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, because I do not think it arrives at the question in the best way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law now, it is true, authorizes the President of the United States to institute a civil-service board—if that be the name of it—and to make such rules and regulations for it, or to allow it to make such rules and regulations for itself, as may seem meet for an admission to the civil service. This act of Congress would require by act of law, if it be agreed to, that a board shall be constituted not subject to the discretion of the President, for we do not know exactly who he will be yet, and the next President may not be so much in favor of civil service as the present President is, who did strive faithfully and manfully, as I believe, to carry it out. How far Senators, including myself, and other people connected with the Government, assisted to break down the experiment, I will not take up the time to say; but it was broken down by one means or another. Now I propose that we shall make another manful effort to make worthiness and capacity the leading characteristics in selecting persons for mere clerical work in the Departments to which the amendment of my friend from Arkansas applies. That is the proposition.

Mr. WEST. Character and fitness.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Character and competency. The present law may authorize the board to arrange all sorts of rules. This makes the test, by law, character and competency, adjusting the appointments from the various States. Is it not worth while to try for a year or two more an experiment framed in this way, that a sufficient board, at least five, and if the applications are so numerous that they cannot dispose of them make them more as this amendment allows, may be instituted, whose duty it shall be among the various candidates from any one State to determine, not upon how much has been said at a corner grocery or how strongly a particular man or his friends boosted me for Congress or the Senate, but how he stands in respect of character and ability to perform duties that he is to perform; not political duties, but work.

This, Mr. President, is a broad advance, it strikes me, over the present loose state of the law; and if we are willing to try it once more upon those two tests by a board composed with the assent of this body, as to what persons, if there be fifty from Arkansas and twenty from Vermont in those respective States, are to be selected, providing that those impartially found to be the most worthy and the most competent shall be selected for that State, now is the time to do it, and here. If we do not wish to enter upon any such scheme, then we shall leave matters to go as they have done in this country since its earlier and better days, as some people call them. I do not think they were better days. They were better I think in these respects, but much worse in other respects. Now, I say, is our time to do it.

Latterly, since 1830, and along there, the notion has prevailed that "to the victors belong the spoils," and that the hottest politician at the primaries is to be the man who is to have the place, as distinguished from his brother republican or democrat who has voted just as well as he did, but who happens to know how to read and write the English language and who is not overfond of all sorts of dissipation, and who means to do his duty in other respects as well as in mere political respects. If he can do it better than the politician, then I submit that the true politician—and I do not claim to be anything else than a politician—ought to desire him.

That is the object of my amendment. I believe I have spent my time.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont before he takes his seat whether it is his intention to have all the appointees of the Treasury Department subjected to this examination?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is my intention to have exactly what my proposition fairly imports. I will not go into a discussion of how much it imports, because I desire to deal with entire candor: but if I have time, as the saying is, I desire to say that all the classes of appointments that my friend's amendment refers to, and that I understand him to mean it to refer to, although the language is not clear—those in the Executive Departments here in Washington—are intended to be embraced by my amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. My amendment not only includes the clerks, but the messengers and laborers employed in the various Departments. If my amendment does not include them, I certainly meant to make it do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then my friend means what his proposition does not state. His proposition says "appointments." We appoint a clerk, we hire a laborer.

Mr. CLAYTON. Do we not appoint a messenger?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We appoint a messenger, probably. I do not know how that is, but I should be perfectly willing to have this test applied to them, and I think it desirable, for messengers often perform clerical duties and are intrusted with most important work. I am not at all disturbed at the danger of having an examination into the fitness of a man for a messenger, not the slightest. If there be ten from Arkansas and only three to be appointed, then I say the three men from Arkansas ought to be appointed who will make the best messengers, who are most worthy and most competent.

Mr. CLAYTON. I agree to that. I want to do the best thing, of course.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I am almost disposed to vote for any measure that will increase the competency and efficiency of the clerical service or the service in any of the Departments. I wish to do so. But the question as presented involves me in embarrassment. As I understand, the Senator from Vermont has proposed an amendment to the one already offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I will vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont because, whatever may be the result, it is a look, in my judgment, in the right direction; but, if it be adopted by the Senate and made a part of the proposition submitted by the Senator from Arkansas, then I shall vote against it, because the two things are incongruous. You seek to improve your service, and then you undertake to fix the limits within which you shall get your appointees, whether they are as well qualified as others or not. I should like to vote upon the two propositions distinct: against the one and for the other. I will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont; but, if it is incorporated with the first one, I will then vote against them both; because there is more of evil in the first than there is of good in the second, and, indeed, the one part negatives and nullifies the other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not entirely.

Mr. HAMLIN. No, I will not say entirely; but it has that tendency, the Senator will admit. I think if you are going to improve your service you want the best men, those best qualified, most efficient, and most competent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have read for the benefit of the Senate the proposition of the Senator from Vermont alone.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. This proposition requires a board of officers to be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to pass upon all appointments for the Executive Departments at Washington, covering all the different Departments of the Government. In the first place, it is totally impracticable for a single board to pass upon the appointments of the various officers of the Government here. Besides, the Constitution of the United States declares that the power to appoint shall be vested either in the President of the United States or in the heads of Departments. Each head of a Department has the power to appoint; and yet here is to be a board, not responsible to any head of a Department, controlling and governing all the appointments made in all the Departments of this Government. It seems to me it is totally impracticable, with due deference to the opinion of the Senator from Vermont.

On the other hand, if Congress really desires to promote civil service reform and will make a suitable appropriation to carry it into effect, the law now upon the statute-book is ample and admirably expressed, was adopted after full debate and with words carefully chosen so as to give the President of the United States power not only to appoint one but several boards, not only to appoint several boards, one for each Department, but to appoint them from officers of the Government now existing without creating any new office, or to appoint boards with a special aptitude for particular appointments. For instance, in the Patent Office you would appoint persons experienced in one line of life, in the Treasury Department you would appoint persons experienced in another line of life, because the employés in these Offices are to do an entirely different duty. I will close by reading the present law, because this law is better expressed than the proposition now submitted by the Senator from Vermont, and both are alike ineffectual without an appropriation to carry them out:

> The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations for the admission of persons into the civil service of the United States as may best promote the efficiency thereof, and ascertain the fitness of each candidate in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability for the branch of service into which he seeks to enter; and for this purpose he may employ suitable persons to conduct such inquiries, and may prescribe their duties and establish regulations for the conduct of persons who may receive appointments in the civil service. (Revised Statutes, section 1753.)

Then the next section provides that—

> Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

It seems to me that these sections cover all that is necessary, except, I think, a reasonable appropriation ought to be made for extra pay to officers of the Government who may be designated in each Department for its service, or, if necessary, power given to appoint agents in lieu of officers of the Government at the payment of a reasonable salary.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I am extremely reluctant to vote against any proposition which is offered with a view of improving the character of our civil service. I will not vote against any proposition which, in my judgment, will have the effect of improving that service. I shall be obliged, with the present light I have, to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, for the satisfactory reason to myself that I honestly believe that instead of its improving the service, it would demoralize the civil service.

One thing which your examining committee can determine, and the only thing entering into the fitness of a man for one of these clerical positions, is the amount of his literary attainments; but when you determine which of two or which of a dozen men is the farthest advanced in literary pursuits, you have not begun to determine the question of his fitness for clerical duties. He may be one of the best scholars extant and be totally unfit for any clerical position in these Departments. It is diligence, fidelity, a spirit of accommodation——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not that fall under the head of worthiness and competency?

Mr. HOWE. That falls under the head of worthiness and competency; but they are questions which no examination by a board of examiners can determine. Trial and trial alone will determine them. You make the head of the Department responsible and hold him responsible for the character and the conduct of every man who is in his Department, and then you may look for reasonable service, if you get a proper man at the head of the Department; but you put the best man in the United States at the head of a Department and make his subordinates responsible, not to him, but responsible to some board having no connection with him and not responsible to him, and he loses control of his employés from that moment.

Mr. President, I know how diligently the idea is held out that if you do not have some such machine as that of an examining committee to intervene, these clerical positions are rated as mere political gifts for partisan services. It may be they are. The inference is that as long as such is the case incompetent men will be put into office in order to promote the election of shiftless and worthless men to Congress and other positions. I have not understood myself that that was exactly the shortest way to get into Congress or to get into any other desirable position, to appoint worthless men to subordinate positions. I supposed a better way, in the face of an intelligent people, was to promote the appointment of good, competent men, worthy men. I do not believe any man can promote his election to the Senate from the State of Vermont by gathering up all the vagabonds he can find on the street-corners, although they talk politics very glibly, very loudly, and crowding these Departments with them. I do not think the Senator from Vermont will testify that he has ever tried that, and I do not believe he will testify or admit that he would think it a safe experiment.

I know there is a great deal of odium at the present day heaped upon that old adage "To the victors belong the spoils." That is an unworthy sentiment, and it is an untrue one in every point of view. There are no spoils under our system for victors to control. There are duties which every national election charges upon the victors; and the one great duty, which includes all others, is to administer the Government to the best interest of the American people; and I want every administration, be it with me or against me, to fill that duty charged upon it, and to be as unrestricted in the discharge of that duty as it is possible for it to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOWE. Well, I am through.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I think the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is inadequate to accomplish the purpose he evidently has in view. It provides a commission without any means of executing it——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we cannot get the commission we shall not need the means; and if we get the commission we shall try to find the means.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have had a little experience on that point, I will say to my friend from Vermont. When we had an ample method of doing it, we could not get the means. I remember that within the last eighteen months the President of the United States gave notice to the Congress of this nation that unless an appropriation was made he would withdraw the rules and regulations he had made in regard to the public service on this branch. He had ample authority under the act of Congress; he had taken the necessary steps as he supposed in his way; I do not stop to comment on the system established; but the Congress of the United States absolutely refused to make the appropriation; and now, I submit to my honorable friend, what encouragement is there to suppose that if it is renewed in this shape he will meet with any better success?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The encouragement is that I trust Congress is in a better mind now than it was then; and, second, I trust if this amendment of mine be adopted together with that of the Senator from Arkansas, and without it if his should be modified in any way, the Committee on Appropriations will feel it to be a pleasure, as well as a duty, to bring in an item to pay necessary expense.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not going to argue the proposition at all. It is incomplete in itself and does not improve the case one particle over what it is now under the statute. It provides for a commission. That is already provided for amply. The President may appoint them to-morrow, and if you can persuade him and give him the means, he will do it doubtless. It neither fixes the salary nor prescribes the duty particularly of these parties, nor does it provide funds to pay them. That is all for the future, and of course it will be all left open. Therefore, I submit it is no more complete than the proposition we have now.

But that is not my objection. My objection is that I do not think it lies in the way of my honorable friend from Vermont to raise this question of legislation on an appropriation bill. Not twenty minutes before my honorable friend proposed this legislation he objected to a matter that he supposed was legislation proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senate overruled me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator, after some explanation I believe, withdrew his point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I gave it up as entirely impracticable. Now I propose to swim with the stream. That is all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I propose that my honorable friend shall not swim with the stream against the principles he inculcates for the rest of us here, and I object to putting this legislation on these bills and on this bill particularly, because we did say that the other House had been doing very erroneous things on this bill and the Senate has sustained from the beginning, manfully and bravely, the doctrine that we would not have legislation on this bill. Wherever else you choose to put it, I insist upon it that it ought not to go on this bill. There could be no better evidence that this thing ought not to go on this bill and is pernicious than the fact that we were on the point of going into the Senate with this bill when this proposition was offered and we might have passed the bill in twenty minutes, but we are here at the end of another day and may be at the end of another day still discussing a proposition which is already on the statute-book.

Mr. WEST. O, no.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The part I am speaking of now is already on the statute-book, very much more complete than this. I am addressing myself to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, because that is most open to the objection.

Now, in regard to the other proposition, I have not the slightest objection in the world that the principle that is applicable to the Treasury Department as to the distribution of appointments shall apply to the other Departments; but I regret that anything of this kind should be put upon an appropriation bill, especially under the circumstances of this case. This bill is the most troublesome one that we have. If you choose to put it on any other bill, I shall feel less strenuous about it than I do on this. The Senate may occupy as much time as they choose with it on some other bill. I moved yesterday to lay this proposition on the table. If we can have the vote taken, I will not try that motion again; but unless it is taken I give notice that I shall try to get the sense of the Senate in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not know but that I have occupied my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has two minutes more.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I have something to say on the subject. My honorable friend from Maine finds difficulty with this proposition of mine, because it is imperfect, and therefore I think the motion is a very proper one to make, to send the bill back to the committee and have them make it perfect; for I cannot doubt that the committee, after having heard the reasons that are urged in favor of this proposition, endeavoring to improve and better the civil service of the United States in the Departments in Washington, and not undertaking to examine every country postmaster (as the present law requires if you do anything about it at all) that his neighbors want to have occupy a seven-dollar store—I say I cannot doubt that when the committee come to consider this proposition, as it will be carried by recommitting the bill with it for their consideration, if it lacks an appropriation or lacks any other matter of detail, to make it what it ought to be to achieve the end in view, the committee will consider it, and will so report.

My honorable friend from Maine says that on this particular bill this is especially objectionable, because this is the most difficult bill of any. I had not so supposed before. The largest part of this bill is merely to provide compensation for the fixed officers and employés of the Government; it does not contain any policy; it does not contain any large amount of discretionary appropriations, as the miscellaneous bill for instance does, and as the deficiency bill always does. This is a bill like the pension bill, and so on, which has less of intrinsic difficulty in it than any other. Therefore, Mr. President, if we are to legislate at all upon appropriation bills, which I have said over and over again, with one notable exception, I think we ought never to have done, this is the bill.

But my friend from Maine says that I am acting inconsistently myself in proposing this amendment only twenty minutes or less after I had opposed one by the Senator from Ohio on the ground that it was legislation. I only reply to that that if the Senate, as it has shown, is of the opinion that legislation upon this bill is suitable where there is a necessity for it, then there is the highest necessity when we are providing for the clerks and appointees in the Departments at Washington that we should provide for reducing the expenses of the Government by taking pains to select the most worthy and the most competent, in order that the least number of men and at the least expense to the tax-payers may be employed in this public service. That is the proposition.

But the honorable Senator from Ohio says or intimates that we are invading the Constitution, because we are putting a bridle upon the power of appointment mentioned in the Constitution as being capable of being attributed to the head of a Department in the clause which says that the President shall appoint or that Congress may by law vest the appointment in the heads of Departments of officers of the United States. Sir, there have been laws on the statute-book ever since the Government was formed and nobody has suspected until now that they were unconstitutional, that when you come to regulate the power of appointment that the Constitution confers on the President as you may, you may define the qualifications and the class of persons from whom appointments shall be made. The very first statute that was passed creating the office of Attorney-General of the United States required that he should be selected from persons learned in the law. If that be constitutional (and who will doubt it?) is it not competent, when the statute says that the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint clerks, that he shall appoint those who have been ascertained by a method provided by law to be most worthy and most competent to discharge the duties they are called upon to exercise? I take it not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon of the Chair. This is on the motion to recommit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator has spoken five minutes on this motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot help that. The rule, if the Chair will be kind enough to read it, applies to amendments. Will the Chair be good enough to have the rule read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should not resort to this means of expressing my opinion were not this a very important subject, and I am sure the Senate will pardon me in taking advantage of my strict right to reply, as I have had no opportunity to do before, to the objections made by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maine to my simple proposition. I am sure neither of my friends will suppose that I do this in any captious spirit, but in order that the Senate may fairly understand the two sides of the question; and I shall be as brief as possible.

My friend from Ohio says that the existing law is adequate to this purpose, and that this is merely a re-enactment of the existing law. That is an entire mistake. The existing law is that the President is authorized—not required—"to prescribe such rules and regulations for admission of persons into the civil service of the United States as may best promote the efficiency thereof, and ascertain," &c. That leaves everything to his discretion. This provides two tests—the test of worthiness and the test of capacity—only it fixes them by law. It leaves no discretion to anybody. It applies a clear and intelligible rule.

In the next place, the statute now in force applies to the whole civil service of the United States—not to the Departments at Washington, as the proposition of my friend from Arkansas does, which is practicable; but the law as it now stands covers every postmaster, every collector of internal revenue, every marshal, every person employed in the civil service of the United States over the whole vast area of the continent.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the Senator a question? Is it not in the power of the President, under the existing law, to make it apply to the Departments at Washington alone?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it is in the power of the President to repeal or ignore one-half of this law and split it in two. The power given to him is one consolidated power.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is he not to exercise it in his discretion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; but it must be applied to admissions to the civil service, which is the whole civil service of the United States, and it has been so construed. If this thing is intrinsically disagreeable to anybody, we cannot escape on the idea that we have this law now. We have not got it, as I have shown, and the President never undertook to exercise the discretion of confining it to one-half the performance of his duty. He would have been derelict in his duty if he had done so. He applied it everywhere, and there were difficulties about it, and there was a great class of officers to which in the nature of things it could not and ought not to apply. The matter of postmasters is a chief and prominent illustration in all the small towns and hamlets, where it was impossible in the thirty or forty thousand there are to make such examination or to make the system apply. But now we come down to the concrete question of whether in the Departments at Washington, where there are so many applications from all the States that are being constantly turned away because there are not enough places for them to fill, we will say that among those applying from the various States the most worthy and most competent shall be selected and provide the means of finding out that fact. That is the question.

My friend from Wisconsin says that he does not believe that the corner-grocery politicians and the vagabonds are selected because they have urged the election of the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Wisconsin. Very likely not; and very likely so in respect of any of the States; I have no doubt it is so; but we all know on all sides of this Chamber that one of the most unpleasant duties we have to perform, one that we perform in as small a degree as any one of the duties that are imposed upon us either by custom or by law, is among the great mass of our friends who are ambitious to serve their country from our respective States, to see which ones ought to be recommended. We dislike to say no. If a man has been an eager and earnest friend of ours or of our party, which is more—because it is very rarely undoubtedly a personal question with Senators or members, but for our party—if he has been eager and earnest "in season and out of season," we cannot help in some degree being impressed that he is the best man for the public service, and we put our name on his paper and he gets in.

Now, Mr. President, I wish for one to relieve myself from whatever responsibility there may be in that respect and from what great failure of duty they may have been in that respect, so far as my responsibility has gone; and I desire to make these appointments in the Departments, where mere work is to be done as I have said, and not politics or policies are to be exercised, depend, when persons come from my State or from any other and there are more than one or a dozen among those to be selected, upon the fitness of the man to perform the duties of the place and his worthiness as a trustworthy and faithful individual. That is the proposition.

If we could once adopt it and turn our backs upon this pressure that we all bring to bear on the Departments to get places for our political friends, I think we should make a great improvement in the civil service; and I verily believe that in one or two years, when there should have been time enough to have the effect of this measure felt, we could reduce the number of clerks in the Treasury Department, for instance—I only speak of that as an illustration—down to or below the point that the House of Representatives had now proposed; and that we could improve the exactness and the fidelity and the promptness with which business is dispatched. Experience in the countries where this has been tried has, I believe, proved this to be so. I am sincerely desirous that we shall try it once more in this way here applied to our Departments in Washington where it is in hand and within reach and is practicable.

Mr. President, I apologize, if I need do so, to my friend from Maine for having taken advantage of my right to move to recommit this bill, because I thought it was fair that I should reply to the objections that had been made.

Mr. MCCREERY. I will take the sense of the Senate on a motion to adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 19.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, noes 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Booth, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, McCreery, Mitchell, Norwood, Sargent, Saulsbury, and Stevenson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bruce, Burnside, Christiancy, Cockrell, Dennis, Edmunds, Ferry, Hitchcock, Howe, Key, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Paddock, Sherman, West, Whyte, and Withers—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Windom, and Wright—37.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. LOGAN. Can I vote now, sir?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not after the result has been announced.

Mr. HOWE. Is a motion to call the absentees in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the names of those not voting be called, not the absentees.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the same thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the names of those not voting be called.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the absentees.

Mr. SARGENT. Is it now in order to move an adjournment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 25, noes 13; and (at five o'clock and thirty-six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 6, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a correction of the Journal. I understand that the Journal is incorrect in two particulars in its narrative of the proceedings of yesterday; first, in stating that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] made a motion to suspend the rules, pending which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] moved to refer the pending matters. I understand that the order of those motions was, and of course it must have been, the other way; that is, that pending the motion to refer, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] made the motion to suspend the rules; second, I understand that the Journal is incorrect in omitting all reference whatever to the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY.] The gentleman from Iowa raised the point of order that if the special order prevented the disposition of the pending matter by the motion to suspend the rules and pass the pending resolution, it equally prevented the disposition of the pending matter by a motion to refer it to a committee. That point of order was made by the gentleman from Iowa and was overruled by the Chair, and of that the Journal takes no notice. I insist that the Journal shall be corrected in both particulars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.) The Chair will state that all the motions are comprehended in the statement which the Journal contains. The Clerk will read that portion of the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLAINE, as a question of privilege, submitted the following resolution, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report forthwith to the House whether in acting under the resolution of the House of May 2, relative to the purchase by the Pacific Railroad Company of seventy-five land-grant bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad, it has sent any telegram to one Josiah Caldwell, in Europe, and received a reply thereto. And, if so, to report said telegram and reply, with the date when said reply was received, and the reasons why the same has been suppressed. And whether they have heard from the said Josiah Caldwell in any other way, and to what effect."

After debate, Mr. BLAINE demanded the previous question on said resolution, and the House refused to second the same.

Mr. BLAINE then moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Pending which,

Mr. BANNING moved its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCCRARY renewed the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER made the point of order that under the order of the House made on Friday last the motion to suspend the rules was not in order after two o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore sustained the point of order.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. BANNING, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. MCCRARY, of Iowa, made the point of order that the motion to refer was cut off by the same special order. That is not contained or implied in the statement of the Journal, neither is the decision of the Chair narrated in the Journal or in any part of the Journal narrative. With the permission of the Chair I will read from the RECORD upon that subject:

Mr. MCCRARY. I rise to a point of order. The Chair has decided, when a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass the resolution, that motion was excluded by the fact that the special order for this day excluded all other business. My point of order is, that, if the special order is of such high privilege as to exclude the motion to suspend the rules, it is also of such high privilege as to exclude the motion to refer this resolution. I now call for the special order.

Mr. HOLMAN. This resolution is before the House regularly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this resolution has come up, as he supposes, properly before the House after the question raised by the gentleman from Maine of privilege or personal explanation, whichever it was; and the resolution at the end of his remarks was before the House without objection, but not to be disposed of irregularly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the House that the ruling of the Chair cutting off all motions to suspend the rules after two o'clock overruled all other points of order made; and the Chair did not then and does not now understand that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] made strictly a point of order, but that what he said was rather an argument to sustain the point of order which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] had made in reference thereto.

Mr. HOAR. I am perfectly willing to let this matter about the amendment of the Journal stand with the consent of the House until the Speaker can examine the RECORD, for I am quite sure that the Chair after such examination will himself direct the Journal to be corrected.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that that portion of the Journal be again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the reading, I desire to state that I have had some experience in making up the journals of legislative bodies, and I am of the impression that the custom is on points of order not to insert them on the record unless they dispose of the pending motion.

Mr. HOAR. We have an express rule that all points of order shall be entered on the Journal.

Mr. SPRINGER. At the end, but not recorded in the Journal.

Mr. GARFIELD. They appear in the RECORD, of course, but also in the Journal.

Mr. SPRINGER. It has not occurred to me that points of order overruled that do not dispose of the pending motion have been inserted in the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the Journal shows that Mr. MCCRARY's point of order was journalized.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Chair does not understand me. My proposition is that Mr. MCCRARY made a distinct point of order, to wit, that the call for the special order superseded the motion to refer the resolution.

The Chair had previously ruled that the call for the special order superseded the motion to suspend the rules. Then Mr. MCCRARY rose, after that ruling, saying distinctly, not as an argument relating to the ruling, "I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the call for the special order supersedes also this motion to refer." Now, that point of order of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] was overruled by the Chair, and it is that decision of the Chair which is not in the Journal.

In regard to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] allow me to say that our rules specifically require that there shall be in a separate place at the end of the Journal a statement of all the points of order upon which the Chair has ruled. Of course it is absurd to suppose that this statement at the end of the Journal, which is a mere collection of these rulings for convenient reference, is required to be made when the Journal itself does not show the truth of the statement. It is merely a collection of the rulings which the Journal shows to have been made. There is no possible significance in this matter except to have our Journal correct; it does not affect either side of the question. It is merely for the correctness of the Journal. The public, of course, will ordinarily refer to the RECORD for the history of the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will read the RECORD, which he thinks will verify the Journal:

The point of order being now raised, the Chair must decide that no motion to suspend the rules after two o'clock is in order, that being the unanimous agreement of the House on Friday last.

That is a comprehensive ruling, covering any point that might be raised. The Chair also stated subsequently as follows:

The Chair has denied no right to be heard to the gentleman from Maine. He adheres to his decision that after two o'clock to-day no motion to suspend the rules can be made.

Then Mr. MCCRARY said:

I rise to appeal to the Chair whether a motion to refer the resolution is in order?

That was not exactly making a point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair will look at the bottom of the column——

Mr. HOAR. At the bottom of the first column on the forty-third page of the RECORD; that is what I refer to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair observes that at the bottom of the first column of the forty-third page Mr. MCCRARY did clearly make that point of order, and also the other one; at the same time both points were made. But it seems to the Chair that the latter point of order was included in the ruling of the Chair upon the first point. The Chair would state that the Journal might well be corrected in that regard to show that the point of order was made, and that it was overruled in the general ruling of the Chair. The Chair did not rule specifically upon that point, but his general ruling comprehended it.

Mr. HOAR. One observation, with great respect to the Chair. The very fact that the Chair was of opinion that Mr. MCCRARY's point of order was covered by the first ruling of the Chair is itself a decision of that point of order; that it is covered by the principle previously asserted. And if that is a ruling on the point, it should appear in the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will understand the Chair when he says that he intended the ruling to be this: that the resolution of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] whatever its character, had no other privilege than if it had been introduced on some other day than Monday; that is, the Chair understood that after two o'clock on Monday no motion to suspend the rules could be entertained.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. That was not the order of the House, but that during the pendency of the Geneva award bill on Monday motions to suspend the rules should not be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; that is not the order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair accepts the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] and the Journal will be corrected if the gentleman will write out the proposed correction. Whatever the RECORD shows is no doubt correct, and the statements of the RECORD upon the matter will be journalized properly.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2456) to release any title of the United States to a certain tract of land in Braxton County, West Virginia, to Sarah Wilson.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOONE. I move to suspend the rules so as to take from the Speaker's table——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to suspend the rules is not in order to-day; the gentleman can ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BOONE. Then I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage Senate bill No. 590, providing for an agreement with the Sioux Nation in regard to a portion of their reservation, and for other purposes.

Mr. REAGAN. I object; that is an important matter and should receive the consideration of a committee.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order, and ask that the unfinished business of Saturday be now proceeded with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business of Saturday is the report of the Committee on Rules, made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] proposing to add to Rule 152 that which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And on any question referred to them by the House in relation to the currency, the said committee may, during the present session, report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. On that I ask the previous question.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope my colleague will allow some discussion. This is a very important proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time does my colleague ask?

Mr. KELLEY. A few minutes, if no more. I speak for myself only when I ask for a few minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to giving as much time for discussion as will conduce to a proper understanding of the subject, and I will willingly yield to my colleague ten minutes, if he wishes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman [Mr. RANDALL] yield to his colleague, [Mr. KELLEY?]

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For how long?

Mr. RANDALL. Ten minutes. I understand that is more than he asks.

Mr. KELLEY. I said, "a few minutes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has ten minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, we are within a few days of the final adjournment, if we may believe popular hope and expectation or attach significance to the idea of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who has proposed by resolution the 12th of this month as the day for adjournment. Of course adjournment at that date is impracticable; but we near the time for adjournment. And now, when deliberation has become impossible, one of the most important committees in the House, one that is charged with the consideration of that subject which is of most vital moment to a suffering community, the currency, comes in after six months of wasted time and asks that the rules may be set aside that it may force bills through under the previous question at any time, having given us an indication of the fairness with which it will execute the new power by the fact that this change of rule was attempted to be put through at five o'clock last Saturday afternoon, when but one-third of the House was in attendance.

For four months after the committees had been appointed the country understood that the Committee on Banking and Currency abstained from the consideration of the business confided to it, because another committee, not known to this House and consisting in part only of members thereof, were considering questions belonging legitimately to it. At length I tried to goad them into emancipating themselves from the control of a body unknown to either this House or the laws of the country—a committee consisting, I say, in part of gentlemen not members of this House and not responsible for the performance of its duties—and received assurance that it had escaped from the restraint. Since then, two months more have gone, but the committee has presented no practical measure to the House for consideration. I may say, as Lord Londonderry said when the resumption act was under discussion in England and gentlemen were talking of overproduction and underconsumption, "Gentlemen, you are not discussing the real question; the disease of the country lies in the currency; the question of the day is a question relating to the currency." Yet the Committee on Banking and Currency has not submitted a single measure or any evidence that it has had the question under consideration.

And now on the eve of an adjournment, when haste and confusion prevail, the settled rules of the House are to be set aside in order that measures relating to this subtle and complex question may be dictated by the committee, may be forced through under the previous question, and, as I have said, may be adopted when one-third only of the House are in their seats. I am opposed to changing the rules. If the committee has been derelict, as I believe the country will hold that it has, let it bear the penalty. Nothing that it can now report for the relief of the people is likely to become a law. With the impeachment before the Senate, with the dog-days approaching, the Senate will not be likely to consider and adopt anything this House may without deliberation send to it, and the passage of which has required such a modification of our rules as removed the restraints upon hasty and improvident legislation. There will be no time for the President to consider such a bill; and any measure, should it happen to receive the concurrence of the Senate, that passes may be vetoed without the responsibility of a veto, by being pocketed by the Executive.

Sir, the country demands the consideration of the currency question. Those who at the opening of this session, believing with undoubting faith in their theories, demanded the early resumption of specie payments are now praying for the repeal of the act providing therefor. The gorge of the country rises at what we are doing now in increasing our gold indebtedness for the purchase of depreciating silver and the cancellation of greenbacks. This country laughs to scorn that legislative wisdom which proposes to increase the volume of fractional currency by substituting silver thus dearly bought for fractional notes of like denomination, leaving the amount in circulation just what it now is.

Let us now, at the end of six wasted months, have bills brought fairly before the House, under the rules; let them be subjected to such consideration and discussion as the lateness of the season will permit. If, as I have already said, the Committee on Banking and Currency for four months was improperly restrained from considering its duties and for two more has staggered under the great responsibility resting upon it, let the country understand it. Our rules are wise; they are supported by the results of experience. They guard the rights of the minority, a thing that used to be sacred on the other side of the House; and let them stand.

Gentlemen may tell me that this change is proposed in order to secure the adoption of a measure that I desire: the repeal of the resumption act. Sir, any day during more than six months past a bill for that purpose could have been reported; we could have discussed it and disposed of it deliberately. I am in favor of it. I believe the industries of the country are paralyzed by the existence of that act, that it is a standing menace which paralyzes production and trade.

I believe that no relief can come to the suffering toilers and men of energy and enterprise until that act shall be repealed. Why then resist the change of rules? Who will tell me what hellish brood of bills may follow that act if the committee be authorized to report any bill at any time? The bill referred to cannot become a law. I have indicated the reasons that will prevent it. But bills may come——

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania let me ask him a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. KELLEY. I have but a moment. Bills may be reported which, however objectionable they may be to the country, may be acceptable to those at the other end of the Capitol, who would prevent the repeal of the resumption act from becoming a law. But, at any rate in vindication of the rights of the minority, in vindication of the purity of legislation, I ask that this rule be maintained, or that the supposed wisdom of the change may be vindicated by applying it to every committee of the House.

I again say that I ask gentlemen not to relieve the Committee on Banking and Currency from the odium with which it has covered itself by refusing to engage in the consideration of the duties confided to it by removing any of the restraints now imposed on improvident legislation.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say a word in reply to a remark which fell from the lips of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] a moment ago, that the time was when the rights of the minority on this side of the House were held sacred by the majority on that side. I want to ask the gentleman this, for we both stand together upon the repeal of this resumption act, and I am ready and ever have been ready to vote for its repeal, pure and simple, but I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recall to mind the fact that in the last Congress when that side of the House had an overwhelming majority they did not give the minority on this side the right, but on the contrary, persistently denied to the minority on this side the right, to discuss it at any point. When we asked the right to discuss it and gave our reasons against the enactment of such an outrageous law, which the gentleman has so emphatically stated has paralyzed all the industrial interests of the country, the republican majority refused the right to discuss or amend it. They refused us the right to lay before the country what would be the paralyzing and destructive effect of such an act as that.

I think it comes, I will not say from the gentleman from Pennsylvania peculiarly, but, if he speaks for his party, it comes with bad grace from him to say that the rights of the minority were held sacred then and are not held sacred now. It was because the rights of the minority were overridden that the resumption act was passed. It came from a caucus of the republican party and we were denied the right to discuss it; and in the other end of the Capitol, if I may be allowed to allude to what occurred there, when the question was asked of the gentleman in charge of it what it meant, he refused to answer any question. He refused to answer whether it was resumption or not, whether it was inflation or contraction. His only response was that each must determine it for himself. I say, while I agree and always have agreed on this subject of the repeal of this resumption act of 1879 with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it does not come with good taste from him to refer to the minority having no rights on this subject, for I again repeat that if the rights of the minority had been respected by the republicans on the other side of the House the resumption act never would have passed, and this paralysis of trade, these bankruptcies all over the country, would have been prevented. And, sir, there is but one party responsible for the consequent distress and impoverishment of the American people, and that is the republican party. They will be held responsible on the ides of November next and deservedly rebuked by a verdict that will come from the people, from every village and every hamlet throughout the length and breadth of the land. They will say this state of affairs has been brought about by the resumption act, passed under the gag-law by the republican party, and they will hold you responsible for it, the democratic party having voted unanimously against it.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. KELLEY. One moment, if my colleague will allow me.

Mr. RANDALL. I have yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KELLEY. A single moment; and I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for one minute.

Mr. KELLEY. It is in response to the personal remark made by the gentleman from West Virginia——

Mr. RANDALL. O, yes; go on.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to say that the majority on this question in the last Congress refused to hear my protest and the reasons sustaining it; and I am unprepared to have the majority of the House do so now. I was opposed to that bill, and, had opportunity been allowed, was prepared to show that it must produce the baneful consequences it has. I demanded debate on it, as I do now upon any bill touching the currency.

Mr. RANDALL. Just one word. The gentleman is strangely inconsistent in his action. This amendment of the rule does not propose to cut off any debate. It proposes to give a committee of this House the privilege of bringing before the House for consideration, and only for consideration, unless the House shall determine otherwise, a question in which the interests of this great people and their prosperity and future comfort and happiness are involved to an extent beyond what they are involved in any other measure now agitating the public mind. It has no purpose to restrict debate.

I would remind the gentleman that when the old Committee of Ways and Means was divided, the duties of that committee were assigned to three committees; and two of the divisions were given special opportunities to bring their business before the House; while the other committee, that of Banking and Currency, was debarred from that privilege. We find ourselves, whether by change of rule or by custom, in this position to-day, that this great question in which the people are so much interested is prevented from being brought before the House for consideration except under a two-thirds vote. Now, is it not fair that the people through a majority of their Representatives here shall at least have the opportunity of expressing their sentiments and giving effect to their views by the action of a majority?

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations have the privilege of reporting for action at any time bills which have not been referred to them?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Iowa perfectly understands the rights of the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KASSON. Would not this give to the Committee on Banking and Currency a greater right than is given to any other committee?

Mr. RANDALL. This would give that committee an analogous right to that which already belongs to the Ways and Means and Appropriations Committees; so that they could make a report to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union or to be considered in the House as the majority might determine.

Mr. KASSON. But this rule gives them a greater advantage than belongs to those other committees.

Mr. RANDALL. It gives a committee of this House an opportunity of expressing its opinions on this subject, in regard to which there appears to have been some change of sentiment recently; that is, whether the date fixed by a republican Congress for the resumption of specie payments shall be postponed, or whether the act shall be repealed absolutely or not. The position of the matter to-day is that a majority of the House cannot to-day pass a bill changing the date fixed for the resumption of specie payments.

Mr. KASSON. At the beginning of the session, by common understanding, that branch of the subject went to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not fastidious at all about what committee shall report upon this subject. But I believe it to be due to the American people and the commercial, mercantile, and industrial interests of this nation that no rule of this House shall debar the majority of their Representatives from giving expression to their views and taking action by their votes on this vital question.

Mr. KASSON and Mr. KELLEY made remarks simultaneously, which were inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot listen to both gentlemen at once.

Mr. KASSON. Why has not the Committee of Ways and Means reported on this subject?

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to do with the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to offer a suggestion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe the floor has been assigned to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the Clerk to read the proposed change in the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule 74 by adding as follows:
And on any question referred to them by the House in relation to the currency, the said committee may during the present session report at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to invite the attention of the House to this very remarkable proposed change in the rules. We have now four committees of the House that are empowered to report at any time on certain specific things: The Appropriations Committee on the appropriation bills only; the Ways and Means Committee on a tax bill only; the Printing Committee on matters of printing only; and the Elections Committee on an election case only; all these having been from the foundation of the Government considered of vital importance to the carrying on of the Government—one a matter of the highest privilege, the right of a member to his seat; another, the printing of our bills and proceedings; and the other, the support of the Government by taxes and the distribution of appropriations to carry it on. These, and these things only, have been set apart as so special and peculiar in their importance that the committees having them in charge might be permitted to report them at any time. No other committee, so far as I know, was ever clothed with that power in regard to its whole business; nor, so far as I know, was any other committee, any regular committee of the House, ever authorized to make reports on all subjects referred to it by the House at any time. All the other committees are placed on terms of equality to wait their regular call in the morning hour.

There is no difficulty whatever, Mr. Speaker, in reaching all these committees in the grinding out of the legislative grist of this House if we will do just one thing—demand the regular order in the morning and have the committees called. When that is done, the Committee on Banking and Currency can take its usual rights with all the other committees of the House. There have not to my knowledge been four calls of the morning hour within the last four weeks. The only failure is, and it is a failure we have been apt to have in all late sessions that we allow special orders to block the business of the House until it becomes a vast maze and tangle. Now it is proposed to remedy that by giving the power to a committee that I have never before known to be given to any committee, namely, that all the vast subject of currency and banking, in any phase of it, any bill relating to it which may be sent by the House to that committee, may be brought back here at any time in spite of any other committee, in disregard to the rights of any other committee; a power that is not given to the Ways and Means Committee; a power that is not given to the Appropriation Committee; a power that is not given to any one committee here.

The proposition is that the committee shall have power to report at any time measures to be considered in the House, and of course the moment that is done it gives them the power of moving the previous question. Now I want to say to gentlemen that if they have a measure they deem exceptionally important, let them get authority to report that measure at any time. I am speaking for the integrity of our rules, for the harmony of our work, for a wise conservatism in regard to the course of the machinery of the House, and not in reference to the merits or demerits of any measure. I am on the same side in this particular question with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] but for reasons entirely different. I do not agree with him in his financial theories, but I agree with him that it is unwise to change the time-honored rules of the House and give one committee preferential power over other committees, and thus disturb, disarrange, and disorder our entire legislation.

These remarks are not partisan in any sense, and I hope that the majority of the House, who have the power to decide questions of this sort, will see the unwisdom of so changing the rule.

As I have already suggested, there are two ways in which the same object may be accomplished; one is by rigorously demanding the regular order and getting the call of committees in the morning hour, and then the mill will roll around to the proper place; and the other is, that when the committee have a bill which they want acted on, to make it a special order; but I beg you, gentlemen, do not change the time-honored machinery of parliamentary regulations in order to reach a specific object.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose the House will be willing to take the responsibility of so changing the rules that the majority shall control the action of the House in reference to so important a question as this. Surely a rule which gives the arbitrary right of one-third of this House in some instances and to one man in this House in almost all other instances to prevent legislation on this subject should be so modified that legislation can be reported for consideration upon the subject to which I have alluded, and then the House, the majority of the House, which should represent and reflect the sentiments of the majority of the people—for mark you this is not a political question entirely, but one somewhat controlled by localities and sections—and give to the majority of the House the opportunity of doing what is best to be done in the prostrate condition of the country. I now yield to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.]

Mr. O'BRIEN. I recognize the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the question of the currency, and especially the question whether or not the resumption act shall be repealed, is not a political question in this House to-day, and I recognize the further fact that although the democratic party upon this side of the House are in the majority of the whole House there are many members who recognize the propriety of standing by the principles of that party who are not in favor of a repeal of the resumption act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the question of giving to the Committee on Banking and Currency the power to report a bill upon the subject of the currency was first presented to the consideration of the democratic members of this House, I was in favor of it; but I see the error of my first opinion, and I am now led to the conclusion that the amendment to the rule giving this power to that committee will at once launch upon this House measures in relation to the currency the passage of which would in my opinion be equivalent to the democratic party of the country so far as it is represented on this floor committing political suicide. For one I propose to hold back as well as I can the hand that would commit so felonious an act.

I am perfectly willing that any measure looking to the further issue in a guarded and proper way of silver currency shall be reported here; but I find from the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] himself that the main object, if not the deliberate purpose of the amendment to this rule, is that the question, and the only question which will be presented to this House, will be whether or not the democratic party through its supremacy on this floor will repeal the present resumption act. I have no faith whatever in the assertion that any change will be made in regard to the date of resumption. The majority on the democratic side, from votes already given on this floor, are committed to the flat repeal of that law; and standing here as I do a representative of a hard-money constituency, I do not hesitate to say that it would not only be impolitic and unwise, but suicidal, for the political majority of this House to abandon the time-honored democratic doctrine of hard money for any assumed political expediency. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment will not prevail. For one, I will not consent to its adoption.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's speech would have been appropriate if the subject-matter he alludes to had been reported in a bill of a character such as he has pictured to himself.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask my colleague to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. I will do so.

Mr. KELLEY. The statement of my colleague was calculated, though not intended to do so, to mislead the public mind into the belief that the Committee on Banking and Currency has been restrained from reporting measures for action because some one member or one-third of the members of the House could prevent it.

Now, I desire to ask him whether the Committee on Banking and Currency has not been called several times during the past six months, and whether on any one of those calls it could not have reported a bill and kept it before the House for consideration until disposed of by a majority of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not to-day aware of the collective opinion of the Committee on Banking and Currency either on the subject of resumption or—yes, I am aware of their opinion on the silver bill, but not upon the question of repealing the resumption act; therefore I cannot answer the gentleman's question. We shall have done our duty when we allow that committee to present a bill on that question, so that the majority of this House may determine what action they will take upon the subject.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope my colleague will answer the question I put to him; whether if on any of the numerous calls of that committee it had reported a bill, anything less than a majority of the House——

Mr. RANDALL. That is utterly immaterial to the question of the proposed change of the rule, which, allow me to say frankly, for I have nothing to conceal, is for the purpose of allowing discussion upon this question of the repeal of the resumption act. I now call the previous question.

Mr. KELLEY. The remarks of my colleague were calculated to mislead members by creating the impression——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know what created the impression.

Mr. KELLEY. The impression that if the committee had reported a bill one man or one-third of the House could have defeated it.

Mr. RANDALL. I now call for the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I ask my colleague to allow me five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I have allowed as much time for discussion as is necessary.

Many MEMBERS. "Regular order!" "Regular order!"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it necessary to discuss this matter any further.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to offer a substitute.

Mr. RANDALL. I will allow it to be read for information.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer as a substitute for the report of the Committee on Rules that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency shall have the right to report a bill to this House at any time repealing the resumption act of January 14, 1875.

Mr. RANDALL. My objection to that is that it is neither courteous nor usual.

Mr. KASSON. I object to that resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow a vote on my resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no instructions from the Committee on Rules to allow such a proposition to be voted on. I call for the previous question.

Mr. PAGE. Does it require a two-thirds vote to change the rules of this House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon seconding the call for the previous question.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 130, noes 70.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question was then ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 97, not voting 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hopkins, House-Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Maish, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morgan, Mutchler, Neal, Odell, Parsons, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Teese, Thomas, Throckmorton, Robert B. Vance, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Fernando Wood, and Yeates—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Beebe, Bell, Blaine, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Crapo, Cronse, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Ketcham, Kimball, King, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Norton, O'Brien, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Sampson, Schleicher, Sedgwick, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Tarbox, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, Ward, Warren, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodworth—97.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Bass, Bliss, Samuel D. Burchard Cannon, Conger, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Darrall, Dobbins, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frost, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Hancock, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hoar, Holman, Hooker, Hubbell, Hyman, Frank Jones, Lamar, Lane, Lapham, Lo.d, Luttrell, Lynde, L. A. Mackey, McMahon, Morrison, New, Payne, Phelps, Plaisted, Purman, James B. Reilly, William M. Robbins, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, Siemons, Stevenson, Stowell, Terry, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Woodburn, and Young—76.

So the report of the Committee on Rules was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. DURAND. My colleague, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, is absent by order of the House. If present he would vote "no." I desire also to state that my colleague, Mr. CONGER, is absent by order of the House.

Mr. BRADLEY. My colleague, Mr. HUBBELL, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. TUCKER. I voted just now in the affirmative. But I have since learned that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FOSTER, who has been pairing with me for some time during my absence, is now absent; and I think it but fair that I should pair with him. I ask therefore that my vote be taken from the roll.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate was ready to proceed upon the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending section was as follows:

SEC. 2. That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employés of the Indian Bureau, are hereby abolished; and the salary heretofore paid to such officers respectively shall cease; and the duties now intrusted to, and performed by, said officers, of every kind and description, shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War; and they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed, thus transferred to them, other than the pay they may receive as officers and employés of the Army; and the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian affairs under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management and control of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby transferred to, and placed under the control of, the Secretary of War, who is hereby empowered to, and shall, exercise the same authority in the control of all Indian affairs heretofore had by the Secretary of the Interior; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending proposition when the Committee of the Whole was last in session was that submitted by the gentleman from Montana, [Mr. MAGINNIS.]

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the unfinished business is the point of order which was taken upon the second section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The first point of order was upon a proposition submitted by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I propose to withdraw that proposition and submit another.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will first decide the pending point of order upon the second section of the bill.

At the sitting of the committee for the consideration of this bill on Saturday last a point of order was raised by the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] on section 2 of the original bill, which section transfers the management and control of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department. The point of order was stated by the gentleman raising it to be this: that the section proposes new legislation, and that it does not appear on the face of the record that it will retrench expenditures. The decision of the Chair upon this question of order was reserved until the committee should again resume the consideration of the bill. The Chair will now submit his decision.

Since the amendment to Rule 120 of this House, which was adopted January 17 of this session, there has been considerable discussion as to its interpretation, and several rulings have been made upon it. In view of the exhaustive arguments which have been made upon the rule as amended, and the important ruling thereon by the honorable Speaker of the House on the 28th of April, the Chair could hardly err in the decision of the point of order now raised. The rule has been so often quoted that it is scarcely necessary to again read it, as it is doubtless familiar to every member. But as this question is in many respects similar to that decided by the Speaker on the 28th of April, the Chair has given the subject most serious consideration, and therefore asks the indulgence of the committee in again reading the rule:

No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

This rule has for its object the exclusion from appropriation bills of subjects of general legislation. No provision reported in such bill or amendment thereto which changes existing law is in order, except it be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and retrenches expenditures.

Whether a particular provision be germane to the subject-matter or not is a question which will generally admit of little doubt, and in this case it seems to be admitted that the section under consideration does not contravene the rule; for this bill relates exclusively to Indian affairs, and the section under consideration, taken in connection with the other provisions thereof, completely disposes of the whole subject. The section is in harmony with the other provisions of the bill, and, considered as a whole, a system of Indian control and management is provided, taken in connection with existing laws and treaties, which is complete in itself, effective in its operation, and not dependent upon other or further legislation. The section is therefore undoubtedly germane to the subject-matter of the bill.

But how shall the Chair determine whether a particular provision of a bill or a proposed amendment thereto does retrench expenditures? Two rules for the determination of this question have been suggested: First. That the Chair may hear arguments, consider estimates, compare official reports, and from all these give his opinion as to whether the provision in the bill or the proposed amendment does or does not retrench expenditures. If this rule were the correct one the Chair would have no other guide than the weight of the arguments pro and con and his own conjectures upon the probabilities of the issue. Such a rule of interpretation is foreign to the province of the Chair, and if assumed would be trenching upon the privileges of the committee and of the House.

The other rule for the determination of this question is this: That the Chair will not resort to evidence aliunde or to speculation or argument, but will limit his inquiries to the face of the bill, to the specific terms of the section in question, the law of the land, and the parliamentary rules and practices of this House. This construction of the rule is that laid down by the honorable Speaker of this House, and is in perfect accord with the views of the present occupant of the chair. In deciding a question of this kind the Chair sits as a court upon the hearing of a motion to quash an indictment, and not as a jury to weigh evidence and determine issues of fact. And the Chair in deciding questions of order, such as that raised upon the section under consideration, will consider such facts only as a court would take official cognizance of in construing a statute.

Does this section, then, upon which the question of order has been raised, by its own force, and the other provisions of this bill retrench expenditures? The section is as follows, and it has evidently been drawn with great care by the committee:

SEC. 2. That the Office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employés of the Indian Bureau are hereby abolished; and the salary heretofore paid to such officers respectively shall cease; and the duties now intrusted to and performed by said officers of every kind and description shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War; and they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed thus transferred to them, other than the pay they may receive as officers and employés of the Army; and the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian affairs under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management and control of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby transferred to and placed under the control of the Secretary of War, who is hereby empowered to and shall exercise the same authority in the control of all Indian affairs heretofore had by the Secretary of the Interior; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

If this section were in the words of section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which section the Speaker ruled out of that bill, the Chair would have but one course to pursue, and his decision would be simply a re-affirmation of that of the Speaker. But there is a material difference in the sections. The objectionable section of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is as follows:

SEC. 4. That the management of all Indian affairs, and of all matters arising out of Indian relations, be, and the same are hereby, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, and the same are hereby placed under the Secretary of War agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe: And provided further, That the Office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby lodged with the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the duties now being intrusted to and performed by Indian agents and other officials and employés of every kind and description will be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army.

The Speaker, in his ruling upon this section, held that upon its face it was incomplete, and that it contemplated distinctly and unequivocally further and additional legislation in order to effectuate the intention of the House as evinced therein. And, for this reason, it did not appear that by its own enactment there would be a retrenchment of expenditures. The Speaker held that it was impossible for the Chair to look into the future and determine whether the future necessary legislation would, in all respects, sustain the provisions of the section, and carry out the proposed retrenchment indicated in it.

Furthermore, the Speaker held, in deciding the point of order raised on section 4, that the abolition of an office is the retrenchment of expenditure, and that, if such abolition had been begun and perfected by that bill, he would have had no hesitation in holding that such an abolition did accomplish a retrenchment of expenditures. But section 4 did not provide, as does section 2 of the bill under consideration, that the duties imposed upon Army officers and soldiers should be performed by them without additional compensation.

On account of these uncertainties and the incomplete legislation proposed in section 4 of the legislative bill, the Speaker held that it did not appear that the provision came within the requirement of the rule.

But is the section under consideration subject to the objections urged against section 4 of the legislative bill? This section proposes distinct, clearly-defined, and perfect legislation. If enacted into law it will transfer the whole management of Indian affairs from the Interior Department to the War Department without the necessity of any further legislation whatever. It is true that some regulations are to be prescribed by the President and others by the Secretary of War; but the prescribing of such regulations is not legislation, but mere matter of detail, the regulation of which is conferred in similar cases upon all the heads of Departments. But the section goes further and absolutely abolishes a large number of offices and discontinues the salaries thereof; and it provides that the officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army shall perform the duties of the persons heretofore filling such offices, without additional compensation.

Here, then, is manifestly and, by the very terms of the provision itself, in the light of existing law, a large reduction of expenditures. The Chair will take official cognizance of the fact that the law as it exists appropriates for the current year, for the salaries and expenses of the officers and agents, whose offices and positions are abolished by this section, over $200,000; and that this bill appropriates in the aggregate about fourteen hundred thousand dollars less than was appropriated for the same purposes for the current year. Considering the vast number of offices abolished by the section under consideration, it is evident that this transfer of the management of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department contributes largely to the general reduction of expenditures by the bill. At least the Chair may safely infer from this fact that the other provisions of the bill have not increased expenditures, in consequence of the large reduction thereof by the second section of the bill.

But it has been argued with much plausibility that the Chair cannot foresee what increased appropriations may be necessary in the future in order to support and pay the Army on account of the increased duties imposed upon its officers, soldiers, and employés by this section. And that, in consequence of war or other unforeseen emergency, or of the alleged impossibility of the present military force to perform the increased duties imposed upon them, it may be necessary hereafter to make much larger appropriations for the Indian service than are now necessary under the present management. Such arguments may with propriety be addressed to the committee or the House, but the Chair cannot speculate thus upon the uncertainties of human events. He has only to consider whether this section, by its own force, in connection with the other provisions of the bill, in view of existing law, does retrench expenditures, and whether the bill is so perfect and complete in itself as not to depend upon other or further legislation to give it effect.

That the section under consideration is new legislation, changing existing law, is admitted. But the rule as amended at this session expressly provides that such new legislation may be in order, in a general appropriation bill, provided it be germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and shall retrench expenditures. The section under consideration, in the opinion of the Chair, meets both these requirements and is therefore in order as a part of this bill, so far as the rule is concerned.

The importance of the question under consideration, and the effect which the proposed legislation must have upon the Indians themselves, and the great interest which this subject has attracted in this House and throughout the country are the Chair's only apology for the somewhat lengthy opinion which he has submitted.

For the reasons stated the point of order is overruled.

Mr. KASSON. Is the second section now before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. KASSON. I move, then, to strike out all of the section down to the proviso. My present object in offering this amendment is to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole, and particularly of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to a point to which I expressed on Saturday my desire to call attention respecting certain financial statements that he made to the House on that day. Of course my honorable friend is aware that a statement coming from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is accepted by the country as much more significant than one made by other members of the House not holding those official positions. When the gentleman made the statement on Saturday, I apprehended that it would strike the country with surprise, as it surprised me, and I heard it with some little pain. I regret that in his desire to sustain a measure that is controverted as a partisan measure, he made a statement to the country touching the wants of the Treasury which was calculated to affect injuriously the credit of the United States as well as the interests of the taxpayers. The first statement is:

I say here in my place, speaking from information received from the Treasury Department, that these reductions have become to-day a necessity. The estimates of the receipts of this Government for the present fiscal year are deficient——

Mr. SEELYE. I believe the gentleman is discussing the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Deficient twenty or thirty millions.

Mr. RANDALL. I never made that statement.

Mr. KASSON:

And the Secretary of the Treasury tells you that it is not likely to be improved during the next six or twelve months.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. KASSON. Let me finish my quotation. I will gladly allow the gentleman time for an explanation as soon as practicable. The gentleman adds:

In the next fiscal year the deficiency as compared with the estimates of this session as to the receipts of the Treasury will be from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000. I say to all comers, whether upon this floor or elsewhere, that you have got to reduce the expenditures of the Government for the next fiscal year to the extent that the Committee on Appropriations has determined it can be done without injury to the Government, because of this deficit in your receipts. To-day you are not in accordance with a former law paying the sum actually pledged to the sinking fund at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Allow me to explain. My statement was from seventeen to twenty millions; and I caused the error to be corrected in the RECORD by a note addressed to one of the reporters, for I had to go away from the city in consequence of a death.

Mr. KASSON. I shall be glad, of course, for the gentleman to make the correction, only he will see at once that I was obliged to take the remarks as they appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; you were not obliged to do so, for you heard my statement.

Mr. KASSON. But, according to my memory, I heard it distinctly as I have read it from the RECORD. Of course, the gentleman knows better than I do what he said, but I understood him distinctly as he is reported.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman state that according to his recollection I said there would be a deficiency of twenty or thirty million dollars this year?

Mr. KASSON. I do distinctly say that according to my recollection the gentleman's statement was exactly as the reporters have it in the RECORD. I admit the gentleman's right to correct it.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I do not assume any such position. I say that I stated (and stated nothing else) that from $17,000,000 to $20,000,000 would be the probable deficit for the current fiscal year.

Mr. KASSON. Very well, the gentleman's right to correct is undisputed; and my right to take the statement as I understood it, confirmed by the RECORD, is equally undisputed.

Mr. RANDALL. The statement I now make of what I said is supported by every gentleman around me.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to finish, as my time is short.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman shall have plenty of time; but he must not be disingenuous.

Mr. KASSON. Well, sir, the statement upon which I am commenting is the statement as I understood it, and as it has gone into the newspapers.

Now, sir, I have obtained from the Treasury Department a statement showing the progress during the last three fiscal years of the surplus revenues applicable to the extinguishment of the public debt. I will publish the full statement; I now give only the aggregate.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, the surplus of revenues over expenditures was only $2,344,882.30; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, the excess was $13,376,658.26; and for the present year, based on the actual returns, except for the month of June, which is estimated, the surplus of revenues applicable to the extinguishment of the public debt is $23,108,534.23.

Now, sir, it will appear, instead of the condition of the Treasury being calculated to alarm the country, that without any addition to taxation, but by reduction of expenditures in a former and republican Congress—for none yet proposed by this has taken effect—it has been so well-ordered that the revenues have exceeded the expenditures in an increasing amount from year to year, in round numbers, from two millions in 1873–'74 to thirteen millions and, in the present fiscal year, to twenty-three millions.

There is another point which I wish to state. There is no deficiency, no falling back of the revenue from any source except customs. From internal revenue we have steadily advanced, it being one hundred and sixteen millions for this fiscal year of 1876, and only one hundred and ten millions for the fiscal year ending in 1875, and that notwithstanding the difficulties arising out of the frauds and prosecutions under the Bureau of Internal Revenue connected with the production of distilled spirits. The miscellaneous receipts have been increasing also beyond the estimates, and the position of the Treasury is stronger this year than it has been at any time during three fiscal years. That condition will be fully shown by the tables I send up to the reporter to be inserted as part of my remarks, and they will be open to the inspection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The tables are as follows:

Comparative statement of receipts and expenditures for fiscal years 1875 and 1876.

Quarter ending—	Customs.	Internal revenue.	Miscellaneous.
September 30, 1874	$46,651,200 10	$26,314,615 33	$7,918,470 56
December 31, 1874	32,187,238 95	27,248,051 62	3,126,436 55
March 31, 1875	41,940,667 53	28,739,763 25	5,948,315 58
June 30, 1875	36,418,615 77	27,705,063 38	3,831,622 48
Total for fiscal year 1875	157,167,722 35	110,007,493 58	20,824,835 17
September 30, 1875	44,233,626 25	24,199,723 50	8,722,795 30
December 31, 1875	32,267,931 72	29,258,069 63	4,464,518 11
March 31, 1876	33,209,535 02	25,820,139 95	6,384,031 12
June 30, 1876, (estimated)	31,256,443 05	32,770,574 02	4,600,000 00
Total for fiscal year 1876	146,027,536 04	116,048,507 10	24,171,344 62

Total receipts for fiscal year 1875	$288,000,051 10
Total receipts for fiscal year 1876	256,247,387 76
Difference in favor of 1875	1,752,663 34

EXPENDITURES.

Quarter ending—September 30, 1874	$35,313,489 42
December 31, 1874	58,714,504 23
March 31, 1875	78,195,521 00
June 30, 1875	52,399,878 19	$274,623,392 84
Quarter ending—September 30, 1875	84,047,543 76
December 31, 1875	55,017,943 99
March 31, 1876	73,573,365 78
June 30, 1876, (estimated)	50,500,000 00	263,138,853 53
Difference in favor of 1876		11,484,539 31

Comparative statement of estimated receipts and expenditures for fiscal year 1876.

Receipts for fiscal year 1876, estimated in November, 1875	$297,456,145 14
Actual receipts for fiscal year 1876	256,247,387 76
Loss in receipts		$11,208,757 38
Expenditures for fiscal year 1876, estimated in November, 1875	$268,447,543 76
Actual expenditures for fiscal year 1876	263,138,853 53
Gain in expenditures		5,308,690 23
		5,900,067 15

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, my attention was first directed to the subject of the deficiencies by a newspaper paragraph published in this city which seemed to have proper authenticity. But I did not choose to rest upon that. I had a conversation with the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he admitted that the deficiencies would exceed or be certainly about fourteen millions from customs and internal revenue below what had been estimated. In a further conference with him I think I discovered he coincided with me that if the deficiencies for the current fiscal year were so great, they would in all probability be from thirty-five to forty millions during the next fiscal year, for the reason they did not cover the entire year, but as I understood were embraced in only about six months of the year. Furthermore the opinion was expressed by me and not contradicted as I understand, that the bottom of this distressed condition had not yet been reached, and that mainly these deficiencies arose from the prostrate condition of the country in its commercial, in its industrial, and in its agricultural interests.

I was furthermore confirmed in this opinion by a statement of the intelligent correspondent of the New York Times, a republican organ, an authority which gentlemen on the other side ought not to dispute, that this deficit in fact would be seventeen millions. Mark you, we are but entering upon the twelfth month of this fiscal year. We have a month of depression further to go on before we can reach an actual knowledge of what will be the deficiency for the entire twelve months. That correspondent who gave the figures stated it at seventeen millions.

It was upon these sufficient authorities I made my statement. That of the Secretary of the Treasury is certainly adequate. I believe a critical examination of the condition of the Treasury will demonstrate the truth of my statement. It was given as a warning to the House. I wanted promptly to warn the House against receding in the least degree from the retrenchment, from the savings this House had made which are not calculated in any way to produce friction in the administration of the Government, as they were not intended to do so. I wanted to call the attention of the Senate that the position they were taking was not tenable in view of the circumstances by which we are surrounded, and that if they continued in their extravagant notions as to the administration of this Government there was but one resort, and that was to borrow more money, a proceeding desired neither by this House nor by the people of the country.

In reference to our re-arrangement of salaries, whereby we have been able to save some millions of dollars, I wish to say in this connection to the House and to the country that two years ago, upon an appropriation bill, the whole of these same salaries in the Departments except only I believe the Post-Office Department, were re-adjusted by legislation. They were, as is proposed here, re-adjusted in an appropriation bill.

I have no disposition to misplace the Secretary of the Treasury or to say anything against him, because I have maintained from the beginning of the session that everything the Secretary has said has been in favor of economy and retrenchment. I say it now, and that in every instance, and I have consulted with him frequently, I have found him always ready to economize, and to try to do away with everything not necessary for the proper administration of his Department.

I state another fact, that almost all the heads of Bureaus acquiesced in the reduction of force, although they did not acquiesce in the reduction of 10 per cent. upon their salaries In almost every instance the heads of Bureaus seemed to agree, and in many cases absolutely did in fact, and I appeal to my colleagues of the committee whether it is not so, to a reduction of force?

Mr. KASSON. I wish to add a single word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my amendment and move to strike out the last ten lines.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I had not time when I was up before to reply to the suggestion of so prominent an organ of the House as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there was something irregular in some way in applying the destroyed greenbacks to the sinking fund. I wish to make the statement complete that it is equally in the spirit and letter of the original law and in compliance with the terms of both the original and resumption laws, that we should apply any part of the redeemed debt of the United States to the sinking fund, provided it entered into the interest account, so as to continue to supply that fund. So that it makes no difference, in respect to the ability or fidelity of the Government, whether they redeem the bonds or redeem the legal-tenders, while 1 per cent. of the entire debt is annually provided for.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say just there that the practice has been to lay aside from the ordinary receipts an amount appropriated under the law known as "permanent appropriations" for the sinking fund. The law requires that.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman and I do not differ as to that duty. That is the law requiring a surplus to apply in that way.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the reason why I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we could do that when there was a surplus in the Treasury, a surplus which might otherwise be used in giving extravagant salaries.

Mr. KASSON. I cannot yield further. I must beg the gentleman to do me the courtesy to let me utter what I have to say, as my time is limited.

Mr. RANDALL. You shall have all the courtesy you wish and all the time you wish.

Mr. KASSON. What I want of the gentleman, whatever his politics may be, is that, as an organ of the Government so far as the majority of this House is concerned, he shall state the actual condition of the facts. That he is expected to do so has a most important influence on the public credit.

Mr. RANDALL. And certainly I have done so. In the conversation I have referred to with the Secretary of the Treasury, he promised to give me that information.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman will not continue to interrupt me unless I give my consent. I endeavor to treat the gentleman with courtesy, and he ought to reciprocate.

Now, when the gentleman put those figures before the country the other day, he did not, it seems to me, act in accordance with the responsibility which properly belongs to him; for one cannot admit on either side of the House that personal, loose conversation with a public officer of the Government should be set forth in a speech as official information from the Treasury. We are all of us too liable to errors of recollection to make that safe; and I have deemed it my duty, therefore, to present these statements in figures and in writing from the Treasury, in order to indicate the actual condition of our finances and to show that without any change or even reduction of the present system of expenditures, beyond what past legislation indicates, for three successive years we have been increasing our surplus in the ratio I have named from $2,000,000 to $13,000,000, and $23,000,000 in round numbers, and I hope for a still larger margin the next year; because I hope, with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there will be some serious reductions in expenditure. We have agreed to them in the Navy Department; we are disposed to agree to them wherever the officers of the Government officially charged with the responsible administration of its affairs will say it is safe for the Government itself to do it, or where we can obtain equally satisfactory information to that effect. There is no dispute upon that point. But the point I desire specially to make is that both sides of this House ought always to concur in the principle I have named, that the financial credit and honor and responsibility of the United States shall not be subjected to injury by misstatements arising from any political or partisan considerations.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KASSON. I will hear it with pleasure.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I desire to ask what is the date of this statement which you have presented from the Treasury Department?

Mr. KASSON. It was delivered to me yesterday, and contains the returns of the month of May; we are just a little in June. The only estimate is for the month of June, and the one particularly worthy of attention is that every source of income except customs is maintaining itself in an advanced degree from year to year, even in these hard times.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I understand the gentleman. I hold in my hand a statement from the Treasury Department of yesterday's date, which I think shows very clearly a very large deficiency between the estimates and the actual receipts.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman is now talking about what is an unfair comparison. He is not talking about the surplus of receipts above expenditures, but of the deficiency of the receipts below the estimates, which are made a year in advance, of what the condition of the country in respect to revenues would be. I speak of figures showing actual receipts and actual expenditures and the actual surplus applicable to the reduction of the public debt.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that I think the actual deficiency existing between the estimates for the year and the receipts out of which the expenditures are made is directly pertinent to the question of appropriations to be made at this time. And I think, if the gentleman with that view will reexamine and revise his statement, he will discover that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has not been so very wide of the mark as he appears to state.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Let me read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 3, the statement made in the Senate by Senator SHERMAN on this point. He is chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and I think the gentleman from Iowa will consider him good authority in regard to what I have stated. He said:

> There is another aspect of our condition that is not pleasant and makes it our duty to meet the House of Representatives in all reasonable measures of economy. I am sorry to say that our receipts have fallen short of the estimates about fourteen or fifteen million dollars this year. Our customs have fallen off about $10,000,000 and our internal revenue has fallen off about $4,000,000. The increase of the tax on whisky and tobacco has, as I expected, caused a decrease of the estimated revenue to the amount of about $4,000,000, and perhaps other causes have operated to bring about this deficit.

Now, sir, I am abundantly corroborated in every direction as to the substantial facts I have stated. I have not made this statement in any partisan spirit. There is no man on this floor, as the gentleman knows, who has done or tried to do more than I have during my service here in sustaining the credit of the Government. At no time has any vote of mine been given which in the least degree impaired the value of the Government's indebtedness.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman allow me there——

Mr. RANDALL. And I say, as a man of business and of observation, that the only way of maintaining the public credit is to bring the expenditures within the receipts. That is all I am contending for.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman allow me a remark?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. If he had stated in connection with the reduction of receipts beyond the estimates the reduction of expenditures beyond the estimates he would have found that there are five million three hundred odd thousand dollars less expenditures, and that of course makes a great difference.

Mr. RANDALL. The Secretary never stated that such was the case. The Secretary as the head of one of the official Departments of the Government never furnished me with any facts such as you have read.

Mr. KASSON. If you had asked for them you would have got them.

Mr. RANDALL. I did ask for them, and I say I expressed some surprise at the condition of the Treasury, for in some way or other the administration has been studiously silent upon this question of deficiencies from receipts. It was my search for information that brought these facts to my knowledge. Having had an intimation from a newspaper article, I immediately chased the matter to the proper Department, and found that it was true. And then I had a corroboration in the Senate and by the able correspondent of the Times, who stated that the deficiency was $17,000,000, and I am inclined to believe that when we have reached the end of this fiscal year that the gentleman from Iowa will find that the deficiency is not much less than $17,000,000.

Mr. KASSON. I think the gentleman will see that it would have been proper for him to have addressed a written communication to the Department asking for this information. He of course would not have got it six months ago, but he would have got it recently.

Mr. RANDALL. My duty was to guard the House against extravagant expenditures.

Mr. KASSON. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly, against expenditures in excess of receipts, and that is my purpose, and I am glad that I have aided in accomplishing that object by calling the attention of the gentleman from Iowa in one respect at least to this fact, and I hope I shall have his co-operation in maintaining the duty of the Committee on Appropriations in the various appropriation bills after he has been made aware of the fact, according to his own figures, that there is a deficiency this year amounting to $14,000,000.

Mr. KASSON. Not a deficiency, for we have a surplus of over $23,000,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, the gentleman knows perfectly well that it has been customary for the Department to lay aside the amount necessary for the sinking fund, and recently the sinking fund is being satisfied by the counting of the greenbacks that come in to be destroyed.

Mr. KASSON. Which is a reduction of the debt to that extent. I agree with the gentleman; we should have more surplus.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a part of the receipts as heretofore, neither is it in accordance with the spirit of the law which established a sinking fund; it is in fact a violation of law.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I renew the amendment. I do not desire to antagonize the efforts of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to lead the House to all necessary economy in making appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year, but I do desire to say here a word to relieve the unfavorable impression that perhaps may have been made in regard to the probable receipts and condition of the Treasury for the fiscal year to commence on the 1st of July next. It is true that there has been a falling off, not only in the receipts, but in the importations. The attention of the House was called two years ago to the fact that the importations of foreign commodities had risen to over six hundred millions; that that was far in excess of the normal amount of foreign goods that this country could consume, and that they would probably come down one hundred or one hundred and fifty millions; that the reduction was not the result of the panic, but of causes preceding and culminating in the panic; that the panic was one of the incidents and not the cause of the reduction of importations, and that that reduction would continue until the exports commenced to increase and balance the imports, and then we might expect to see a somewhat more favorable change.

Now I desire to call attention to the fact that within the last year while imports have diminished the excess of exports over imports has largely increased. My recollection is, without having refreshed my memory in the examination of figures, that the total exports are a hundred millions—during the last twelve months have been in excess of the importations. In that condition of things I do not think that the imports will continue to diminish so much in the future as they have in the past, and I believe that we have reached bottom figures. That is one reason why there has been a falling off in customs receipts from what was estimated. The estimates were made on a supposed increase of receipts that would result from the increase of tariff duties by reason of the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction, but we did not derive any additional receipts from that source; the imports more largely fell off. It is my impression that the imposition of the 10 per cent. additional duties resulted in a diminution of the revenue received from customs, rather than in an increase.

I may say that the receipts from internal revenue have not equaled the estimates, but the revenue received from internal revenues have exceeded those received for the preceding year, while those received for customs duties have fallen off. I think we may safely expect that the revenue for the next fiscal year, while it will not be larger in my opinion from customs, will exceed that of this year from internal revenue. One reason why there has been a diminution from internal revenue has been the fact that Congress is in session, and the business public, those who are engaged in the manufacturing of distilled spirits as well as tobacco, are uncertain as to what will be the legislation of Congress. They are not producing in proportion to the wants of the community; they are producing tobacco and distilled spirits, as I might say, only from hand to mouth, and are not throwing upon the market the goods they do produce, and that reduces the receipts from those sources. Such will continue to be the case until Congress adjourns, when you will see a revival of receipts from both sources. Therefore I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] need be a prophet of evil for the future in regard to what revenue receipts will be. I do not say this to antagonize his efforts at economy, but to correct his statements as to the probable revenues for the next fiscal year and his prophecy of a bankrupt Treasury.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I heard without surprise the other day the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] concerning the probable deficit in the revenues for the year succeeding July 1, 1876, and I heard without surprise that statement substantially confirmed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I am surprised, however, that gentlemen of large experience and large intelligence should come here and discuss this question of revenue perfectly unintelligently in regard to the causes which have diminished our revenue. I beg to intimate to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] who has long been a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of this House, that his arguments and his theories in regard to the falling off of customs duties and their probable restoration next year are defective and at variance with the real condition of the commerce of this country.

The reason why the customs revenues are reduced and still to be reduced is that a man cannot, as a general rule, take a new dollar, invest it in foreign merchandise, bring that merchandise home, pay the duty on it, sell it, and get his own money back again. That process of loss has been going on for three or four years. Gentlemen have argued variously here in regard to the reduction of our foreign commerce. There is some force in what has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] but I know from experience that the existing tariff has become in large measure prohibitory, and so cultivates smuggling and all sorts of vicious practices that an honest man with honest money and honest energy cannot compete with the scoundrels who, under that tariff, are bringing goods into this country across all our borders and by all devices.

I say again, as I said the other day, that gentlemen may theorize upon this question, they may discuss and rediscuss forever the question of free trade and protection, and it will do no good. I am not a free-trader; I have always been a protectionist, according to my understanding of the meaning of that term. But we have got a prohibitory tariff. And the gentleman's estimate of a deficiency of thirty-five or forty millions next year, backed, as I believe it to be, by the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, is more likely to be exceeded than diminished.

Having no position of influence or of authority, I have taken occasion within the last month to say many times in private, with that earnestness which every man who knows anything of me knows to be characteristic—I have said emphatically to several gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol that unless they met this question of retrenchment, consenting to every reasonable proposition of economy, they would find, if they were republican, that they were doing that which would damage their party, and that the deficiency at the end of the next fiscal year would be very inconveniently large.

This is not a question of philosophy; the American people are not fools; the merchants engaged in the commerce of this country are not fools. If one with honest capital, business intelligence, and integrity, having struggled for years to use that capital so as to make it return an ordinary interest, fails in that, with the exercise of vigilance, intelligence, and large experience, of what use is it for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to reason with such a one that the prosperity of this country is to be increased and its revenues replenished with the existing tariff and currency? I say, as I said the other day, if you mean to extinguish the foreign commerce of this country, then you are intelligent in maintaining the existing tariff; and so long as you do maintain it your revenues will inevitably diminish.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew it. Had the gentleman who has just closed his remarks [Mr. CHITTENDEN] embraced production with trade, and said that no man could either import an article or produce one without probable loss, he would have covered the whole field; as it is, he covers but an unimportant part of it.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] invited our attention to the fact that our exports are increasing. Yes, sir; in default of a home market we are exporting and selling our manufactures at a loss in foreign markets. I hold in my hand a paper from Indianapolis received through this morning's mail showing that out of 26,000 skilled laborers recently employed in that city over 12,000 of them are and for some time have been without employment, and that those who are at work are receiving but from one-half to two-thirds of their former wages. How can these idle and impoverished people purchase and consume either taxable or dutiable goods?

A recent letter from the president of the board of managers of the Philadelphia house of correction reports that of twenty-two hundred and forty-two commitments to that institution in three consecutive months, eleven hundred and fifty-one, or more than one-half, were voluntary commitments. He says:

> Do not suspect that these people seek shelter in order that they may live without work; they engage eagerly in the rough work of ditching and quarrying, though many of them are skilled mechanics or were brought up to clerical employments.

What contribution can these people make either to the internal or the customs revenue? Skilled mechanics, competent clerks, wearing the jail uniform, working in gangs under armed guards, locked up at night, each in his separate cell as a prisoner, for the poor privilege of food and shelter!

The pictures of Indianapolis and Philadelphia are but portraitures of the condition of the working-people of all our cities and manufacturing towns. Why this destitution? Has Providence withheld its bounties? Has scorching drought or drenching rain swept the crops from our fields? Do the forces of nature refuse to move the machinery standing idle in every part of the land? No; nature is as bounteous and as wise as ever, the fields as fertile; but man, as he is embodied in the American Congress, has produced this idleness by withdrawing the medium of exchange that enabled the producer to pay the laborer, and laborers to purchase and consume the necessaries of life they had produced for each other's use; and by putting on the statute-book a law which through three years and six months should notify every man that if he produced articles not to be sold for six months, he must sell them at steadily declining prices, has paralyzed energy and arrested production. This is what has stricken the revenues of the country. To charge these as results of the tariff is to utter nonsense. The policy of England is free trade; and pitiable as is the condition of the American laborer, that of his English colaborer is worse. Free trade and hard money! She staggers, I might almost say, under the weight of her accumulated capital; for in that country, the Financier tells us, there is no market for money, and the daily papers tell us that those who borrow on three months' notes get money at the rate of 1½ per cent. per annum.

She, too, suffers from our unwise legislation on the currency question; for in reducing the consumptive power of the freest livers, the most liberal consumers of the world, the American people, we have paralyzed not only our own revenues, but those of the country whose chief customer we were; and every financial and commercial paper in England will tell you that there is no hope of the revival of the industries of free-trade, hard-money England, until paper-money, protectionist America shall permit her people again to produce and consume freely. In insisting upon contraction and resumption capital has overreached itself.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to direct the attention of the House to a fact which causes the deficiency to appear much less than it would if the law in reference to the sinking fund had been executed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The act of February 25, 1862, as now embodied in section 3694 of the Revised Statutes, provides that—

> The coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:
>
> First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.
>
> Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund; and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.
>
> Third. The residue to be paid into the Treasury.

Now I say that the Secretary of the Treasury has not applied 1 per cent. of the coin receipts of the United States from customs to the sinking fund; but since the receipts have fallen off he has added, as part of the amount required to go to the sinking fund, the greenbacks which were authorized to be canceled under the resumption act.

Mr. KASSON. But did he not buy the greenbacks? Did people give him the greenbacks?

Mr. RANDALL. This is an evasion of the law; and you cannot escape it. The Secretary of the Treasury was required under the law to dedicate 1 per cent. of the coin receipts from customs to the sinking fund; and instead of doing that, the greenbacks, which another law directed to be destroyed, have been counted as part of the coin dedication, the coin being used for current purposes, the effect of which has been to make the deficiency, as it appears by the official statement, very much less than it would actually appear if the law had been executed and the $31,000,000 in coin applied during the year as the law directs.

Mr. KASSON. But the Secretary of the Treasury is only bound to reduce the public debt 1 per cent. per annum.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; he is bound by law to use the coin receipts of the Government in two ways. The second method is to set aside annually 1 per cent. of the aggregate indebtedness of the United States as a sinking fund.

Mr. KASSON. But I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the pledge is designed to accomplish a purpose: the security of the holder of the Government debt; and so that this is accomplished, the form is not material.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a new doctrine, surely.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman will refer to the language of the law, he will find that I am correct.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's confused manner of construing the law does not trouble me at all. I say that in effect, the Secretary of the Treasury has omitted to provide that which should have been provided for the sinking fund in the manner that I have indicated. The consequence is, as a question of figures, that the $14,000,000 does not show the actual deficiency which would have been exhibited if the law had been complied with.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the law: "Shall be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt."

Mr. RANDALL. In answer to that, I say that instead of applying the $31,000,000 per annum in coin to the purpose designated, greenbacks coming into the Treasury and directed to be destroyed by the resumption act have been counted instead; and the gold dedicated to this purpose has been used for current purposes.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. But the coin in the Treasury has been applied to the purchase of the greenbacks; and certainly the effect is the same.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not the provision of the law. I am only showing that the deficiency would have been much greater if the sinking fund had been made good as provided by law.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I do not see how.

Mr. RANDALL. From sources provided by law.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Whether he complied by paying greenbacks or bonds would make no difference.

Mr. RANDALL. That has been the manner of doing it, as I am apprised, for five years, and only since the necessity of the Government arising from the decrease of its revenues, has this evasion become necessary to run the Government.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman will not say it is an evasion of the law; it is a construction of the law which accomplishes the end.

Mr. KELLEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to offer a substitute for the second section of the bill. The second and following sections of the bill relate to the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department; and the House will remember we have already perfected a bill upon that subject. I desire to offer in substance the bill which has already received the sanction of the House as a substitute for the second section.

Mr. CLYMER. Is the bill pending before the House?

Mr. HUNTON. No; it has passed the House.

Mr. CLYMER. I understand this is the bill which has already passed the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers, and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, or otherwise, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of moneys out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates by Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them; that the Secretary of War shall make such details of officers of the Army as may be necessary, from time to time, to administer the affairs of the Indian branch of the War Department.

That commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of officers of the Army, serving in their commands or on the retired list, as may be necessary, from time to time, to administer the affairs of the Indian service: Provided, That the officer detailed to take charge of Indian affairs in the War Department shall not be of lower rank than that of colonel, nor shall the officers detailed to discharge the duties heretofore performed by agents at any Indian agency be of lower rank than that of first lieutenant in the regular Army: And provided further, That the Inspector General of the Army shall discharge the duties of inspector of Indian affairs, and shall be required to make an annual report to Congress of the numbers and condition of the Indian tribes; and such officers shall not be required to give other bonds than are now required of them by law, but shall be held responsible for any neglect of duty or maladministration thereof, and shall be subject to trial therefor by military courts-martial, according to the rules and articles of war; and the provisions of this section shall be applicable to all officers of the Army charged with duties under this act so far as responsibility for neglect of duty and maladministration thereof is concerned.

That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law, and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who when on such duty shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

That all contracts for supplies or transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner, and, as far as practicable, at the same time, provided for supplies and transportation for the use of the Army.

That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargains, barter, and exchange with the several tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same, and subject to the same rules and restrictions as are prescribed for traders at military posts of the Army; but he shall not have authority to authorize any person to sell arms or ammunition to any Indian, but shall prohibit the same.

That the offices of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inspectors of Indian affairs, special commissioners of Indian affairs, superintendents of Indian affairs, agent and subagent in the Office of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, and all officials now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or Secretary of the Interior, and connected with the administration of Indian affairs, not including the clerks of the Indian Bureau, shall be abolished and cease on the 1st day of July, 1876, on which date the officers of the Army designated shall assume charge of the duties thereof, and thus become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the officers of Indian affairs thus superseded.

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, at as early a day as practicable after the 1st day of July, 1876, to cause a careful enumeration of all Indians in the United States to be made; and such census shall thereafter be retaken, at his discretion, whenever there may be reasonable doubt as to the number of any Indians in any tribe or tribes; and all issues of rations shall be upon the basis of the number of Indians reported by said enumerations.

That it is hereby provided that all religious denominations shall enjoy a free and equal right to erect and maintain church and school buildings on any or all Indian reservations, and shall not be molested in their religious or philanthropic efforts to advance the Indians in moral, religious, and literary culture, but shall all equally and alike be perfectly free and encouraged in the prosecution of their civilizing and educational efforts.

That whenever any Indian belonging to any organized Indian tribe or nation having treaty relations with the United States shall desire to become a citizen of the United States, he may become such citizen by appearing in open court in the United States district court nearest to the reservation of his tribe or nation and making proof to the satisfaction of said court that he is sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his own affairs and interests, that he has adopted the habits of civilized life, and has for at least five years been able to support himself and family, and by taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That no Indian who avails himself of the provisions of this act shall on that account forfeit any interest which he may have in any improvement or other property in the reservation of the tribe or nation to which he may have belonged; nor shall such act in any manner impair his rights and interests in the lands, claims, or other property belonging, or which may hereafter belong, to his tribe or nation.

That all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SEELYE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand this is the same bill which has already passed the House?

Mr. HUNTON. It is, with the exception of the change of a word or two.

Mr. SEELYE. I desire to ask whether a bill which has passed the House already is in order to be proposed again for passage?

Mr. HUNTON. The rule is that no pending bill shall be offered as an amendment to another bill. This substitute does not embrace the bill exactly as it passed the House because, in order to avoid any trouble, I struck out a few immaterial words.

Mr. CLYMER. The rule on the subject is the forty-eighth, which provides that no bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith any other bill or resolution pending before the House. As I understand it, this substitute which the gentleman from Virginia offers for the second section of the Indian appropriation bill has already in substance passed this House, and so far as this House is concerned is a complete piece of legislation. Therefore, under the provisions of the forty-eighth rule, it cannot be moved as an amendment. It is stated in the Digest, however, that—

The latter clause of the forty-eighth rule as originally reported to the House contained, at the end of it, "Nor by any proposition containing the substance, in whole or in part, of any other bill or resolution pending before the House." These words were stricken out by the House before it would agree to the rule, by which it would seem to have been decided that an amendment containing the substance of another bill or resolution may be entertained. Such, too, has been the practice ever since. It has been decided that an amendment including the same provisions, to a very great extent, as other bills pending before the House, is in order.

Although the amendment moved by the gentleman from Virginia is in substance the bill already passed by this House, yet, as there have been some changes made, some words being stricken out, the point of order does not lie against it under the construction heretofore given to the rule. It may, however, be amenable to another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to make the point of order, but merely a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment sent to the Clerk's desk is not the bill passed by the House, as it appears from the amendment itself. The bill which has passed the House embraced eleven sections, while the amendment contains only one section. Some of the words in the bill passed by the House have been stricken out, making under the uniform ruling heretofore a new and different proposition. The Chair holds the amendment to be in order.

Mr. SEELYE. Then I raise the point of order that it very obviously does not retrench expenditures. There are many complicated provisions in this substitute which are precisely susceptible to the ruling which the honorable Speaker of the House has given on this subject.

Mr. HUNTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts raises the point of order on this amendment, and the Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia on that point.

Mr. HUNTON. As I understand the ruling of the Chair this morning, it is that the second section of the pending bill is in order, because under the provisions of that second section there is retrenchment of expenditure. If the substitute I propose for that section is adopted it also will be retrenchment. It may not be retrenchment over the second section, but it is retrenchment over the existing law, and therefore is not subject to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SEELYE. If the gentleman will allow me, I submit that that does not appear. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, it does not appear that the salaries of these military officers who are to take the place of the employés of the Indian Bureau will be equivalent to the salaries now paid to these employés. That does not appear. In the second place, it does not appear that the various provisions of this bill are in the line of retrenchment. For instance, there is a provision with respect to the bringing of the Indians to the right of citizenship. That provision requires the session of a court and various judicial procedures which are not required by any existing legislation. That cannot be done without an increase of expenditures, and I submit, however appropriate the ruling of the Chair might be to the second section in the appropriation bill as originally presented, that very ruling of the Chair to which we have listened this morning would exclude the substitute now offered.

Mr. HUNTON. I cannot imagine how anybody can read the bill which I have offered as a substitute for the second section and fail to see that it is retrenchment on existing law. As the law stands this Indian Department is conducted by officers outside of the Army, every one of whom has to be paid his salary. Under the proposed amendment which I have had read at the Clerk's desk these duties are to be performed by officers of the Army. Those officers are now on pay and their pay is not increased, and therefore to a large extent this amendment which I have offered is retrenchment upon existing law.

As regards the provision about naturalization, I understand that the expenses connected with the naturalization of Indians provided for in this amendment are to be paid by the parties asking naturalization. And as to the court-martial to try the parties for violation of the duties imposed upon them by the law, courts-martial exist now, and I do not understand that they cost any more than the annual salaries of officers composing the court-martial. If the gentleman from Massachusetts be right in saying that that bill as it passed the House was not retrenchment, those of us who voted for it voted for it under a grievous mistake; because we were informed—and so believed—by the gentlemen both of the Military Committee and of the Indian Committee, that it reduced the expenditures of the Government a very large amount.

Mr. SEELYE. Did I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that the employés now engaged in the service of the Indian Bureau would be furnished by the War Department from the employés already engaged in the military service? Did I understand the gentleman to say that?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir. But let me repeat to the gentleman what I did say: That very many of the duties connected with the management of the Indians of the Indian Bureau would be discharged by officers of the Army under this bill.

Mr. SEELYE. Exactly. But the question whether the places of the officers now employed by the Indian Bureau can be supplied by officers now employed by the War Department is exactly the point before us. Now I submit to the gentleman, and the gentleman acknowledges it, that the officers employed by the War Department now cannot do the work of officers employed by the Indian Department. Therefore the substitute involves an additional expenditure; we do not know how much, and cannot say how much until the experiment is made.

Mr. McCRARY. I would like to hear read the portion of the bill offered by the gentleman from Virginia which provides that the salaries shall not be increased, if there be such a provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report that portion of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law, and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who, when on such duty, shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

Mr. McCRARY. It seems that the bill provides that nothing in the act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the pay of Army officers who discharge this duty. But there is nothing in the bill which prohibits this or provides affirmatively that Army officers shall not be paid by virtue of the Army appropriation bill, when it shall be passed, an additional compensation.

There is a provision there that officers who are now retired shall be paid their full pay when put on this Indian service. The bill as it stands, Mr. Chairman, I think clearly comes within the ruling of the Speaker and the ruling of the honorable Chairman this morning.

Mr. HUNTON. Let me say one word more. I desire to state one item of reform in this bill, and it seems to me that must determine the question. There are now seventy Indian agents, and these are dispensed with and their places taken by the officers of the Army. And, although this bill does not say their salaries shall not be increased, there is no increase of salary of the officers of the Army in the bill.

Mr. BANNING. And that is a saving of $104,000.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, now, if it becomes necessary to employ the retired officer who is already getting three-fourths of his pay, you get an additional officer at one-fourth the salary. So that, in every view that can be taken of this bill, it is in the direct line of retrenchment and reform.

Mr. SEELYE. To illustrate the point I have made, I would like to know where are to come the various employés now needed at an Indian agency if this bill is passed? For instance, there are now employed at the Winnebago agency in Nebraska one physician at a salary of $800. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this service is to be rendered by a surgeon in the Army it has to be rendered at a cost of $1,500 a year, and there is a retrenchment.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SEELYE. Certainly.

Mr. BANNING. Is there not an Army officer on duty right in that vicinity now?

Mr. SEELYE. I am only giving this as a specimen.

Mr. BANNING. Is not that a fact?

Mr. SEELYE. That I am unable to state.

Mr. BANNING. That is a fact. Is there not an Army surgeon employed there at this time?

Mr. SEELYE. That is very possible.

Mr. BANNING. Will not this, then, do away with two officers?

Mr. SEELYE. If that is the fact it does not bear upon the question before us, for it is an accidental fact. There is also employed one clerk at a salary of $700; one superintendent of schools at $700; four teachers, one at a salary of $400 and three at salaries of $600; two farmers, one at $500 and one at $750; one miller at $800; one engineer at $900; one shoemaker at a salary of $500. Where are these employés to come from? They are not provided for in the bill. They cannot be furnished without an increase of expenditures, because the average expenditures—let it be clearly understood, for these employés are to be brought from the Army service—the average expense of a soldier in the Army is $1,000 a year. Now that is only one illustration of the economy that gentlemen are going to have. It costs the Government $1,000 a year for a soldier, as we all know. We have already passed an Army bill reducing the Army to a degree that many wise people think is not safe. We have no supernumerary officers or employés, and if you take soldiers costing each one $1,000 a year and set them to do the work for which the Indian Department pays five or six hundred dollars a year, where is the economy?

Mr. BANNING. The question as to whether this change will be economy or not has, I think, been so thoroughly discussed in the House that no one can have any doubt upon the question. The gentleman asks a question as to the agency he has named. If you take away the agent and leave the Army officer now there to do the duty you save the pay of the agent. If you take away the surgeon now employed by the Indian Department and leave the Army surgeon at that post to do the duty, you save the pay of the surgeon now employed by the Indian Department; and so in regard to the other men in the Army now there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to whether this is economy or not, if we are here looking at that question I have the official report of Captain Ed. Ball, of the management of the Crow agency during the present year, showing that under the present management it is not only extravagant and wasteful but fraudulent and bad. I ask that that report be read for the information of the House on this subject, and I hope that every gentleman who thinks that this transfer will not be economy will listen.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORT ELLIS, MONTANA TERRITORY,
February 18, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to report for the information of the Department, that I was at the Crow Indian agency on the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th instant, making an inspection of flour, bacon, and pork delivered there on contract for the Crow Indians, and that Nelson Story, of Bozeman, Montana Territory, contractor for pork and bacon for the Crow agency, was present, and presented for inspection fifty-seven barrels of pork. Fifty of these barrels were of the ordinary whisky barrels, and seven of the ordinary pork barrels, all packed with fresh pork in the town of Bozeman, Montana Territory, during the months of December, 1875, and January, 1876.

I opened three of these barrels, the large-size whisky barrels, and weighed the contents of each, one weighing two hundred and seventy-nine pounds, one two hundred and two pounds, and one two hundred and thirteen pounds, making an average of two hundred and thirty-one and one-quarter pounds to the barrel. This pork consisted of the entire hog, ham and feet excluded, and could not come under the head of mess pork, as required by the terms of the contract, and I rejected the fifty-seven barrels. I would here state that that portion of the pork belonging to mess pork was of a good quality, and would have passed the inspection had it been packed separately; but the entire head, shoulders, back-bone, and tail, with all the trimmings from the hams, were also packed with it, which, in my judgment, was good cause for rejecting the entire lot. The contractor did not care to have me examine any more barrels than those I had examined, he knowing full well that they were all alike, and that I knew it, having visited the butcher's establishment frequently during the packing of this pork.

I would further state that on the 9th instant, while at the agency, and previous to my inspection of this pork, Mr. Nelson Story, contractor, made two propositions to me to defraud the Government, and cheat the Indians out of their supplies, and in each of these propositions it was evident to me that the agent, Mr. Dexter E. Clapp, was a party to the proposed fraud. The first proposition was this: that I should pass the pork for him at four hundred and fifty pounds to the barrel, and that he would give me $1,000. The second was that there was due on the contract for flour which he was putting in on the Kiskadden contract about three hundred thousand pounds, and that he was expecting an advance on the price, which, together with freight, would bring the flour up to $6 per hundred pounds, and that this amount, or a portion of it, at least, should be certified to as having been received, and that we would make a good thing out of it, otherwise there was nothing to be made out of the contract. He also informed me that there was still $75,000 unexpended of the appropriation for the Crow Indians, which he was very anxious to have expended before the end of the fiscal year, and he intimated to me that with my assistance the money could be expended so as to make it profitable to us, meaning, as I suppose, the agents, himself, and myself. To this I replied that the agent might not submit to such transactions. He replied: "Yes, he will; that is all right with the agent." I then asked Mr. Story what the poor Indian would have to subsist on, should such a transaction as he proposed take place. He replied that there were plenty of buffalo, and they could live on buffalo meat, as it was good enough for them. At this juncture I informed Mr. Story that I had served in the Army over thirty-one years; that I had never received a dollar in that way, and that I never should; that I would inspect his supplies, and if they came up to the requirements of the contracts, they would pass; if not, they would be rejected. You have seen the result of the inspection of the pork; now I will give you the result of the inspection of flour.

Mr. Story was putting in flour on the Kiskadden contract, and informed me before I commenced the inspection that he had in store at the agency two thousand sacks of flour for inspection. This flour was ranked up in the agent's storehouse, together with flour that had been inspected in December last, and possibly with a view to having some of the flour already inspected counted with it. I separated the flour, and inspected and branded the sacks. The flour was of an excellent quality, but fell short of the number of sacks the contractor reported to have had, there being only eleven hundred and ninety-seven sacks instead of two thousand.

This difference of eight hundred and three sacks I feel satisfied that Mr. Story intended, with the assistance of the agents, to make up by taking from the already inspected flour, first, by counting, if possible, some of the old flour in rank with the new flour, and, secondly, by resacking some of the already inspected flour. My reasons for supposing the latter are these: Mr. Story had a large lot of flour made at Mr. McAdam's mills, and gave Mr. McAdam particular instructions about the sacking of it. That was, that the flour should be double-sacked, in flour-sacks, inside and outside sacks to have the miller's brand, and the inside sacks sewed up separate from the outside sacks, and for this unusual way of putting up flour Mr. Story agreed to pay Mr. McAdam for any extra expense he might incur.

It must seem evident to all business men who might consider this matter and manner of double-sacking flour that it shows at first sight an intent at fraud, and from the fact that Mr. Story has attempted to bribe me in these matters I don't hesitate to say that his manner of having this flour double-sacked was for the purpose of defrauding the Government.

You can readily see how it could be done. The inspector examines the flour by running a small probe into the sacks, and if the flour is good he places his brand on the sack. This does not penetrate the inside sack; but leaves it clean. The inspector goes away, and on his return this flour will have the outside sack stripped off and an unbranded sack presented for inspection. Fortunately for me, Mr. McAdam, who put up this flour, informed me of this unusual way of sacking it, which put me on my guard; otherwise I might have, and probably would have, branded the outer sack only.

I would now invite the attention of the Commissioner to the beef-cattle being furnished to the agent of the Crows, and the reports that have been made to me by reliable men in regard to them.

First. The cattle are now being put in by Mr. Story and received by the agent without the action of an inspector. The character of Mr. Story in regard to dishonesty is sufficient to warrant a change in this matter.

Second. Dr. Hunter told me last September at the Crow agency that he knew positively from his own knowledge that Nelson Story took from the herd of beef-cattle belonging to the Crow agency forty head at one time and placed them in his ox train and sent them to the Missouri River. Mr. William Carr, a reliable citizen of Bozeman, told me on the 14th instant that he knew positively that large numbers of beef-cattle belonging to the Crow agency are now in Mr. Story's herd near the old Crow agency, seventy-five miles west of the present agency, and that more are in herds on Shields River, a distance of eighty-five and ninety miles from the agency, and that he, Carr, knows most of the Indian Department cattle, and that he can go at any time and pick them out. Mr. Carr says that he knows positively of Mr. Story having put his (Story's) brand on Indian Department cattle. The matter of beef-cattle does not come under my jurisdiction as inspector, but these reports have been made to me so often that I deem it my duty as an officer of the Government to lay them before the Department for its consideration, and would recommend an investigation of these reports.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ED. BALL,
Captain Second United States Cavalry,
Inspector of Indian Supplies.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington City, D. C.
(Through Headquarters Department of Dakota.)

Official:

THOMAS M. VINCENT,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 1, 1876.

During the reading of the foregoing report,

Mr. PAGE said: I would like to inquire what reference this has to the point of order?

Mr. BANNING. I have asked for its reading merely to show that whatever change is made will be in the direction of economy.

Mr. PAGE. Is there any limit to this debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is but a little more to be read.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. BANNING. I merely want to say a word in reference to that report. It is an official report. It comes from the Department. It has been sent to both the Indian and the War Department. It is the report of the management of Indian affairs at the Crow agency this year in February; and it shows that a barrel of pork only held about one-half as much pork as it should contain; that the flour was double-sacked, and the cattle worthless; and that they offered to bribe the inspectors who went there if they would pass them, showing most conclusively that any change whatever is a change in the direction of economy.

This amendment, as has been said and as has been shown to the Chair, reduces the entire number of agents who are practicing extravagance and fraud. That is so well and so fully shown by the official report of this Army officer who went there by the direction of the Department to the Crow agency and inspected the flour, the cattle, and the pork that were taken there, that I think, Mr. Chairman, there can be no question on the matter of economy; and if any gentleman concluded before that the present management of Indian affairs is better than the old, he must see in this official report, for which the officer of the Army is responsible, it is fully proven that this change is most desirable, in the interest of economy, for the welfare of the Indians, and that it is our duty to make it.

Mr. PAGE. Early in this session of Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs was instructed to investigate all frauds connected with the Indian service. The chairman of that committee appointed a subcommittee, consisting of three democrats and one republican, who for three months and more have been engaged steadily in investigating the frauds connected with the Indian Bureau or with the Indian service. Now, if it was within the knowledge of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. BANNING,] or of any other member of this House, that these frauds existed as set forth in the report which has just been read, why was not that report referred to the proper committee of this House who were engaged in investigating that very matter? I cannot see where there has been any intimation to this committee that any report of this kind has ever been made. It was the duty of the gentleman when this report came into his possession to have had it referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SEELYE. I desire to say——

Mr. PAGE. I think my remarks are quite as appropriate as those made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] on the point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. My point of order is this: The pending question is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] as to the admissibility of this amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] and the debate must be confined to that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to enter a motion that the report just read be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Such a motion cannot be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SEELYE. I wish to speak to the point of order.

Mr. BANNING. Allow me to answer what has just been said in reference to this report being in our possession.

Mr. SEELYE. Not just at this time. One single puncture is sufficient to burst this bubble that has been so persistently blown here. That is done by the statement that precisely these facts, as alleged by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] but which are not facts—precisely the very points involved in this paper, have been investigated for over twenty days by a grand jury on the spot, and there has been an utter failure to find any indictment. That is sufficient to dispose of that matter. And if it were not, I have a very simple answer to the whole statement. If it were true, if the worst that has been or can be said were true, how much is there of it? There was expended for the Crow agency last year——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs leave to remind the gentleman that the pending question is the point of order which has been made that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] is not in order.

Mr. SEELYE. I am speaking to the point of order, to show that this will not retrench expenditures. My remarks bear quite pertinently upon the point of order, as I shall show in a single statement.

Granting, I say, the worst that has been or can be said, how much is it? There was expended last year for the support of forty-two hundred Crows at this agency $130,000, making, even with all the waste and all the cheating that might be charged, only some $30 for each Indian. Now, I beg leave to recall the attention of the House to a statement which I made on Saturday last as to the expenditure for sixty-seven Indians in Fort Marion, under the care of the War Department, during the same year. Remember that for forty-two hundred Indians the Indian Bureau required only $130,000, and allowing for all the waste and the cheating that may be claimed, that was an expenditure of say $30 each, or a little more. But the War Department during the same period, for the support of sixty-seven Indians, of whom it had the entire charge, for the bare items of food and clothing, nothing else, paid $11,000, almost $200 each. That is the point that I make, that this bill does not retrench expenditure.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this point of order be now considered as closed.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you object to closing debate on the point of order?

Mr. FRANKLIN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that when the Committee of the Whole is operating under the five-minute rule all debate on points of order is by unanimous consent. By the order of the House all general debate upon this bill in Committee of the Whole has been closed. There is a special rule on this subject.

The proviso to Rule 60 is to this effect:

That when debate is closed by order of the House any member shall be allowed in committee five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which any member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it; and there shall be no further debate on the amendment.

This is the extent to which debate is in order in Committee of the Whole after general debate has been closed by order of the House. All questions of order which may arise, pending a question which is not debatable, must be decided without debate, if objection be made. Hence all this discussion is by unanimous consent.

The Chair will now decide the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON.] The Chair recognizes the fact, from hearing the amendment read, that it is to the same purport and has for its object the accomplishment of the same end that is proposed by section 2 of the original bill. The amendment, however, contains other matter not covered by that section, and which the Chair thinks does not come within the rule. For instance, that portion of the amendment which prescribes a particular rule of naturalization for Indians.

The provision in the amendment to which the Chair refers is this:

That whenever any Indian belonging to any organized tribe or nation having treaty relations with the United States shall desire to become a citizen of the United States, he may become such citizen by appearing in open court in the United States district court nearest to the reservation of his tribe or nation, and making proof, to the satisfaction of said court, that he is sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his own affairs and interests; that he has adopted the habits of civilized life, and has for at least five years been able to support himself and family; and by taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

Now, it will not be pretended that that is in the line of retrenchment, that it reduces expenditure, or even that it is germane to this appropriation bill. As the Chair must take the amendment as a whole, if any portion of it is not within the rule, it is his duty to sustain the point of order. He therefore rules that the amendment is not in order, as it contravenes Rule 120 of the House.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to amend by striking out the pending section. I make this motion because in the first place the section is unnecessary, since we have already passed a bill maturely considered covering this point; and in the second place, because it is impracticable. I simply submit that the provision here presented cannot be executed:

That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks of the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employés of the Indian Bureau, are hereby abolished.

This means that at the instant this bill becomes a law the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, every employé in the Indian Bureau, every agent in the field ceases to be at that moment an officer of the Government. No act of any of these officers has any longer any validity; no receipt for money, no contract, no procedure of any sort has one moment's validity after the passage of this bill. Under this provision all the complicated and vast machinery of the Indian Bureau must instantaneously cease; and then it is expected that the Secretary of War, by some magician's wand, is going to call up a bureau with employés sufficient to do the work. Here are clerks in the Indian Office; here is a system of accounts; but every clerk, every accounting officer ceases to be such the moment this bill is passed. What is to become of all the books of the Indian Bureau? What is to become of all the papers connected with it? How are they to be transferred to the War Department? There is absolutely no provision in this bill for that purpose. I submit, therefore, that the section is unnecessary and impracticable.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this subject has been discussed at such length in the House, and the judgment of members upon it is so fully made up and so clearly defined, that I ask a vote.

Mr. KASSON. I move to perfect the text of the section by striking out all down to and including the word "provided." I make this motion because it pertains directly to a view of this subject which I desire to present. Having introduced several years ago a measure for the transfer of this Bureau to the jurisdiction of the War Department, I have adhered ever since to the opinion that such transfer should be made; hence when the question was recently before the House in a separate bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I felt bound to sustain that bill by my vote, although I did it with the hope and expectation that it might be amended in the Senate in the particular to which I wish to allude.

The great opposition to the transfer, as gentlemen will observe, comes from all those vast religious and civilizing elements of the country represented in the religious and philanthropic associations, who fear that it means to substitute the iron hand of the military force in the custody and feeding of the Indians, without at the same time taking a single step to emancipate them from the necessity of this guardianship by civilizing them. My original measure, which passed the House and failed in the Senate some years ago, met that occasion for fear in this way: It provided a common head for both the civilizing and the protecting interest of the Indians by centralizing both works in the head of the War Department and by appointing officers of the Army to some of the principal governing agencies connected with the management of the Indians. But it left with the President the discretion (and this is the important point) to continue, by proper civil appointments, those civilizing and educating agencies which have obtained so great a popularity in the country. If gentlemen, either as an amendment to the appropriation bill or as an independent measure, had proposed to dispense with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, (worthy as he is and enjoying as he does the confidence of us all,) to dispense with the superintendents and agents who distribute the goods, annuities, and food to the Indians, trusting all this to military officers, but leaving in the discretion of the President the continuance of those agencies to which I refer, I apprehend they would have accomplished the transfer and secured the approval both of the Senate and the President. But I may say that the opposition on this side of the House to the former bill of this session (for which I voted) was very largely on the ground that it did not recognize the necessity of continuing these civilizing agencies under the power and direction of the War Department or the President.

Now, the proposition which I have offered as an amendment to this bill will, if it should be adopted, transfer the whole control of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department, and nothing more; and you will get before the Senate the main proposition of a transfer without having it in such a form as to involve the abolition of the civilizing and Christianizing agencies now at work. I greatly desire to have the measure presented in that form; and I fear that if it is put upon this bill in the manner now proposed—not perfected as it was in the bill formerly passed by the House—you will embarrass and involve the main question, the result of which I fear will be that nothing will be accomplished in the direction of the reform which I regard as important.

My amendment proposes to strike out in this bill so much of the provision as abolishes the entire existing system without perfecting a new one. The bill already passed did to a certain degree perfect a new system. Unless some such amendment be adopted, you will have a measure much more imperfect than that which you have already sent to the Senate; and desirous as I am that the transfer should be wisely made, I should earnestly hope that the Senate would not concur in such a measure as this.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will look at the law of 1849, transferring the Indian Bureau from the War Department to the Interior Department as then organized, he will find that the transfer is accomplished in far fewer words than those embraced in this section.

One other fact I wish to state, that nowhere in this bill have the purposes of these religious societies who desire to evangelize the Indians been interfered with.

I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HUNTON. Allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not in order now, and the motion I make will not cut off amendments at all. I only desire to cut off debate, and when in order the gentleman can move his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. After debate has been closed it will still be in order to move amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask by unanimous consent that all debate be closed on the pending section and the amendments thereto.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs first on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on Mr. SEELYE's amendment, to strike out the second section.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 102.

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

Mr. HUNTON. I offer the following proviso to the second section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowance of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law; and this provision shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who, when on such duty, shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment as it is in accordance with what was inserted by the House in the other bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That, in all lettings of contracts in connection with the Indian service, the proposals or bids received shall be filed and preserved; and, in the annual report made to Congress of the operations of the Department having charge of the Indian service, there shall be embodied a detailed and tabular statement of all bids and proposals received for any services, supplies, or annuity goods for the Indian service, together with a detailed statement of all awards of contracts made for any such services, supplies, and annuity goods for which said bids or proposals were received; and a copy of all bids or proposals received for the supplies or services embraced in any contract shall be attached to, and filed with, the said contract when the same is filed in the office of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. SEELYE. I do not know that any one would have any objection to this last clause, provided there is any reason for it. I should like the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to state the particular advantage to be gained from this last clause. It of course would be a considerable expense. A large additional clerical force would be involved in it. If there is any particular object to be gained of course it should pass, but I do not see any.

Mr. RANDALL. The object of the gentleman who placed this section in the hands of the committee, as well as the intention of the Committee on Appropriations in adopting it, was that every bid shall be known to every member of Congress; that everything shall be known to every one in the world, so we may detect instantly whether the Bureau has availed itself of the best and lowest bid in its administration.

Mr. SEELYE. Is not the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations aware, after the careful consideration he has given the subject—and that he has given it such consideration we have been told repeatedly—is not the gentleman aware that in the returns office of the Secretary of the Interior precisely that thing already is now, and all the world and all Congress can know and find every bid, and every proposal, and every particular of a contract, with all relating thereto, in that returns office, is provided by sections 3744, 3745, and 3746 of the Revised Statutes? I take it that it cannot be the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has omitted anything from his careful consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not understand that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs objected to the first part of that section.

Mr. SEELYE. I do not know the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does object to it.

Mr. RANDALL. He did object, as I understand, to it as likely to make a large addition to the duties of the clerical force of his Office in making and filing copies of all bids with the Second Comptroller of the Treasury Department. I admit it might cause such addition, but the Second Comptroller is the officer of the Government whose duty it is to audit these accounts, and he ought to be able to have these contracts before him while he is discharging that duty in auditing the bills under them, so he may see exactly that the bills in every particular conform to the contracts. It must be admitted surely there is something to be gained by such a course.

Mr. SEELYE. If the gentleman will allow me, that is not the thing he provides for here; and if he will pardon me, that is not the thing proposed, as to what the Commissioner on Indian Affairs thinks in respect to this matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I supposed his recommendation would have some weight with the gentleman from Massachusetts, and therefore I mentioned the fact.

Mr. SEELYE. I am quite apt to do as the gentleman does occasionally—follow my own judgment. As this precise matter is already provided for in section 3744 of the Revised Statutes, I cannot see why it should be embraced in this bill; but I will ask the Clerk to read the section of the Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is all out of order, as the gentleman has proposed no amendment.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to strike out the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth lines of the section just read; and as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not seem to know the same thing is provided for in the Revised Statutes, I will ask the Clerk to read section 3744.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3744. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, of the Secretary of the Navy, and of the Secretary of the Interior, to cause and require every contract made by them severally on behalf of the Government, or by their officers under them appointed to make such contracts, to be reduced to writing, and signed by the contracting parties with their names at the end thereof; a copy of which shall be filed by the officer making and signing the contract in the returns office of the Department of the Interior, as soon after the contract is made as possible, and within thirty days, together with all bids, offers, and proposals to him made by persons to obtain the same, and with a copy of any advertisement he may have published inviting bids, offers, or proposals for the same. All the copies and papers in relation to each contract shall be attached together by a ribbon and seal, and marked by numbers in regular order, according to the number of papers composing the whole return.

Mr. SEELYE. Now it is quite apparent that this statute provides for precisely the work that is here required to be done over again. Only this statute requires that all these bids or proposals from the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Interior Department shall be filed in the returns office of the Interior Department. And here we are ordering that this same work shall be done over again, at the expense of very great clerical service, by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. I see the point which the gentleman desires to make. I would suggest that only the actual contract made should be filed with the Second Comptroller.

Mr. SEELYE. That is all, I suppose, that would be necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. The object of the first paragraph of the section is to secure for the use of Congress a transcript of all bids made, so that we shall be able to see instantly, on looking over them, whether in the administration of Indian affairs the contracts have been awarded to the lowest bidder.

Mr. SEELYE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I think he misapprehends me.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will hear me I think he will find that I apprehend what he means, and that I propose in a measure to reach it. I would suggest the striking out the words in the eleventh line, "all bids or proposals received;" so that it will read, "a copy of all contracts made shall be filed, &c." Does the gentleman understand me?

Mr. SEELYE. All right.

Mr. STEELE. I have prepared an amendment which I think will obviate the objection made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is to strike out the word "copy" in the tenth line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "abstract."

That would avoid the necessity of making a copy of all the proposals received by the department at its annual letting of contracts; but it will send with every contract actually made to the Second Comptroller's Office an abstract of all the bids received for that specific letting of goods, &c., on which that contract has been awarded, so that the Comptroller will be able to see what the bids were that were received, on which the award was made, and so that he may be able to know when contracts are let after the expiration of contracts, when contracts are let without advertisement and without public notice, what would be a reasonable sum to be paid for the supplies which are contracted for in that way.

The object of the first portion of this section is that Congress may have before it in the annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs a copy of all the bids received at any of these lettings, so that every man may see for himself whether the awards have been proper, whether the lowest bidders have received the contracts, without being compelled to go to the Interior Department and the Indian Office and examine the files of that Office to determine that question.

This is simply in the line of what the last Congress did in reference to this matter, by compelling the Office to send to Congress at the commencement of every session a detailed statement of the expenditures of this department. I am sure it will work a very great reform in the matter of letting these Indian contracts to make public all the bids received and every award made upon those bids.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman from Wyoming has made very plain the reason for the insertion of this section; and I think from the information he has given us that it will be better to leave the section undisturbed, except by adopting the amendment he has offered.

The question being taken on Mr. STEELE's amendment to the amendment, it was agreed to. And the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read the last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the distribution of all annuities, goods, and provisions shall, as far as practicable, be made at the various military posts.

Mr. SEELYE. I rise to make the point of order on this section that it is not in the line of retrenchment. This matter can be very simply stated. Many of the Indian agencies are far removed from military posts. Now, if they are brought to military posts there is necessarily a great expense in bringing them. If, on the other hand, the military posts are taken to the agencies, there would necessarily be a great expense in that change. And if the Indians are transported to the posts to receive their annuity goods and provisions, there is a great expenditure. In either case there is a very considerable increase of expenditure.

Mr. RANDALL. The intention of the section is that the Indians should come whenever practicable to a military post to receive all their goods, which would save of course the necessity of keeping up agencies and also the expense of transportation.

Mr. SEELYE. There is of course in reference to many of the Indian agencies an impossibility that they should be found at the military posts.

Mr. RANDALL. One of the great troubles we have had is that where Indian agencies have been located the military have been forced to them to protect them. There is no agency needed where the military is ready to distribute the goods.

Mr. SEELYE. Will the gentleman have the kindness to inform the House, in the case for instance of the Cattaraugus reservation, to what military post the Indians would have to repair to receive goods?

Mr. RANDALL. This section only provides that the distribution shall be made at military posts as far as practicable.

Mr. SEELYE. It is very impracticable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to decide the point of order. The gentleman raises the point of order that this section contravenes Rule 120. The Chair regards this section as simply a limitation upon the appropriations made, or a direction of the manner in which the appropriations shall be expended. The section therefore does not contravene the rule and is in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I was absent by order of the House examining a witness in an investigating committee when the committee passed over lines 744 and 745, in the first section of the bill, which read as follows:

For support of school for the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi at the agency in Iowa, $1,000.

I desire to offer a verbal amendment, to insert after the word "school" the words "and farmer."

That little agency has a farmer as well as a school-teacher, and it is at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that I offer the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the appropriation sufficient for both?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that. The only reason why it was left out was because it was not included in the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I offer the following amendment:

SEC. 7. That the certificate of a judge of a district court, or of a judge of a supreme court of any Territory, given under the seal of the court, attached to the application of any citizen of the United States for license to trade with the Indians, which certificate shall set forth that such person is of good moral character and a fit person to be in the Indian country, shall be accepted by the agent to which it is directed, and by the head of the Department in charge of Indian affairs, as conclusive evidence of the fitness of such person to receive a license to trade with the Indians, subject to the provisions of law and regulations issued in accordance therewith; and upon compliance herewith a license shall be granted to the applicant, which license shall be approved by the head of the Department having jurisdiction of Indian affairs.

I have altered this amendment on consultation with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] so as to induce him to withdraw the objection which he made to it the other day.

The object of this amendment is to break up the odious monopolies which have characterized our trade with the Indians almost since the adoption of the non-intercourse acts. I am frank to say that the evil is of no recent date. It is a moss-covered fungus of iniquity which had its roots in the decaying condition of the Indian Bureau long back, but which has developed into peculiar forms of hideousness during the rottenness of the past years.

Every one in this House and in the country has been humiliated by the exposures made of abuses in this direction during the last few years. They have been painful and humiliating to us all. We have seen injustice done to individuals and the robbery of Indians permitted, whole tracts of country turned over to the domination of speculators and reservations extended over the public lands for private benefit. I say this regardless of the persons to whom these privileges have been granted. So long as these monopolies are to be granted it is no matter to me who enjoys the benefits. My opposition is not directed against individuals, but against the system under which these abuses are possible and under which these special privileges are granted.

The history of American trade with the Indians is not a record that we can be peculiarly proud of. Fraud and avarice have nurtured passions not only between the red and white, but rival traders in times past have marshaled tribe against tribe and originated intertribal wars which have done far more to reduce the Indian to nothingness than all the encroachments and conflicts of the whites.

When our non-intercourse law was adopted, it was intended not to rob but to protect the Indians. It was never intended to be a cover for fraud, nor designed to set up monopolies for the enrichment of traders against the interests of the Indians; but under its provisions, during the subsequent administrations of the Department, monopolies did grow up and strengthen themselves until they became the rule of Indian trade.

In 1865 an effort was made, originated, I believe, by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] to cure these abuses, and an amendment was made to an appropriation bill, which is now the second section of the law in the Revised Statutes, which provided that thereafter all loyal citizens who were of good, moral character should be able to obtain upon application, without discrimination in favor of persons, license to trade with the Indians. That law has been evaded in a way which I will explain, and which evasion my amendment is intended to prevent in future. And certainly we ought to try in every way to prevent monopoly of trade on these Indian reservations. I submit that when an Indian is an industrious hunter, and by his industry in the chase and skill in woodcraft and trapping he secures a large quantity of robes, furs, and peltries, he should be allowed to sell them where he can get the most for the product of his toil, and also he should be allowed to purchase where he can get the most for his money.

What would be thought if the Government were to establish such a system of trade in all our villages and give to one or more traders the right to establish the prices at which goods should be sold and the rates which the working-man should receive for the product of his labor? How long would the people of this country stand it? Why should not the Indians have the benefit of that competition which everywhere is the best regulator of prices?

And graver evils have resulted from this system. Under its cloak the corrupt rings have been formed, and the chief abuses of the Indian service have occurred behind its convenient cover. It has enabled the corrupt agent to keep every one off the reservation except his confidants and accomplices; and thus under an almost impenetrable cover, and beyond the reach of detection, much of that unholy work has been done which has brought such odium upon the Indian service. It is to this system I object, and the amendment is intended to break it up.

Under the law of 1865 the question of good morals and fitness of any applicant for a license to be in the Indian country is left to the determination of the agent. He places on the application of his pal a favorable indorsement and denies it to all other applicants, and he is not obliged even to report this rejected application to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I am glad to say that the present Commissioner, for whom I have a high regard, has intimated his desire to break up the system as much as possible. But what is he to do? He must give some credit to the reports of his subordinates, and virtually the entire control is in the hands of the agents.

I propose that any citizen who shall receive the certificate of a United States judge, or the judge of a territorial supreme court, certifying to his character and fitness, shall receive a license when he presents it to the agent, and that license shall be approved when it reaches the Department at Washington. The certificate of the court shall be binding upon both. In this way the trade will be thrown open to all proper applicants and a vicious system broken up. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as SPEAKER pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the previous question upon the bill and the amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The following amendment was read:

On page 39, after line 931, insert:

Provided, That none of said sums shall be paid to said Indians until they cease their hostilities against white people.

Mr. KASSON. Is that language satisfactory to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANDALL. There was no objection made to the amendment in committee.

Mr. KASSON. My doubt is whether it should not come in further on, so as to relate to the Sioux.

Mr. RANDALL. It is intended to relate not only to the Sioux but to other tribes, including the Comanches.

No separate vote being asked on any of the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, they were agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. The section of this bill relating to the Indian Bureau having been agreed to, it becomes necessary to change the phraseology of the bill to make it conform therewith. I therefore ask unanimous consent to substitute the words "Secretary of War" for "Secretary of the Interior" wherever they occur in the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I would suggest to the gentleman that in lieu of the words "Secretary of War" he use the words "Secretary having jurisdiction of Indian affairs."

Mr. RANDALL. I accept the suggestion.

There being no objection, the proposed change in the phraseology of the bill was ordered to be made.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOONE. I move that the House now proceed to business on the Speaker's table. I make that motion for the purpose of reaching Senate bill No. 590, providing for an agreement with the Sioux Nation in regard to a portion of their reservation, and for other purposes.

Mr. REAGAN. I believe the regular order now is the morning hour. The bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BOONE] is a very important bill in its consequences, and I feel bound to take every step I can take to prevent its being acted upon until there has been an opportunity for its consideration and discussion. Therefore I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman insists upon the regular order, the morning hour will now begin.

Mr. REAGAN. I do insist upon it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; upon a division—ayes 80, noes 101.

Mr. DUNNELL. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at four o'clock and twenty minutes. The business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a public nature, and the call rests with the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to make a report for which the House has given leave.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being demanded, the report of the gentleman would not now be in order.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Would it be in order to move to dispense with the morning hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only way to avoid the morning hour is to raise the question of consideration. The call rests with the Committee on Public Lands, and the unfinished business in the morning hour is the bill reported by the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. Morey, who is not now in his seat. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRANKLIN. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order, business having intervened since the motion to adjourn was last made and voted down.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Many MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion to adjourn. Before putting that motion the Chair will submit to the House sundry requests of members.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. STONE asked and obtained leave for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers accompanying House bill No. 1723, for the relief of Joanna Nay Page.

Mr. WALDRON asked and obtained leave for the withdrawal of the papers in the case of Helen M. Doyle.

Mr. O'BRIEN asked and obtained leave for the withdrawal of the papers in the case of Joseph H. J. Rutter.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WARREN was granted leave of absence for ten days.

Mr. PLATT was granted leave of absence for two weeks.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn, and upon a division there were—ayes 118, noes 66.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. J. H. BAGLEY: The petition of W. H. Dempsey, for compensation for bond-paper furnished the Patent Office, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BUCKNER: Memorial of owners of real estate in squares 819, 820, 843, and 844, in Washington, District of Columbia, for relief against an alleged illegal assessment of taxes, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CANDLER: Resolutions of the Atlanta (Georgia) Academy of Medicine, against the passage of the bill incorporating the National Surgical Institute of the District of Columbia, to the same committee.

By Mr. HAYMOND: The petition of Enoch L. Folsom, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: Protest of the Cherokee Indians, against the establishment of a territorial government over the Indian country, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania: Remonstrance of Shaw & Esrey and Simeon Cotton and 102 other manufacturers and workingmen of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, against the reduction of import duties upon foreign goods which enter into competition with their respective manufactures, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi: The petition of Stephen Daggett, for compensation for stores and supplies taken by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 7, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that an order be made relieving the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] from service upon the committee of conference on the bank examiner's bill, on account of his absence from the city; and I ask that some other Senator be appointed in his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate excuse the Senator from Delaware from further service upon this committee? The Chair hears no objection, and he is excused.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancy, and Mr. COOPER was appointed.

Mr. BOGY. I ask to be relieved from service upon the committee of conference upon the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. It will be impossible for me to attend to the work. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] and myself are investigating some very heavy cases in the Private Land Claims Committee, and I have not the time possibly to attend to this conference. Therefore I ask to be excused from further service on the committee of conference.

There being no objection, Mr. BOGY was excused.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROBERTSON presented three petitions of citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, merchants and others, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of E. G. Adams and others, of Dawson County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Benjamin Woosley, late a private in the Second Tennessee Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEY presented a petition of merchants of Nashville, Tennessee, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GORDON presented the petition of S. P. Hunt, of Augusta, Georgia, praying that he may be allowed a land warrant and pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Atlanta Academy of Medicine, remonstrating against the granting of a charter for a national surgical institute in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of George S. Owens and others, planters and business men of Savannah, Georgia, approved by the Chamber of Commerce of that city, remonstrating against the adoption of that portion of the proposed treaty with the Hawaiian government which admits the free importation of rice into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PENSION STATISTICS.

Mr. INGALLS. I recently addressed a communication to the Commissioner of Pensions inquiring as to the number of pensioners who would be added to the roll and the amount of money which would be annually required from the Treasury by the passage of House bill No. 2454 with the amendments of the Senate committee. I have received from him a response which is valuable for the statistics it contains, and I ask that it may be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order to print will be made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (S. No. 906) to authorize the use of a portion of the invested funds belonging to the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians for beneficial objects; which was recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with the accompanying papers, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2157) to provide for a market-house on square 446 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1652) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Citizens' Railroad and to regulate its construction and operation, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. BOGY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 143) providing for the removal of the Walla Walla, Cayuse, and Umatilla tribes and bands of Indians to a permanent reservation, and to open to settlement the Umatilla reservation in Oregon, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 150) to provide for the removal of the Walla Walla, Cayuse, and Umatilla Indians from the Umatilla reservation in Oregon, and for the sale of their lands, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL subsequently said: I have been just advised that there was an adverse report made this morning from the Committee on Indian Affairs on certain bills introduced early in the session in relation to opening up the Umatilla reservation in Oregon. I was not aware that the reports were to be made this morning, nor was I aware that the committee had acted upon the matter. I think I have in my possession, or at my command at least, some further evidence relating to the general question; and if there is no objection from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, or from any member of the committee, I ask that the order indefinitely postponing the bills be reconsidered, and that they be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1034) for the relief of James G. Harrison, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOOTH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 805) relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California, to report it back with amendments; and I give notice that I shall call the bill up for consideration at an early day.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of the officers and members of the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children, praying an appropriation of $10,000, for the use of that institution, to report the same back, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations with a favorable recommendation from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1271) amendatory of the act to incorporate the Columbia Railway Company of the District of Columbia, approved May 24, 1871, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 463) changing the names of some of the avenues of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 499) in relation to appropriations and expenditures for the District of Columbia and taxation therein, reported it adversely, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to, the committee having reported a bill covering the subject-matter.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 835) for the relief of the Industrial Home School of the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 595) to incorporate the National Surgical Institute of the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 648) to provide for changes in alleys in the city of Washington by assent of parties interested, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPENCER. I am also directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting in answer to a resolution of the Senate of May 2, 1876, a copy of a report of the board of trustees of the public schools of the District, giving information in relation to the management of the public schools, to report the same back and ask that it lie on the table and be printed. It requires no legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 475) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery," approved July 27, 1854, to report the same back adversely. I would inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he desires this bill to go on the Calendar?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have it placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. SPENCER, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 818) to incorporate the National Drove-Yard Company of the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 797) to incorporate the Washington and Bladensburgh Pike Railroad Company, and to prohibit the use of steam-power on the same or adjacent thereto, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 778) to promote education in the city of Washington, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 707) amendatory of the act to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 879) for the advancement of medical and surgical science and for the protection of cemeteries in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia asking legislation providing for a just measure of taxation upon property in the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, the committee having reported a bill on the subject; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2552) to reduce the expenditures for public advertising in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3012) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. The majority of the Committee on Claims have instructed me to report back the bill (S. No. 562) for the relief of Joseph E. Moore, recommending its indefinite postponement. The Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL,] who does not concur in the views of the majority, will file the views of the minority.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit the minority report in this case, and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, and both reports will be printed, under the rule.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of the heirs of John W. Vose, have had the same under consideration, and instruct me to recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask that the bill go upon the Calendar.

Mr. WRIGHT. Very well. There will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 593) for the relief of the heirs of James S. Ham, have had the same under consideration, and instruct me to recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let that also go upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to state that there is a written report in these two cases applicable to both cases, and I ask that the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed, under the rule.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Andrew B. Battelle and George D. Evans, of Ohio, praying compensation for hides and tallow furnished to the Army during the late war, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am authorized by a majority of the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 174) for the relief of Dr. J. Milton Best, of Kentucky, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 633) to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the bill go upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 624) to incorporate the Citizens' Mutual Gas-Light Company of Washington City, in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and it was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAPERTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Michael Granary, Nicholas Max, and Molière Lange, praying to have refunded to them $500 each, being for the amount collected from them respectively on a bond given to the provost-marshal of the district of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, in 1863, for the appearance of one B. F. Rhodes to answer a criminal charge preferred against him, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 907) for the relief of Nicholas Max, Michael Granary, and Molière Lange.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1348) granting a pension to Ruth Isabelle Naylor, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

RAVAGES OF GRASSHOPPERS.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3573) to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874, to report it with an amendment and recommend its passage. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for its present consideration. I am sure there will be no objection to it. I can state in a moment what its object is, and the necessity for prompt action.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It extends all the rights and privileges granted by an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874, for one year after the expiration of the time named in said act.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to add:

And all the rights and privileges extended by this act to homestead and pre-emption settlers shall apply to and include the settlers under an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the western prairies," approved March 3, 1873, and the acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. WINDOM. I will state in one moment the object of the bill. At the time mentioned in the bill an act was passed permitting settlers on the public land whose crops had been utterly destroyed by the locusts to leave for a certain length of time without invalidating their pre-emption and homestead claims. That time has about expired. The pest is again upon them, and many of them have no means of supporting their families. This bill gives them permission to remain off another period, one year, I believe, without forfeiting their claims. A great many of those settlers have made valuable improvements upon those claims, and if they do not go back to them they will be forfeited, unless this bill shall pass. Some persons will "jump" the claims. This is simply to enable them to go elsewhere to find employment for the support of their families for a year longer if the ravages of the pest shall continue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is another part of the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. The amendment applies to settlers who have made claims under the tree-culture act, and allows them to remain away for the same period and for the same reasons. The House bill omitted this class, by mistake. I hope there will be no objection to the bill. It is important that it be passed at once, that this worthy but unfortunate class of people may know what to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874, and for other purposes."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 908) granting a pension to Benjamin Woosley, of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 909) to correct an error in section 1588 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I know nothing of the purpose of the bill, but I introduce it as requested. I move its reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD GRANTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] yesterday morning introduced a resolution which was laid over on my objection. I have examined it and see no reason why it should not pass. I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MAXEY yesterday:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, instructed to ascertain whether or not the railroad corporations, or any of them, mentioned under acts—

First, an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866.

Second, an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the southern branch of the Union Pacific Railway and Telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith Arkansas," approved July 26, 1866.

Third, an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," approved July 27, 1866—

Have issued any bonds or securities of any kind predicated upon the conditional grants of the lands of the Indians of the Indian Territory claimed by said companies or corporations under the above-mentioned acts; and, if it be ascertained that such bonds or securities have been so issued, then it shall be the duty of the said committee to discover the amount of the same, in what hands they are held, and whether or not the public faith of the United States is pledged for their payment or redemption.

Resolved further, That the said committee, in the discharge of the duties hereby imposed, be, and they are hereby, authorized to call for persons and papers, and be required to report the result of their investigations to the Senate as early as practicable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out "the Committee on the Judiciary" and insert "the Committee on Railroads." I think, first, that is the more appropriate committee, and, in the second place, it is only fair to the mover of this proposition to say that the amount of business now before the Judiciary Committee is so great that it is extremely improbable that the Judiciary Committee would have any time, taking even important matters in their due order, to devote to it at this session. I therefore hope that the Senate will agree to change the resolution so that the Committee on Railroads shall receive this instruction, and not the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not observe the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] in his seat, but the colleague of the Senator [Mr. HAMILTON] is here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the Senator from Texas is not here, I ask that the resolution be laid aside until he comes into the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over for the present.

CHEBOYGAN, MICHIGAN, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2140) establishing Cheboygan, in the State of Michigan, a port of delivery.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It declares Cheboygan, Michigan, within the collection district of Michigan, to be a port of delivery instead of Duncan City; and the office of deputy collector now located at Duncan City is to be removed to Cheboygan.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to add:

And all acts and parts of acts declaring Duncan City a port of entry are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF DISTRICT JAIL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up Senate bill No. 842.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum for the use of the District was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia are empowered by the bill to tear down and remove the jail situate on Judiciary Square, in the city of Washington, and with the material thereof, and such other as may be necessary, to locate and construct, within the present year, a suitable building or buildings for the work-house of the Washington Asylum, for the use of the District, upon the public reservation now occupied in part by the buildings of the Washington Asylum; and it is to be lawful to use the building or buildings and grounds for the imprisonment, under the laws, of persons sentenced to imprisonment by the police court of the District, or by the supreme court of the District in cases appealed from the police court, for violation of the municipal laws or ordinances in force in said District. The commissioners are not to expend more than $14,000 in and about the work of tearing down, removal, and construction.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer the following amendment:

SEC. 3. That for the removal of earth and rubbish, grading, sewerage, and other improvements of Judiciary Square, the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in lieu of money to have been derived from the sale of the jail on said square, and appropriated June 3, 1874.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMON UNIT OF MONEY AND ACCOUNTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution called up by me the other day in regard to a common unit of money between the United States and Great Britain. I send up the report of the committee, which can be read if any Senator desires.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution:

Concurrent resolution proposing a common unit of money and accounts for the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Whereas the magnitude of the transactions in commerce and the intimate social relations between the people of the United States and of Great Britain and Ireland combine to recommend the importance of uniformity in the gold coins and moneys of account of the respective countries; and whereas, in existing circumstances, a change in the standard of the gold coins of the United States could be introduced without serious inconvenience, and the United States are willing to make such change, to the end of securing such uniformity: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President be requested to propose a convention between the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, having for its object to secure uniformity in the coins and moneys of account of the respective countries on the general basis herein stated, but subject to such modifications as may be agreed upon between the contracting parties:

1. The money of account in each country shall be the dollar, which shall be represented by a coin formed of standard gold, whereof the pure metal shall be nine-tenths parts and the alloy one-tenth part, which alloy shall be of copper, or of copper and silver, the silver not to exceed one-tenth of the alloy. The weight of the dollar of such standard gold shall be twenty-five grains and one-ninth of a grain troy, and shall contain twenty-two grains and six-tenths of a grain troy in pure gold. Gold coins of two and one-half, five, ten, and twenty dollars, proportioned in weight, may also be issued, of like standard; and the convention shall provide what variations may be allowed from the exact standard of weight and fineness for such gold coins.

2. Subsidiary coins of silver, copper, or alloys of base metal may be issued within each country, of such standard and weight as may be provided by their respective laws, and representing cents or hundredths parts of a dollar, and other convenient decimal subdivisions thereof.

3. All accounts, representing transactions to be settled in coin, shall be kept in dollars and cents, or fractional parts of a cent. Sterling money shall be converted into dollar money by computing the pound sterling as equivalent to five dollars, the shilling to twenty-five cents, the sixpence to twelve and one-half cents, the penny to two cents, and the farthing to one-half cent.

4. All such gold coins conformed to standard, within the allowed limits of variation, shall be a legal tender within each country for debts and obligations payable in gold coin, excepting such as may have been incurred within the United States payable in gold coins of a former standard. The coins subsidiary to the dollar shall not be a legal tender beyond the limits of the country within which they are issued.

5. The action of the convention shall take effect when approved by the respective parties thereto, and when laws shall have been passed by the respective countries to carry it into effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read. If the Senator is going to explain the matter, I will not ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. The report itself was mainly prepared by the officers of the Treasury Department, and contains a good deal of technical information that I suppose would not, without careful examination, be accessible to members. It is only five pages of printed matter, and perhaps it had better be read, and the Senator will have the whole case before him. I would rather have it spread upon the record than any speech I could make.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. SHERMAN from the Committee on Finance on the 1st of February:

The great facility to commercial and social intercourse which would be afforded by a uniform international money and language of accounts is acknowledged. It is, however, to be feared, a desideratum as far off from accomplishment as the introduction of a general language. To expect different nations to alter their established moneys and introduce new ones is, except under extraordinary contingencies, unreasonable. But circumstances growing out of the disorders of our paper currency have made it easy for the United States at this time to take such a step, which under other conditions would be inexpedient and unwise. The great bulk of our money contracts are now made and payable in a paper currency depreciated and fluctuating. It is expected that this currency will be gradually appreciated. In the course of such appreciation the dollar in paper will stand at various relations to the dollar of coin. In one of the stages of the change the paper dollar will be equal in value to the fifth of a pound sterling gold; in another, it will equal five francs in gold. When our present gold is at 103¾, then the paper dollar is worth 96½ cents in gold, or five francs; when gold is 102½ in our paper, then the currency is worth 97½ cents, or one-fifth of a pound sterling. If at one of these stages the coin dollar were changed and fixed so as to correspond to the value of the paper dollar of the time, we would have our coin brought in harmony, as the case might be, either with the British or French system of moneys, and since the mass of these outstanding currency contracts would represent in dollars the same relative value, to fix the coin dollar on one or the other such basis, and so circulate it, would be perfectly fair to the creditor class. The occasion is, therefore, most opportune to make such an alteration in our gold moneys preparatory to resumption, as will bring them in harmony with one or other of these well-established money systems of Great Britain or the franc countries. It would be a step at least toward a universal money, although the final accomplishment of that end might be very remote.

If the United States are prepared for a change, the question presses, with which of the foreign money systems should we harmonize? There can be no doubt that it should be with that of Great Britain, provided certain modifications were admitted by that country.

The franc basis of money has a recommendation in the fact of a considerable extension on the continent of Europe, and for a time it was expected that it might spread over the whole continent, but the introduction by the German Empire of the mark as its new unit of moneys has dispelled that prospect. The further development of the franc system is, therefore, probably permanently arrested, and if adopted by any other country, must be from its merits, and not in the hope of further continental extension. Considered from this point of view, the franc must be condemned as the basis of a gold coinage. As a unit, it cannot be represented in a coin of gold. In value it is so small that the hundredth or centime has practically no representative in coin or retail prices, the sou (of five centimes) being the least measure in circulation. Again, the coin has not even a symmetrical relation with the so-called metrical system, its weight in grams being such as can only be represented by an indefinite decimal fraction or by a vulgar fraction. This matter is adverted to because some admirers of the metrical system of weights and measures consider the franc basis of money as bearing a necessary relation to it, but this is not the fact. Any other coin would fall in with the metrical system as conveniently as the franc does. Finally, seigniorage on gold is the law of the mints coining francs, and if we adopted the franc basis, we should have to return to such a change, since harmony in coinage would be rendered nugatory if the mints differed as to seigniorage.

The reasons for harmonizing our moneys with those of Great Britain grow out of our intimate commercial and social relations. Our trade with that country exceeds in magnitude that with all other countries put together. Our language and literature and community of race must forever unite us more closely than ever is possible with the people using, or likely to use, the franc currency. Looking into the future, it is plain that the English-speaking races are to become predominant in civilized society throughout the world, while the Latin peoples, to whom mainly the franc basis is confined, are stationary. It is probable, therefore, that a system of money on which the American and British might unite would in the end become a universal money.

It is well known to those who have observed the discussions of late years by British writers and before Parliamentary committees, that the people of Great Britain are not satisfied with their system of coinage, especially from its non-decimal character.

No doubt the introduction of a decimal coinage would long ere this have taken place but for two considerations: one of them, that, in view of the prospect of harmonizing the coinage with that of other nations, it would be better to delay any change; the other, that the unit, being the pound sterling, the largest unit known, would have to be divided for the purpose of account into thousandths, a very inconvenient arrangement. The proposals for internationalizing the coinage generally looked toward harmonizing on the franc basis, but this involved the alteration of standard units in one or other country, and its introduction, never very probable, has been rendered even less so by the action of the German Empire, already referred to. It seems very unlikely that the British will make any substantial alteration in the intrinsic value of their gold coins, so as to present even the appearance of a degradation of the standard; but it is probable that they would be glad to accept any change that would permit the convenience of a decimal system, effectively preserve their standards, and bring them in unity with the people of the United States.

The proposal toward securing the end embraces the following particulars:

First. The United States are to abandon the present dollar of gold for a new dollar, which shall contain the same amount of pure metal as that in the fifth part of the pound sterling. Five such dollars (or the half-eagle) will be equal to the sovereign.

Second. The British will adopt a similar dollar as the unit of money of accounts. The sovereign of present weight and fineness to be discontinued, but all gold coins are to be nine-tenths fine and proportioned to the dollar unit. They will therefore coin a five-dollar piece, which will contain exactly the amount of gold in the sovereign and be of the same value. Other gold coins ($2.50, $10, and $20) are also to be coined. The gold coins of the two countries are therefore to be identical.

Third. The British are to introduce cents and other decimal coins subsidiary to the dollar, and to keep all accounts for the future in dollars and cents. The use of pounds, shillings, and pence as denominational moneys and for accounts is to be abandoned. This provision is considered indispensable. A partial harmony, such as might result from the pound sterling being retained as a unit and our half-eagle conformed thereto, would have little value. What we desire is to think and speak in the same language of money. We want prices named in the same units, dollars and cents. It helps little if we are always compelled to go through an arithmetical calculation, however simple: if we are to multiply British pieces by 5 and they to divide American pieces by 5. We need not a simple ratio, but absolute uniformity. The difficulties of the change from British money to dollars are very small. Four shillings of account are a dollar, and a people accustomed to naming prices in shillings will easily perceive the relation.

The pound is $5, the shilling twenty-five cents. The smaller coins are out of harmony, but decimal coins would of course be introduced.

Fourth. Finally, the gold coins of each country, if conformed to standard, should be legal tender within the other.

In fixing the standard for the proposed dollar, it has been made practically the fifth of the legal pound sterling, but not exactly so to the most remote fraction. The pound contains of pure gold 113.001605 grains, and one-fifth of that would be 22.600321. (One ounce or 480 grains $^{11}/_{12}$ fine = £3 17s. 10½d. or £3.89375, (or 440 grains pure gold;) therefore, $^{440}/_{3.89375}$ = 113.001605 pure grains of gold in one pound.)

To fix the weight so as to include the three-hundred-and-twenty-one-millionth part of a grain seems an unnecessary refinement, and therefore 22.6 grains pure gold to the dollar, or 25¼ grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, are taken. (Therefore, 226 grains pure gold = $10, and of standard ($^{9}/_{10}$) gold = $9.) British coin in circulation, even the new coin included, does not exceed 113 grains pure to the pound, which gives the basis of the dollar-weight selected, and the actual deficiency over full-weighted coin is but one in one hundred thousand parts, and practically inappreciable.

The marked superiority which the dollar seems to have over all other units of gold moneys is well known. It is desirable, of course, that any unit of money should have its representation in coin; hence, the franc, which cannot be represented in gold, a quite inadequate as is unit for a gold standard. Again, it is most convenient that the decimal divisions of the unit should not extend below the hundredth part, and these also should be represented by coins. The franc is centesimally divided in accounts, but (as before stated) the lowest current money is the sou of five centimes, equal to one cent. On the other hand, the pound sterling is so large that its centesimal division is of the value of our half-dime, and a most inconvenient long-drawn, millesimal division, both in coins and accounts, would be indispensable. Compare with the franc and pound our dollar. It is, indeed, a minute gold coin, but not inconvenient for circulation in smaller payments, while greater ones are effected by its larger multiples, the five, ten, and twenty dollar pieces. Its hundredth is about equal to the sou and half-penny, and is quite small enough for the least settlements of trade.

If the change proposed should be made, old contracts payable in the present gold dollar could be settled with all convenient approximation in the new dollars, on the basis of $1.02½ in new for $1 in old coins, that is by adding 2½ per cent.

The resolution was agreed to.

J. W. P. HUNTINGTON.

Mr. KELLY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 454.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 454) for the relief of the sureties of J. W. P. Huntington, deceased, late superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the settlement of the accounts of J. W. P. Huntington, deceased, late superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall allow a credit of $10,000, Indian funds, charged to him and lost by the wreck of the steamer Brother Jonathan, off the coast of California, on the 30th of July, 1865; also a credit of $500, for that sum transmitted by Huntington, on or about the 15th of May, 1865, to William Logan, deceased, late Indian agent, in charge of the Warm Springs Indian agency in Oregon, for which no vouchers were returned before the death of Logan. But no credit shall be allowed for these sums until satisfactory proof shall be made of the loss of the $10,000 by the wreck of the steamer Brother Jonathan and of the transmission of the $500 to Logan.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH WILSON.

Mr. COCKRELL. On Monday I believe it was, the bill (H. R. No. 2836) for the relief of Joseph Wilson, of Bourbon County, Kentucky, was taken up, and, the report not having been printed and laid on our tables, the matter was deferred. I ask that it be considered at the present time.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read. If we are to pay for captures, I should like to know the grounds.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, on the 31st of May.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My inquiry is answered by the order of the Chair.

Mr. BOGY. I intended to speak to this bill, but the morning hour has expired.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion, as the Senator from Illinois, who wished to speak upon it, is not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The amendments will be reported by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment proposed by Mr. CLAYTON is to add to section 3 the following words:

That the appointments in all the Executive Departments of the Government shall be so arranged as to be equally distributed between the several States of the United States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, according to population; and the principle of equal distribution of appointments as above provided for shall apply in making reductions of force in said Departments.

Mr. EDMUNDS proposes to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

And all such appointments shall be made upon a careful and impartial examination of the candidate therefor by a board composed of not less than five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the most capable and worthy of the competitors so examined shall be selected for such appointments.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I have already spoken on this amendment, I believe, five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has exhausted his time.

Mr. HOWE. I want the indulgence of the Senate. I do not want to try to flank the rule of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Wisconsin proceeding? The Chair hears none, and the Senator has the floor.

Mr. HOWE. My friend from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] tells me that this opens up the whole debate. I do not open up the debate; it is the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. You beat down the restrictions.

Mr. HOWE. I beat down no restrictions. It is the amendment which opens up the debate. My deliberate judgment is that this amendment is open to the charge of being vicious in every respect which could be charged against an amendment. It proposes general legislation, to begin with, upon an appropriation bill; and, unless there is an emergency, I do not think that ever ought to be done. Then it opens a question of very grave, serious, and prolonged dispute under a rule which limits debate to five minutes, and I do not think that such a controversy ought to be opened up under such a rule.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] yesterday moved to lay the pending amendment on the table. The Senate refused to make that disposition of it. It is, therefore, forced upon the consideration of the Senate. I am unwilling to let the Senate incorporate this provision into our laws without saying something more than I have said about it; and yet I am going to be brief. I want to get along with the appropriation bills; I want to get along with the legitimate business of the Senate; but I do not want such a proposition as this crammed down my throat without at least offering some protest against it.

In addition to the objections which I have just mentioned to the pending amendment, growing out of the time at which it is proposed, and in addition to what I said of it last evening, I want to repeat as briefly as I can that, while I do not insist upon its unconstitutionality—a point which I did not make yesterday, and which, if it be true, as I think it is true, does not increase my opposition to the amendment—if it was ever so constitutional, I should still be inflexibly opposed to it; but I want to say in passing that the Senator from Vermont did not answer the objection which was made by the Senator from Ohio upon its unconstitutionality. The Senator from Vermont says that from the beginning of your Government you have had a statute regulating the mode of selecting different officers. He instances that as to the Attorney-General, which requires that a man shall be nominated for Attorney-General who is learned in the law. Why, undoubtedly, Mr. President, when a statute creates an office it may prescribe in general terms the qualifications which the incumbent shall have. That is what the statute does, and all the statute does, to which the Senator from Vermont refers. But it leaves the President under the Constitution, with all his constitutional authority, to select from all the learned lawyers of the United States the one who shall fill that office. That is not the operation by any manner of means of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The law vests the appointment of these clerks in the heads of Departments. There the Constitution says it shall be, or it shall be in the President; but the amendment in effect vests the appointment in this committee, and in nobody else; because it says that the Secretary shall appoint the man, the individual man who shall be selected by the committee. That is the precise effect of it; and it is a very different statute from the one referred to by the Senator from Vermont.

But, as I said before, if the measure was ever so constitutional, it would not be one whit the more acceptable to me. Its tendency is bad; its tendency is not to promote the welfare of the public service; but, as I said yesterday, it is to demoralize that service. And I want to call the attention of the Senate especially to the fact that when the Senator from Vermont spoke last evening he changed his ground entirely on which he defended originally the proposition. He admits that the present mode of selecting these clerks is not open to the suggestion which is so often urged against it, that you get unworthy men by allowing the heads of Departments to select. It is not that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not said anything of that kind, that I remember.

Mr. HOWE. I understand the Senator to have admitted precisely that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I did, I do not recollect it. I will look over my remarks and see.

Mr. HOWE. I charged that if clerks were recommended by Senators and Representatives, they were not encouraged to select unworthy men with a view to promote their own election, but they were admonished to select worthy men upon pain of forfeiting an election if they selected unworthy men. I understood the Senator from Vermont to assent to that expressly; but he said, and he truly said—and upon this one question it is about the only true thing that I heard him utter—that it is one of the most irksome and disagreeable of the duties with which a representative is charged to answer the demands of his constituents for these employments. He said he would be glad to be relieved of that duty. I have no doubt he would. I certainly would myself. If I know myself, it is the one duty which I have shirked as diligently if not more so than any other, and I have shirked all the duties I could comfortably and conscientiously. That I have abstained from as much as from any other, but, if it be a duty, we have no right to shirk it any more than any other duty.

Mr. President, let your heads of Departments be held responsible to the country for the character of their employés, and you can have no better responsibility than that, in my judgment. I think myself that the employment of these committees of examination is a sham and a delusion for two reasons: first, because I have not the most implicit confidence in the integrity of all their decisions. You are not any more sure to get faithful and honest men on your committee of examination than you are to get them in the heads of your Departments. If you get a capable man at the head of a Department, you do not want the examining committee. His opportunities of telling who is most worthy and who is most capable and who is most intelligent are infinitely more ample than the opportunities of any examining committee. Secondly, I think it is a delusion, because the best examining committee in the world, and the most conscientious and the most faithful, can only, as I said yesterday, determine, after all, which of two men is the most advanced in literary attainments. Which has the other qualifications, just as necessary to every clerk, they cannot determine at all.

I am opposed to this amendment for another reason. It is not right to give these employments by an inflexible law always to the individual who is furthest advanced in literary pursuits. If the issue which the Secretary is called to decide is between one who is needy and one who is rich, although the son of the millionaire may be a little better educated than the one who is poor, yet if the latter be competent to discharge the duty the law ought not to prohibit his appointment. If the issue be between one who is diligent and one who is dilatory in the discharge of his duty, yet if the one who is dilatory passes the best examination the law commands the Secretary to select him if this amendment be adoped. These things are not right. The law should not command any such thing. I hope the Senate will not agree to the provision.

Mr. President, it seems to me there is no sensible man on this floor who does not know that, although you may incorporate this provision upon your statutes to-day in obedience to what you may suppose to be a public sentiment, it will not stand there five years. You cannot preserve the service of your Departments with such a law upon the books.

Now, I am going to conclude my part of this debate by making one further remark. If the Congress of the United States really wants to promote the welfare of the service in these Departments and will endow a university here in the capital at Washington and will accept of six hours' service per day from the clerks, you may, as the present clerks retire, fill your Departments with young men every one of whom is fitted to enter any college in the United States, who will do your work at six hours a day better than it is now done, will pursue a university course, will do it at an even salary of a thousand dollars a year instead of the graduated salaries you now pay. This will save you a million and a half of dollars in mere salaries and will turn off in every six years after the institution is fully established from three thousand to four thousand young men who have gone through the whole curriculum of university studies and who are just as familiar with the practical working of every Bureau in this Government as the head of the Bureau is to-day. That is what you may do to promote the welfare of your civil service here in these Departments; you may do it and make money out of the operation.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] yesterday in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] appeared to me to be sound. The example given by the Senator from Vermont in support of his proposition is not in my judgment applicable to this case; that is to say, inasmuch as the Attorney-General and district attorneys are taken from a special class, he holds that that principle is the same as the principle of his amendment. It seems to me that that is a non sequitur. The Constitution of the United States provides for a Supreme Court and authorizes Congress to provide tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. The Attorney-General and the district attorneys are as much a part and parcel of the machinery of the court as the judge upon the bench. They are counsellors of the court, officers of the court, and therefore there would be just as much need for a competitive examination among those presented to the Senate for confirmation as judges as there would be for competitive examination among candidates for district attorneys and for Attorney-General. But there is none in either, and therefore the illustration is not applicable to the case before the Senate.

The theory of local representation permeates the entire system of our Government, and by analogy should apply just as much to the appointment of clerks and all subordinates as to anything else. This theory of local representation runs everywhere throughout the entire frame-work of our Government, and it should run in the appointment of clerks. So far as I am personally concerned, or so far as I am concerned as a Senator, I have perhaps as little, possibly less, interest than any other Senator on this floor, because it so happens that the State which I have the honor in part to represent is not in accord with the present Administration "by a large majority," [laughter,] and therefore, so far as my experience goes, what I would say in reference to the appointment of anybody would have very little weight indeed with this Administration. Hence I cannot be said to have any interest as a Senator or as an individual in supporting the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas; but I do it because it is right. The republicans in the State of Texas, if they are honest and worthy and well qualified, have as much right to appointments, according to the pro rata share to which that State would be entitled on a fair and just distribution, as those in any other State. Hence I say it is right, and if I could assist my worthy colleague in getting appointments for some right good republican people down in Texas, who are honest and worthy and well qualified, I would do so with very great pleasure, because I think that after a while perhaps, if things turn out right, I may get a little say in the appointments myself. I think it is right, no matter who is at the head of the Administration, and because I believe it to be right, and because I know it is not carried out in the Departments, I think the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should be adopted, and that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont should not be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question? Would he be in favor of the substance of the amendment I have had the honor to offer if the constitutional objection could be overcome?

Mr. MAXEY. I will endeavor to answer the question of the Senator from Vermont. I think that this amendment of his is of the nature of substantive distinct legislation, and I think I have expressed my opinion against that in the form of a rider or tack-on to an appropriation bill in almost every remark I have made whenever an appropriation bill has come up. There is now upon the statute-book, which was read yesterday by the Senator from Ohio, an act designed to cover appointments in the civil service. If that act is defective, then I know of no Senator in all this body who is more thoroughly capable of appreciating a good bill than the Senator who asks me this question, who is the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and hence I think that such a bill regulating the appointment of persons in the civil service would come properly and legitimately, not in the shape of amendment to an appropriation bill, but from the committee of which the Senator is the distinguished chairman, the Committee on the Judiciary. That I think is an answer to the question. I am opposed to anything of the kind here in this appropriation bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I agree in the principle of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. I agree also with the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin that the heads of Departments ought to be responsible for the appointments made in their own offices. I believe further that they ought entirely to control them; and for that very reason I am in favor of the principle of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. Do the heads of Departments under the present practice control the appointments in their own offices? All Senators here know that they cannot under the present system; that the appointments are made through the influence of members of Congress, of Senators and political men. The control is taken out of the hands of the heads of Departments, and the public service in fact suffers by the practice. I am opposed to that entire system. It tends to make everything corrupt and everything mercenary. It occupies a large portion of the time of Senators and Representatives, and is the most annoying part of the duties they now have to perform—duties which, according to the true theory of the Constitution of our Government, they have nothing to do with; for according to the theory of our Constitution the heads of these Departments should control and run their own Departments and have the control of the patronage which belongs to them. That patronage does not belong to Senators and Members of Congress. The whole theory of the Constitution has been reversed in modern times in that respect. I am for going back to the true principle of the Constitution and placing the responsibility and the power of appointment and the running of these offices in the hands of those who were supposed by the Constitution to be responsible.

Now the objection is made by the Senator from Wisconsin that these examinations by an examining board are confined merely to literary attainments. Are they so? If they are, it shows an incompetency on the part of the members of the board; for what is it that confines their duties to an examination as to those particular qualifications? There may be some truth in it; but if that is the course taken they have clearly neglected their duties. Their duties should be to inquire into the competency of an applicant for the position for which he applies; and that I understand would come within the fair construction of the amendment presented by the Senator from Vermont. I should say that any examining board that would confine their examination merely to the literary attainments of an applicant would fail to have the first conception of their duty; they would misapprehend their duty.

I am not prepared to go into the constitutional question which has been raised here; but I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Vermont that a provision of the kind which is here proposed might be sustained upon constitutional grounds. It should, I think, however, leave to the Secretaries the choice, and not confine them to a single individual. If it leaves a choice from the class of persons who have passed a good examination, I think it could be sustained upon constitutional grounds.

There is one other objection which is raised here, that this is independent legislation proposed to an appropriation bill. There is perhaps some force in that; but I am so much in favor of the principle of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont that I am willing to vote for it in almost any shape and under almost any circumstances, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Vermont will not be adopted, and for two reasons, either of which, in my judgment, would be sufficient. In the first place, as I understand the amendment, it is in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

> And all such appointments shall be made upon a careful and impartial examination of the candidate therefor by a board composed of not less than five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the most capable and worthy of the competitors so examined shall be selected for such appointments.

Mr. EATON. The Constitution of the United States says, in article 2, section 2, that the President—

> Shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, * * * and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Now, it seems to me that the reasoning of the honorable Senator from Vermont yesterday does not cover the difficulty at all. Here is to be established, if I understand the honorable Senator's amendment, a board of five, or not less than five, individuals, who are to be nominated to the Senate by the President of the United States and to be confirmed by the Senate, and then that body of five have the examination and pass upon the qualifications of all applicants for appointments to office under the Government. It strikes me that it is in direct conflict with the clause of the Constitution which I have read.

The illustration of the honorable Senator from Vermont of the appointment of an Attorney-General learned in the law, it does not seem to me strikes a hard blow against the position which I assume. I think a mere statement of the case, a mere reading first of the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator and then of the Constitution, settles the question. It is not necessary to elaborate it at all. So I am opposed to the amendment on that ground.

There is one other ground, and that is that no five men, in my judgment, can be nominated to the Senate and be confirmed by this body who are capable of passing upon the abilities of the five thousand persons that will offer for appointments here. Why, sir, you want a competent book-keeper at one point; you want a competent man in the Patent Office for a particular branch of service; you want a competent man in the Patent Office for another particular branch of service, and so on; it goes through the whole service of the United States. Why, sir, give me the intelligent head of a Bureau in any branch of the Treasury service, and I would rather have his opinion with regard to the capability of an employé than that of this board of five men who may be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Take the Light-House Board, for example. What five men can be appointed and confirmed by the Senate of the United States—who are they—that will be so competent to pass upon the capabilities of an applicant to serve in that Light-House Board as the head of that board? Who so competent?

But, says an objector, members of the Senate, members of the House force political bummers on the Departments. I think I have seen specimens of them. Very likely that may be true. Then let them be pruned. Prune the Departments, put out the dead-wood, and let good men only be either offered by Senators and Representatives or accepted by the Departments. That is the way to purge your service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamlin, Kelly, Morrill of Vermont, and Wadleigh—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Caperton, Clayton, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Hamilton, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Paddock, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stevenson, Whyte, Windom, and Wright—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, West, and Withers—34.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON.]

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move to amend the amendment, to follow immediately after the printed portion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas:

Provided, That the District of Columbia shall be entitled to three times the number of appointments to which it would be entitled on the basis of population.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to add the following provision to this amendment:

Provided, That the foregoing provision shall be subject to the provisions of section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

That section is as follows:

Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

If this amendment is to be adopted of making a distribution by States, unless we put in this provision, that it shall not affect the discharged soldiers, the result will be that a large number even who are now employed will have to be discharged, because it happens from an unhappy geographical and political circumstance that ninety-nine one-hundredths of the discharged soldiers are in the States that have more nearly their proportion, if not more, of appointees already. I therefore hope everybody will vote for this amendment of mine.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have here an amendment of a similar character recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask the Senator to see whether it will not cover his amendment, though in different language. I understand the law already applies to appointments to be made. What I suppose the Senator wants is to cover the reductions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think I shall move this as a substitute.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. I offer this as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont——

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have an amendment in the second degree now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas offer an amendment?

Mr. CLAYTON. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, if that is in order; as an amendment to his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is already in the second degree.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask the Senator to read the section of the statute again. Perhaps I can accept his amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall have to have the yeas and nays anyhow, though I shall be very glad to have the support of my friend. I will read the section again.

Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think that covers the same thing that I am trying to get at. I have no objection to that. It covers the reductions, I think, as well as the appointments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My proposition simply is that in making this geographical partition by the compass and the chain of the selection of people to fill Department offices, it shall not affect the fundamental right of a soldier, wherever he lives, if he is fit to fill one, to get it if he can.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In my opinion this whole matter in reference to the appointment of the subordinate employés in the Executive Departments ought to be left to the heads of Departments. You ought to have men at the head of the Departments who are capable to discharge the duties of their offices, and to them ought to be left the discretion of selecting the persons who shall carry out their wishes in the administration of their respective Departments of the Government. If you attempt to limit and restrict the authority of the heads of Departments over their employés, you will have the same kind of service you now have. But if you put the proper men at the head of the Departments, holding them responsible for the proper administration of the affairs of their Department, they will be exceedingly careful to employ none but proper men to carry out their wishes. This attempt to restrict the heads of Departments relieves them to a certain extent of a responsibility for their management.

I am therefore in favor, first, of the appointment to the head of the Departments of proper men, and then of letting them have the control of the employés under them.

A word now in reference to the provisions of the section read by the Senator from Vermont. I have as high a regard for the men who fought the battles of the country as has anybody else; but I am against any distinctions and preferences being exercised toward any particular class of American citizens. I do not believe that simply because a man has worn a uniform he is any better than anybody else. He is none the worse on that account; nor is he any the better on that account. Reward merit, whether you find it in the soldiery or whether you find it in the civilian, but do not attempt to discriminate between classes of citizens in this country. I know there has been a feeling of discrimination in favor of the soldiery, prompted more often by political considerations than by any desire for the public good; and I should not be honest to myself if I did not say here that all such attempts to make political capital out of the distribution of the offices of the Government are a part of those things which have brought upon the public service that disgrace to which it has been subjected. No, sir; let us have no discrimination; let merit be rewarded either in the soldier or in the citizen; but do not give a preference to any one class of our citizens over another.

Sir, leave this matter where it properly belongs; leave it with the heads of Departments; let them make their selections from such persons as they believe competent to perform the clerical duties of their offices, and then you will have a better public service than you will have by attempting to limit the power of the heads of Departments and restricting them in the performance of their official duties. I am therefore opposed to this whole concern. Let the public business of this country be managed by persons who are responsible for its management, and in my opinion you will have a better public service than you have at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand this amendment is the law now, and I will vote for it simply because it is the law.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 37, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Caperton, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Paddock, Robertson, Sherman, Stevenson, Wadleigh, White, Windom, Withers and Wright—37.

NAYS—Messrs. McCreery, Merrimon and Saulsbury—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Johnston, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, and West—33.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended.

Mr. CLAYTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to hear the amendment reported as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the appointments in all the Executive Departments of the Government shall be so arranged as to be equally distributed between the several States of the United States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, according to population; and the principle of equal distribution of appointments as above provided for shall apply in making reductions of force in said Departments: Provided, That the foregoing provision shall be subject to the provisions of section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. So far as any principle is involved in the amendment, I have no objection to it; but it is legislation, distinct legislation. Up to this time we have ignored that entirely on this bill. That has been one of the most distinct principles which the Senate has adhered to up to this time. That was the principle on which the committee acted in presenting this bill to the Senate; and if it is violated in this instance, it seems to me that we ignore a principle the ignoring of which may be very troublesome to us before we get though with this bill. Therefore I shall feel constrained to vote against this amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. The appropriation bill clearly provides for reducing the force of the different Departments of the Government; and this amendment simply goes on one step further to say how that force shall be reduced. It certainly is perfectly germane to the bill, and I do not see why it should not be considered as appropriate.

Mr. WITHERS. What the chairman of the committee has stated is clearly correct. The Appropriation Committee of the Senate have, in consideration of what has been the expressed wish of the Senate, amended this legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill by striking out various provisions of it which proposed legislation; and they expected to sustain themselves in this position by declaring to the Senate and the country that an appropriation bill is not the proper place for legislation. As long as we can stand upon that principle it is possible we may be able to sustain ourselves in any contest with the other House; but if we present ourselves an amendment to the bill which violates the principle on which we have stricken out various clauses of their bill, it seems to me we cut the ground from under us, and it would leave us entirely open to the attacks of those who assert the right of the House to legislate in an appropriation bill. Therefore I think it would be exceedingly indiscreet on the part of the Senate to add this legislative amendment to the appropriation bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I concur in every word that the Senator from Virginia has said; and yet there is one suggestion which I want to make to him for the purpose of seeing whether it will influence his mind. It does not quite influence my own. I think I shall vote with the Senator from Virginia; but we shall have an incoming administration on the 4th of March next; I do not know what sort of a one it will be, and it is not material to the point which I make. When you run your eye over the country you will ascertain that there are very many States that have never had cabinet ministers selected from those various States; and in kindness to those States this proposition should require that selections be made from those States. It is just as sensible when applied to those offices, and indeed there is additional sense in it. I think perhaps that my friend from Virginia and I had better yield our objections in consideration of the fact that we should get an excellent Cabinet. I have no doubt that the rule that would require a Department to appoint its subordinates from a locality, when the subordinate to be appointed is not the equal of another, would apply precisely as well and with as much force to officers of a higher grade; and that would be an inducement for some to vote for the amendment. It will not quite induce me to vote for it, however.

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not want to speak upon this subject again; but there is one very singular coincidence that I cannot help noticing. All the gentlemen who seem to find fault with this amendment happen to represent States that have a very large preponderance over what would be due them under this provision.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is not true of my State.

Mr CLAYTON. I have here a tabulation of this subject, made upon the Blue Book of 1875. If there has been any great change it must have taken place since then. I will see how it is with regard to Maine. Maine is entitled to fifty-five employés in the Treasury Department upon the basis of population; she has eighty-seven. She is entitled to six in the Post-Office Department; she has eight. She is entitled to twenty in the Interior Department; she has twenty-four. In the War Department I believe, however, she is entitled to more than she has. In the War Department she is entitled to seventeen and has eight. In the State Department she is entitled to eight and has none. In the Navy Department she is entitled to three and has four. If the Senator from Virginia desires information in regard to the force from his State, I will say that Virginia is entitled to ninety-nine in the Treasury Department and has ninety. There she has not as many as she is entitled to by nine. In the Post-Office Department she is entitled to eleven and has twenty-one; in the Interior Department, to twenty-one and has thirty-six. In the War Department nearly all the States have less than they are entitled to.

Mr. NORWOOD. Is the record of Georgia upon the Senator's list?

Mr. CLAYTON. I think Georgia has far less than she is entitled to have.

Mr. MERRIMON. How about North Carolina?

Mr. CLAYTON. North Carolina has less than she is entitled to have.

Mr. NORWOOD. I should like to hear the statement in regard to Georgia.

Mr. CLAYTON. Georgia is entitled to ninety-nine in the Treasury Department, and has eight. There you see a considerable difference. She is entitled to eleven in the Post-Office Department and has eight. In the Interior Department she is entitled to thirty-six and has three; in the War Department to thirty and has none; in the State Department to fourteen and has four; in the Navy Department to five and has none. That is about the proportion in regard to most of the Southern States and a great many of the Western States.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask the Senator to publish the list from which he is reading in his remarks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator where he gets these figures?

Mr. CLAYTON. From the Blue Book of 1875.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who tabulated it?

Mr. CLAYTON. I have examined it and find that it is correct.

Mr. WITHERS. With the permission of the Senator from Arkansas I will state that my objection to the measure did not arise from any knowledge of these facts.

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not say it did. I only said that it was a coincidence.

Mr. WITHERS. The coincidence may go for what it is worth. Up to the present moment I have been in entire ignorance of the number to which we were entitled or the number in the different Departments hailing from Virginia. I have no knowledge whatever on that subject. My information, however, was precisely predicated upon the fact which I stated in my remarks; but as the subject has been introduced, I will say that it is not at all surprising that both the States of Virginia and Maryland should have a larger number credited to them than their proper quota, estimated upon the basis of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, for the reason that persons coming to the city of Washington from other localities hoping to get appointments in some one or other of the Departments, and failing to do so, and having to fix upon a residence, naturally locate either in Virginia or in Maryland in order to be accessible to Washington where they may prosecute their claims upon the Departments or their applications for appointments, and then if subsequently appointed to any office they are credited to the State of Virginia or to the State of Maryland as the case may be. Notably I will recall the instance of Mr. Caleb Cushing, who certainly nobody ever supposed to be a Virginian, or claimed that he was a Virginian, and yet when nominated as minister to one of the great powers he claimed to be from Virginia because he had his residence just across the Potomac; and I could name a good many other instances of this kind.

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not intend to say that any Senator here would be actuated by any motive of that kind. I do not believe they would. The question has been stated here about these little petty appointments and the scramble for office, &c. I cannot believe that any Senator on this floor would be actuated for one moment by such a motive; but it is like the upsetting of Tony Weller's stage—it is a "very strange coincidence." You remember he undertook to convey a party of gentlemen to the polls and it so happened he upset the stage in the exact spot where he upset it a year before under similar circumstances, and in each case the gentlemen upset were of opposite politics to Tony and by reason of the mishap were unable to get to the polls. That was a strange coincidence, and so is this; but I do not mean to say that any such unworthy motives as some persons might assume have anything to do with the views of the gentlemen who have spoken against this proposition.

I only want to say in conclusion, as was said before, that the amendment is simply to apply the provision of existing law, which is now applicable to the Treasury Department, and which was put upon an appropriation bill just like this, to all the other Executive Departments of the Government. So far as the criticism made by the Senator from Maine, in relation to Cabinet appointments, is concerned, everybody knows that that has no bearing upon this case. This simply applies to the appointees in these Departments, not the heads of Departments. I ask to have the list from which I read incorporated in my remarks.

The list referred to is as follows:

A table showing the number of persons engaged as officers, clerks, and employés in each Department at Washington, together with the number each State and Territory would be entitled to upon the basis of a division according to representation and the number actually employed from each State and Territory.

States and Territories.	Treasury. (3,200.)		Post-Office. (365.)		Interior. (1,200.)		War. (1,000.)		State. (455.)		Navy. (150.)		Printing. (1,550.)		R. R. po. cl. and mess. (2,100.)
	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.
Alabama	88	21	10	3	32	9	26	1	12	.....	4	.....	40	.....	56	.....
Arkansas	44	8	6	3	16	3	13	1	6	1	2	.....	20	.....	28	.....
California	44	12	5	4	16	8	13	2	6	12	2	.....	20	.....	28	.....
Connecticut	44	47	5	13	16	21	13	11	6	6	2	3	20	.....	28	.....
Delaware	11	14	1	2	4	4	3	4	2	2	.....	.....	5	.....	7	.....
Florida	22	4	2	3	8	.....	7	.....	3	.....	1	.....	10	.....	14	.....
Georgia	99	8	11	8	36	3	30	.....	14	4	5	.....	45	.....	63	.....
Illinois	209	80	24	6	76	46	58	9	29	19	10	2	95	.....	133	.....
Indiana	143	58	27	9	52	26	50	6	20	7	7	.....	65	.....	91	.....
Iowa	99	34	11	5	36	32	30	11	14	10	5	.....	45	.....	63	.....
Kansas	33	16	4	8	12	13	10	6	5	2	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Kentucky	110	33	13	2	40	4	34	4	15	4	5	1	50	.....	70	.....
Louisiana	66	15	8	4	24	7	20	3	9	3	3	.....	30	.....	42	.....
Maine	55	87	6	8	20	24	17	8	8	.....	3	4	25	.....	35	.....
Maryland	66	114	8	34	24	48	20	51	9	4	3	3	30	.....	42	.....
Massachusetts	121	126	14	16	44	20	37	40	17	16	6	1	55	.....	77	.....
Michigan	99	14	11	10	36	31	30	11	14	10	5	2	45	.....	63	.....
Minnesota	33	22	4	3	12	26	10	3	5	4	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Mississippi	66	19	8	2	24	11	20	1	9	2	3	.....	30	.....	42	.....
Missouri	143	26	27	3	52	12	50	10	20	6	7	.....	65	.....	91	.....
Nebraska	11	5	1	3	4	12	3	1	2	2	.....	.....	5	.....	7	.....
Nevada	11	3	1	.....	4	3	3	.....	2	1	.....	.....	5	.....	7	.....
New Hampshire	33	67	4	4	12	20	10	10	5	4	2	2	15	.....	21	.....
New Jersey	77	47	9	10	28	14	23	16	11	9	4	3	35	.....	49	.....
New York	363	300	44	30	132	126	110	145	50	45	17	5	165	.....	231	.....

A table showing the number of persons engaged as officers, clerks, and employés in each Department at Washington, &c.—Continued.

States and Territories.	Treasury. (3,300.)		Post-Office. (365.)		Interior. (1,200.)		War. (1,000.)		State. (455.)		Navy. (150.)		Printing. (1,550.)		R. R. po. el. and mess. (2,100.)
	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.	Entitled.	Employed.
North Carolina	88	18	10	3	32	6	26	.....	13	5	4	.....	40	.....	56	.....
Ohio	239	140	28	15	80	107	67	34	30	17	10	1	100	.....	140	.....
Oregon	11	4	1	2	4	4	3	1	2	1	.....	.....	5	.....	7	.....
Pennsylvania	297	269	34	27	108	78	90	90	41	24	14	13	135	.....	189	.....
Rhode Island	22	9	2	.....	8	5	7	5	3	6	1	1	10	.....	14	.....
South Carolina	55	20	6	5	20	6	17	3	8	3	3	.....	27	.....	35	.....
Tennessee	110	18	13	7	40	14	34	1	15	3	5	2	50	.....	70	.....
Texas	66	8	8	1	24	2	20	2	9	3	3	.....	30	.....	42	.....
Vermont	33	49	4	8	12	20	10	9	5	5	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Virginia	99	90	11	21	36	61	39	21	14	8	10	3	45	.....	63	.....
West Virginia	33	27	4	8	12	10	3	4	5	3	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Wisconsin	64	42	.....	7	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	9	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Arizona	11	.....	4	.....	12	.....	3	.....	5	.....	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Colorado	11	.....	4	.....	12	1	3	.....	5	1	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Dakota	11	.....	4	.....	12	1	3	.....	5	.....	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Idaho	11	.....	4	.....	12	.....	3	.....	5	.....	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Utah	11	.....	4	.....	12	.....	3	.....	5	.....	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Washington	11	.....	4	.....	12	2	3	1	5	.....	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
Wyoming	11	.....	4	.....	12	.....	3	.....	5	1	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
New Mexico	11	.....	4	.....	12	2	3	.....	5	1	2	.....	15	.....	21	.....
District of Columbia	11	604	4	82	12	295	13	256	5	59	2	45	15	.....	21	.....

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he does not know that now frequently appointees are accredited to certain States that they never have been in, and whether, if this amendment should prevail, it would in practice amount to anything? Are there not in all the Departments now persons accredited to different States who, perhaps, were never in the States to which they are accredited? They come and apply for certain appointments, and they get the influence of a Senator or member from a different State than their own, and they go in as appointees from that particular State. I know that I had occasion at one time to look over the appointments from the State of Delaware in the Treasury Department, I think there were only some six in the Department whom I could find credited to my State, and there were but one or two of them that I had ever heard of as being Delawareans; but there were some persons who had applied to some former Representative of the State and he had given them a letter of recommendation, and in some way they had assumed to be citizens of the State, and were appointed as such, whereas perhaps more than one-half of them never were in the State. So I apprehend it is in regard to many of the States.

If, therefore, the Senator's amendment should prevail, which seems to be fair on its face, it would amount to nothing practically, because if I had any influence with the Departments (which perhaps very fortunately I have not) and were to see proper to recommend some person from Texas, he would be accredited to the State of Delaware, if the recommendation availed. It would amount therefore practically to nothing so far as the citizens in the respective States are concerned; and all legislation of this character, which amounts to nothing practical, we had better let alone. That is my opinion. I shall therefore vote against the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to say one word. I believe I have two minutes left on my old amendment, which is enough.

Mr. President, these appointments, it appears to me, are appointments which belong, so far as you can apply that word to any such thing, to the people of the United States; that State lines have nothing at all to do with them except as a matter of convenience in the distribution of offices, because they should be distributed all over the Union; all the people should have an equal chance. But when you are going to employ a body of persons to do something that requires special information and skill or some sort of education, then I think if a particular section of the country, be it North or South, East or West, happens to possess a larger proportion of citizens who are capable of filling that class of officers than another portion of the country does, that portion of the country naturally and justly ought to have a larger proportion of the people who are appointed. If, for instance, in the State of Illinois the proportion of people who cannot read and write is less than 5 per cent.; and if in the State of Arkansas the proportion of people who cannot read and write is above 30 per cent., then, I submit, without regard to State lines—I only speak of States as merely indicating sections of country; the country as to Departments is common to everybody; there are not any State lines—if it happens that in that particular geographical part of the country that is called the State of Arkansas there are five times as many people in proportion to the population who are entirely incapable of filling such offices, then I submit that the proportions ought to go according to capability in the whole nation. It would be unjust to pick out the 600,000 people there are in Arkansas when only a proportion of 60 per cent. of them are even capable of reading and writing, and to exclude the 500,000 people in the State of Minnesota, or wherever it may be, where 95 per cent. of them are capable; or, to put it in another way, where 95 per cent. of the people who would apply are capable of performing the duty, and only 30 or 40 per cent. in another section of the country are capable of doing it. The rule must be universal. The principle of my friend's proposition, therefore, is wrong by making it geographical. If you could find that in the Departments a head of Department was preferring one section of country to another because it was a section, then he ought to be dealt with undoubtedly; but to undertake to put him in a box which is measured by geography, when you look at the condition of our people as it unfortunately happens to be, it appears to me is doing wrong.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, we have heard for a long time many comments upon that which has become almost an axiom of politics, that, "to the victors belong the spoils;" but this looks very much as if it was proposed that the Senate should divide the spoils with mathematical precision. The population of the different sections of the country is to be recognized as the mode by which appointments are to be distributed. Now, sir, the theory of our Revised Statutes seems to be that the efficiency of the service is to be promoted by securing the best persons wherever they can be found, and I think that that theory carried out in practice will best subserve the public interest.

This thing of introducing the rule of three into the distribution of office is almost as bad as the principle of "addition, division, and silence." It is far better that the President should have the power that he now has under the Revised Statutes, without being trammeled by any other provision of law, to make such regulations as he may deem fit for the purpose of winnowing, if you please, the Departments of the Government of the bummers, as I heard a Senator call some persons who are presumed to be in office—I hope there are none in reality in any of the Departments—but for the purpose of ridding them of the drones and lazy persons who may have crept in through the influence of politicians, not of course of Senators or Representatives, but outside politicians. They should be cleared out, and a rule established which will work well for all parties in the country, that only the competent, the efficient, and the worthy may get places in the different branches of the civil service, giving preference, as we have voted and indicated to-day by our action, to those who have lost their health in the service of the country.

I trust that this proposition of the Senator from Arkansas will not prevail for the reason which I have stated, and for the additional reason that we ought not to ingraft upon an appropriation bill legislation of this character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHYTE, (when his name was called.) I should like to vote on this question, but I am under the impression that I have paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN,] and therefore I prefer not to vote, though I should vote "nay" if he were present, and he, I am sure, would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM. I should like to vote on this amendment, but I am paired on the bill generally with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.] I would vote "yea" if at liberty to do so.

Mr. WINDOM. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on all political questions; but not regarding this as one I vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 22, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Caperton, Clayton, Cockrell, Dorsey, Ferry, Gordon, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Mitchell, Paddock, Robertson, Stevenson, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Booth, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Johnston, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Windom, and Withers—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, and Whyte—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAYTON. I believe this vote disposes of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont also. Both fall together. I now offer the following to come in at the end of the third section of the bill:

Provided, That, in making any reduction of force in any of the Executive Departments, the head of such Department shall retain those persons who may be qualified who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors.

I desire to state that this amendment is recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs. It speaks for itself, and I shall make no further remarks on the subject. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 43, nay 0: as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Stevenson, Whyte, Windom, Withers, and Wright—43.

NAY—0.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and West—30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 7, after the word "Representatives," in line 159, at the end of the appropriations for the Capitol police, I move to insert:

Provided, That so much of the joint resolution approved July 15, 1870, as authorizes the employment of an additional police force is hereby repealed, to take effect from and after the 30th day of June next.

I ought to state what the effect of that is. It is an amendment which does not increase but decreases expenditure. By a statute of 1870 three temporary policemen were authorized to be employed during certain improvements in the Botanic Garden. There is no longer any use for them, but still they have continued to be appropriated for. This reduces the appropriation by so much.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On the same page, line 140, I move to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "thirteen," and in the same line strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-eight;" so as to read:

For fuel and oil, * * *; for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $13,000; in all, $28,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 13, line 308, I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "eighteen;" so as to read:

For miscellaneous items $18,000.

This is among the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 16 at the bottom of the page, line 388, I move to strike out "heating, and ventilating and repairs;" so as to read:

Provided, That the Architect of the Capitol shall have the care and superintendence of the Capitol, including lighting, &c.

And then on page 17, line 391, after the word "the," strike out "officer" and insert "Commissioner;" so as to read "Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That clause has already been amended so as to read:

And provided further, That all the duties relative to the Capitol building heretofore performed by other officers shall hereafter be performed by the architect of the Capitol, &c.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The object is further to amend that, so as to confine the duties devolved on the architect to those which were formerly devolved on the Commissioner of Public Buildings. It is thought by certain Senators that the language here includes too much; that is, it includes heating and ventilating and repairs, whereas the chief duty should be the general supervision of the Capitol, including lighting.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I propose an amendment. On page 25, line 591, I move to strike out the word "two" where it occurs the second time in the line and insert "three;" and I ought perhaps to say, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that I do not make the motion from the committee, though I believe with their consent. I gave notice of it. I am prepared to state the reasons why I make it, if that is desired.

The object is to give an additional clerk of class four to the Commissioner of Customs; and I make this motion on the authority of a letter received from him and a statement made by him, to the effect that an examination recently made, at the instance of the Senate under a resolution passed by this body, discloses the fact that there is a large amount of uncollected balances which have run through thirty or forty years, from which he thinks a large saving could be made if he had the additional force necessary to look up the matter and prepare it. There are some three or four million dollars of balances, I think, uncollected that have run through a great many years; but he has no clerk whom he can spare from the current duties for this work. Believing that it is in the line of economy, and that much more money can be saved than the cost of this clerkship, I move the amendment at his instance. I think it ought to be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I desire to offer an amendment on page 4, after the word "each" and before the word "three," in line 82, to insert:

To pay William H. St. John, in charge of Senate store-room and document-wagon, $1,200.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there any recommendation for that?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I will say that the Committee on Appropriations have no objection to it. It will be observed by all Senators that this is one of the most useful and hard-working men in the employ of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the amendment come from the Committee on Contingent Expenses?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. By an arrangement made in committee for an adjustment in regard to this labor, which has heretofore been provided for in gross, it is in this bill provided for in detail. It is said by the Committee on Contingent Expenses who have examined the question that we have cut them a little short in the number of laborers necessary. This amendment is occasioned by that action.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. In line 82, I move to strike out "three" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Eight skilled laborers.

Mr. EATON and others. What is the object of that?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. This amendment increases the number of skilled laborers from three to eight. These skilled laborers, as the Sergeant-at-Arms informed the committee, have quite important duties to perform. They frequently are employed as messengers. Eight is much less than the number now employed in that capacity. It makes the difference between $2 and $2.75 per day in their pay. He finds it impossible to get the proper kind of persons for that service at $2 a day. This amendment increases the number of skilled laborers by five; and in an amendment which I am about to offer we shall decrease the number of unskilled laborers by five.

Mr. EATON. That was the question I was about to ask in regard to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does it increase the number of employés?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. No; it increases by five the number of the skilled laborers, and I am about to offer an amendment to decrease the number of unskilled laborers by five.

Mr. MERRIMON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. What is the difference in cost? Does it increase the cost?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. It provides for five more skilled laborers and gives them seventy-five cents a day more than they would get under the provisions of the bill as it stands.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me ask the Senator what the skilled laborers get now?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Two dollars and seventy-five cents a day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Are there eight employed?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. A great many more than eight. The amendment I propose is a reduction of the present force.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it is rather an inconsiderable matter anyway. It is rather a regulation of the force than any material increase of the expenditure. As I have already said, by an adjustment in this bill of the labor about the Senate, the Committee on Appropriations intended to provide for the labor specifically; to appropriate for so many laborers, and no more. Now the Committee on Contingent Expenses think that we have not been exactly discreet in the adjustment of the labor into classes, and this is simply to distribute the labor from one class of what is called skilled labor that does a certain sort of work about the building to another class of common labor. I understand that to be the upshot of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. In lines 87 and 88 I move to strike out "seventeen" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

And twelve laborers at the rate of $720 per annum, during the session of the Senate.

This makes the reduction which I have just alluded to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. In line 104 I move to strike out "two" and insert "three." This is to keep the number of riding pages in the employ of the Senate what it is to-day; and they are said to be the hardest worked employés in the service of the Senate. Certainly it would seem almost an impossibility to get along with two; at least so think the Committee on Contingent Expenses. It is to keep the number of riding pages the same as now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. In line 137 I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten." This increases from five to ten thousand dollars the appropriation for renovating, refurnishing, and taking care of in the way of renovating the rooms in the wing of the Capitol including this Chamber. Last year the appropriation was $9,000, and there was a deficiency of $6,000. We think the cost will probably be from eight to ten thousand dollars this year of refurnishing, refitting, and taking care of the property of the Government in the committee-rooms, &c., in any event. The appropriation last year, as I have just stated, was $9,000, and there was a deficiency of $6,000. It is supposed that $10,000 will cover the necessities of the ensuing year. Whatever is not used of course will be covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. HAMILTON. If they expended $6,000 more than was estimated last year, it would seem that that ought to do for another year. We cannot put in new furniture and new carpets every year. Ten thousand dollars for this purpose seems to me to be an enormous sum.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. This will be no more than the average of years, rather less than the average expenditure from year to year in this department.

Mr. EATON. Will the Senator from Nevada tell me where the amendment comes in? I did not hear.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. In line 137.

Mr. EATON. What is it to strike out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To strike out "five" and insert "ten" before "thousand."

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. It is for furniture and repairs of furniture.

Mr. EATON. Will the Senator from Nevada inform us what there is to be done there that it makes it necessary to raise this appropriation from $5,000 to $10,000?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I take for the average of years the sum that has been spent for this particular purpose; and I think it preferable to appropriate a sufficient sum to cover the expenses than to have a deficiency bill presented here, as we had this year for $6,000, $9,000 having been appropriated for this purpose last year.

Mr. EATON. That does not make it certain that it requires $9,000 more now.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I cannot estimate how much furniture will be needed or how much repairs. I have not examined the various committee-rooms, nor got estimates from furniture-dealers to find out how much it will take to keep them in order. I simply take the statement of the Sergeant-at-Arms and of those who are supposed to know something about it, who tell me that this will be about the amount necessary to keep the rooms in proper condition. You have to put in a good many rooms new carpets, new furniture, and all the desks here have to be revarnished. I am sure I cannot tell the Senator exactly what is done with this money; but I presume that it is honestly applied for the purposes mentioned in the item.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think this is a small matter at any rate; but we ought not to adopt an amendment unless we know the necessity for it. The committee who have had this matter under consideration deemed $5,000 a proper appropriation. The Senator from Nevada now proposes to raise it to $10,000 without being able to state to us the absolute necessity for it. He claims that in fact in the previous years a greater amount than that appropriated by the committee has been required. It may be that the Sergeant-at-Arms, or whoever has control of the expenditure of this money, may find that $5,000 is not enough; but it has been customary to allow a proper deficiency in his expenses, and we had better adhere to the sum fixed by the Committee on Appropriations. We all know that as a general rule men everywhere live up to their income; and I apprehend that if the Sergeant-at-Arms or any other officer of the Senate had all the money voted to him that he asked for he would live up to it. I do not say that the Sergeant-at-Arms or anybody else would spend money unnecessarily; but men are apt to spend less if the appropriation is not large. If, however, $5,000 is not sufficient, the Sergeant-at-Arms heretofore has been allowed the necessary expenditures of his office. Let us follow that course in the future. I think we can afford to trust the Sergeant-at-Arms to make a proper expenditure of this money, and then he may come before the Senate and ask that the deficiency be supplied. I think we had better adhere to this rule, although it is a small matter.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 10.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senator from Nevada to withdraw this amendment for the time. He can renew it again, if he desires, in the Senate. The Senate is rather thin to divide at this time.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. If the amendment can be reserved, I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be offered again in the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HOWE. On page 15, in line 357, I move to strike out "three" and insert "five" before "thousand," raising the appropriation to $5,000; so as to read:

For Botanic Garden, for improving the garden, procuring manure, tools, fuel, and repairs, and purchasing trees and shrubs, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $5,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin why a drive is not made through the Botanic Garden to the Mall?

Mr. HOWE. That is a matter over which the Library Committee has no jurisdiction.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has not the Library Committee jurisdiction over the Botanic Garden? I merely asked the question because this is an appropriation for the Botanic Garden, and it seems to me there ought to be an appropriation in some way to extend the road or drive through the Botanic Garden.

Mr. HOWE. I hope there will be a very good reason why that shall not be done in a short time, if there is not a good reason now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If I may be allowed, the jurisdiction of the Library Committee is confined to vegetables, and that of the committee of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the public grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question upon the amendment, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. HOWE. I call for a division. I do not think there is any intention to vote the amendment down. It costs $2,000 a year now to warm and heat those buildings. That would leave but $1,000 of the present appropriation for tools, manure for trees, boxes, and all other necessary expenses.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is expended under the direction of Mr. Smith, a very careful man.

Mr. INGALLS. What was the appropriation last year?

Mr. HOWE. The same—$5,000. Mr. Smith, I believe, has the reputation of being one of the most economical men we have in the service of the Government. I am told he gets more work out of the money he spends than any man we have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. On the same page, in line 343, I move to strike out "five" and insert "nine" before "thousand," raising the appropriation for the purchase of books for the Library from $5,000 to $9,000, which has been the usual appropriation.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I ask the chairman whether the present library is not now insufficient to contain the books?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir, it is.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to know if any step is going to be taken toward a new library. Does the committee propose any such thing? My vote will be somewhat regulated by that, as it is of no use to buy books if we have no place to put them. I would ask the chairman if there is any prospect of a report recommending other accommodations for the Library?

Mr. HOWE. There will be a report and a bill laid before the Senate within a day or two having that object in view. The Librarian thinks it very inexpedient to be left without a small sum which would be available at the sales of books which sometimes take place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And especially sales of rare books.

Mr. HOWE. The opportunities are not very frequent, and the Librarian wants to have some provision made to take advantage of such as occur.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senate will agree to this amendment without any objection. Of course we all understand as to the purchase of the ordinary run of books, that they can be bought at any time; but the books in respect of which the Library is lacking are rare books, editions long out of print, that only come into the market now and then; so that it is essential, to make this Library perfect, as it ought to be, that there should be a fund at command, to be available at any moment when these rare and infrequent opportunities occur, of making up the perfectness of the Library by getting books that only very rarely come into the market.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. In line 346, I move to strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to raise the appropriation for the purchase of newspapers and periodicals for the Library from $1,500 to $2,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the amendment, and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. EATON. I ask for a division.

Mr. HOWE. I did not see which Senator it was that called for a division.

Mr. EATON, (rising.) You can see. I called for a division.

Mr. HOWE. I am very glad to see that it comes from a responsible source. I did not doubt that. I want to say to the Senator who did call for it that the Librarian, and I believe the Committee on the Library, think this one of the most necessary expenditures which are made for that department of the service. The Librarian some years ago, under the direction of the joint committee, undertook to make a collection of newspapers by subscribing for two of the leading newspapers in each State and Territory of the Union, so that in the Library you can at any time find intelligence, authenticated intelligence, of current events in any and every quarter of the Union. That calls for a large part of this appropriation. The Librarian says that to keep up his magazines and to keep up these files of newspapers takes the whole of $2,500 and leaves him but very little margin. He wants a little margin, because occasionally he has an opportunity to buy back files of leading newspapers in different parts of the country, which, when an opportunity of that kind occurs, he is very glad to avail himself of. I regard it myself as a very important part of the Library. If Senators think the United States cannot afford it, I shall submit to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. EATON. The United States can afford a great many things. There is no doubt about that. The only question to be considered is whether this amendment is necessary? As it was at first presented, there was no seeming necessity for it; not one word was said; but the honorable Senator simply moved to amend by throwing in another thousand dollars. He has now given a reason for the amendment. Before that there was none. I did not think it was necessary that there should be an additional $4,000 for books for the Library when that amendment was proposed; but the eloquence of the honorable Senator from Vermont convinced even me that possibly something might come along here in the shape of a rarity that we should want to buy, and that, therefore, we had better have a little money on hand to do it with. My friend from Wisconsin now says that we want two newspapers from each State in the Union. We ought to have a great many more than two for $1,500 a year, and take all the leading periodicals that are printed in the United States also. I know what I am talking about. I say more than two of the leading newspapers, three or four from each State in the Union and all the leading periodicals may be bought for less than $1,500. Really, if it be necessary that there should be another thousand dollars held in the pocket of this gentleman to buy some rare old periodicals I shall withdraw any objection. If we did divide, I certainly should be compelled to vote against the amendment; for I do not think there is any urgent necessity for it; but I withdraw the call for a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know my friend from Connecticut withdraws his objection, for he is a sensible man, and when information is given to him he appreciates it; but the Senator will observe that this is for the purchase of newspapers. Anybody who understands the Library will know that in respect of the history of this country and of others, particularly of this country, as found in the daily newspapers of the day, which are its current history, the great lack is in the old files before this system that the Library Committee inaugurated two or three years ago of taking two from each State of opposite politics so as to get really a picture of affairs. Before that time we have to make up in order to make the list as perfect as possible, by finding old files as they come in from place to place; and the object of this appropriation is not merely to provide current newspapers but to make up the past history.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. After line 351 I move to insert:

For postage on copyright business, $700.

The Librarian asked for an appropriation of $2,000 for contingent expenses, and the House voted an appropriation of $1,000. The Librarian will content himself with that if he can have a separate appropriation of $700 for postage on the copyright business, and he says that postage amounts to the full sum specified in my amendment.

Mr. EATON. May I ask my honorable friend a question? Is this the last thing that the Librarian wants?

Mr. HOWE. It is the last thing that the Librarian wants this year. I trust there will be something next year.

Mr. EATON. I meant this year; and I thought if it was the last thing he wanted we had better give it to him.

Mr. HOWE. Let me add what my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has suggested, that in every application for a copyright there is a dollar transmitted to the Librarian, so that it is a profitable correspondence on the whole. I think we can afford to pay our postage.

Mr. SARGENT. The money goes into the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And therefore he cannot pay the postage out of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin what is the significance of the following line:

For expenses of the copyright business, $500.

Mr. HOWE. That is an appropriation made for clerical assistance perhaps. It does not cover the postage, at all events.

Mr. SHERMAN. How is it paid?

Mr. HOWE. It is paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that is so much reduced that we want a special provision for the postage on the copyright business where we get a dollar every time we write a letter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My inquiry is as to what is the meaning of the next line providing for expenses of the copyright business.

Mr. HOWE. I know it does not cover the postage; and that is all the information I can give the Senator on that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I have one more amendment to present, but it is not for the Library. In line 362 I move to strike out "in all seven" and insert "eight;" so that it will make the appropriation for assistant gardeners and laborers in the garden $8,440.

Mr. EATON. If this is necessary I am perfectly willing to vote for it. I am disposed to do everything that my friend desires; but it does not read very well.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator does not understand that if my amendment is agreed to then the Committee on Appropriations will not insist upon their amendment. Mine is in lieu of that.

Mr. EATON. It is only $1,000 more.

Mr. HOWE. It is $2,000 more than the committee's amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. It seems to me the Senator from Wisconsin does not mean what he says when he says $2,000 more. What he means is to add $1,000 to the $6,000, in line 361. Then the aggregate would be $8,440. If you add $1,000 to the $6,000 you will have $1,440 for salary of superintendent and $7,000 for assistants and what follows. That I understand to be what the Senator wants.

Mr. HOWE. I want an appropriation of $8,000 for the assistants and laborers.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then you want to add $2,000 to the $6,000 in line 361.

Mr. HOWE. The amendment as I move it will be more easily incorporated. I want it to stand $8,440. If the Senate will agree to the amendment that I have moved, it will be precisely what the gardener wants. Then $1,600 for pay of superintendent will have to be added to the $8,440 to make the sum total. The only difficulty I have in explaining it is that I do not understand exactly how the bill stands.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will tell the Senator what my understanding is. As it now stands it reads:

For pay of superintendent, $1,600——

Mr. HOWE. That is right.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. For all the others below that it is $6,000, and the Senator wants to increase the amount $1,000, as I understand. If you strike out "six" and insert "seven," and then strike out "seven" and insert "eight" in the next line, which is the total, the Senator has exactly what he wants.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator misunderstands what I want. Instead of wanting $7,000 for assistants I want $8,440.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. For assistants alone?

Mr. HOWE. For assistants and laborers.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. You do not want to increase the number?

Mr. HOWE. I do not want to increase the number, and my amendment does not increase the number.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But you increase the pay over last year.

Mr. HOWE. I do not understand it so. I am informed that that is precisely the pay of last year. I do not propose to increase it at all.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to putting it in that way.

Mr. HOWE. Let it be put in that way, and, if I am mistaken about it or misinformed about it, it can be corrected in the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The clause as proposed to be amended will read:

For pay of superintendent, $1,600; for assistants in Botanic Garden and greenhouses and two additional laborers, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $8,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. The Senate will now non-concur in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to insert $6,000 in lines 361 and 362, in order to make it correspond with the vote just taken.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read an additional amendment reported to the clause which is now to be acted upon, having been heretofore reserved.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 363 the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment to strike out the following words:

And said superintendent shall have charge of all the public gardens in the District of Columbia that are supported by specific appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. I propose an amendment to the bill. I desire on page 8 to insert at the beginning of line 186:

For distributing clerk, $1,800.

That was an omission in the House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator is so advised about that, I suppose?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir; I have a letter from a prominent member of the House suggesting the amendment I propose as eminently proper.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call the attention of the Senator to a preceding line, line 182, where the words "distributing clerk" occur.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall move to strike out those words in line 182, as soon as I have perfected the text of my proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment on page 8, at the commencement of line 186, before the word "for," to insert:

For distributing clerk, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. In order to correct the previous provision of the bill, so as to make it correspond with the amendment just adopted, in line 182, before the word "petition," I now move to insert the word "and;" and after the word "petition" to strike out "and distributing;" so as to read:

Resolution and petition clerk.

This perfects the text and harmonizes it with the amendment restoring the distribution clerk.

Mr. ALLISON. What about the newspaper clerk in the same line?

Mr. STEVENSON. That stands. I do not propose to disturb it. It has nothing to do with the amendment I propose. The House evidently intended to amalgamate two offices but the amendment included three. Hence the necessity of the amendment proposed, restoring the distribution clerkship, which, as I am informed, has existed for twenty years and should be retained.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection after the statement of my friend from Kentucky. He will notice that on the House side, as well as on the Senate, there are very considerable reductions. The committee of course did not wish to interfere with their matters more than we could possibly help, but at their request in some cases we have made changes. This seems to be one of that character.

Mr. STEVENSON. This amendment is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 30, line 732, the bill reads:

From and after the 30th day of June next.

That would indicate 1877, or a time after the present month of June. Therefore I move to strike out the word "next" and insert "1876."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think there is a similar mistake in the amendment in regard to the Capitol police on page 7, adopted to-day. I will ask the Clerk to turn to it and read the amendment which comes in after the word "Representatives" in line 159.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That so much of the joint resolution approved July 15, 1870, as authorizes the employment of an additional police force is hereby repealed, to take effect from and after the 30th of June next.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to strike out "next" and insert "1876."

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the chairman of the committee to state the effect of the amendment which has just been read by the Clerk?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I explained it when it was adopted. It repeals a joint resolution adopted in 1870, which provided for three policemen in the Botanic Garden during the repairs that were then taking place. It has remained in force ever since. There is no occasion for three policemen there now, or any number of policemen at all, and they have, I suppose, been acting in some other capacity. The amendment simply repeals the joint resolution and reduces the appropriation by so much. I now simply move to change "June 30 next" to "June 30, 1876."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 6, lines 127 and 128, I move to strike out the words "under the direction of the superintendent of the folding-room;" so as to make the clause read:

For four folders, at not exceeding $3 per day, $3,000 when actually employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The proviso to this clause now reads:

Provided, however, That any portion of said sum may be used, at the discretion of said superintendent, for piece-work.

I move to strike out the word "said" before "superintendent" and insert the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope, by general consent, the Secretary will be authorized to make the sums total correspond to the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be done by the Secretary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move to add at the end of the bill the following:

That the appointments in all the Executive Departments of the Government shall be so arranged as to be equally distributed between the several States of the United States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, according to population; and the principle of equal distribution of appointments as above provided for shall apply in making reductions of force in said Departments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by adding the proviso that I moved to it when it was offered in committee.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is covered by an amendment which has been adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not by any means. That only respects reductions. It does not come within a thousand miles of covering it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the foregoing provision shall be subject to the provisions of section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, let the amendment that I moved in Committee of the Whole be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in making any reduction of force in any of the Executive Departments the head of such Department shall retain those persons, who may be qualified, who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service or the United States and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors.

Mr. CLAYTON. This amendment is now upon the bill, as I understand it, having been put there in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate with the other amendments. It provides that, in making reductions called for by the bill, everything else being equal, persons who have served in the Army shall have the preference in being retained. I submit that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont is altogether unnecessary, because it is now the law. It is the law upon the statute-book to-day, and it is simply re-enacting a law that is already upon the statute-book.

Mr. DORSEY. Then accept it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would accept it but that I see no necessity for it. I cannot see any necessity for re-enacting a law now on the statute-book. I think this amendment now upon the bill adopted in Committee of the Whole fully covers the case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This subject has been discussed in Committee of the Whole. Therefore I think no further discussion is necessary. The sense of the Senate in Committee of the Whole was against the measure; and, to bring the matter to a close and to test the sense of the Senate further on the subject, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the amendment on the table.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Booth, Christiancy, Cragin, Eaton, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stevenson, Whyte, Windom, and Withers—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Cockrell, Cooper, Dorsey, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Paddock, West, and Wright—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, and Wallace—34.

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. EATON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is hardly worth while.

Mr. COCKRELL. We ought to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. There are a great many amendments to the bill that I should like to vote against, taking them as a whole; but I do not want to be placed in the position of voting against one of the regular appropriation bills necessary for the support of the Government. I shall therefore vote in the affirmative.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) On this bill I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Cockrell, Eaton, McCreery, Maxey, Stevenson, and Whyte—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, and Wallace—33.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont will give way to me for a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot give way, but I will hear my friend.

RECOGNITION OF GOD.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I have got before me a large mass of papers which I want to put in a safe place. They are petitions for the acknowledgment of God and Christianity in the Constitution of the United States. They are signed by 2,964 persons from New York, 9,703 from Pennsylvania, 1,668 from Vermont, and 106 from Massachusetts. I ask permission at this time to present all these petitions, and I do not know to what committee to refer them, but it ought to be the best committee in the House. I will move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to antagonize anything, but the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] conforming the legislation of Congress to the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in respect of the protection of the citizens of the United States in their civil and political rights, which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, is of great importance; and—and I am not debating the merits of the bill, but only describing it so that the Senate can see what it is—as it is in perfect harmony with that decision, I cannot but suppose it will receive the general, if not the unanimous, concurrence of this body, being for a great constitutional object. Therefore I wish to get it up so that we may all have an opportunity to vote upon it and pass it if possible.

But my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] as I understand from him in private conversation, wishes to proceed with the consideration of what is called the silver bill, which I believe has been up already. If the Senate is willing to take notice, so far as I may properly ask it to do so, that I will move to take up this bill, to which I have referred, immediately upon the disposition of the so-called silver bill, inasmuch as I believe business is best subserved by disposing of one subject that is begun before you take up another, I shall yield to my friend from Ohio to make the motion that he desires to make; and giving this notice, as I hear no objection to it, I do yield.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to be bound by such an indefinite statement. The Senator is very well aware, as is the Senate generally, that I have been trying for some time to get before the Senate a matter of very great importance to my coast on which I spoke at length some days ago. I refer to the matter of Chinese immigration. At the time this effort was made on my part there was before the Senate the bill with reference to the Japanese indemnity fund. At that time the Senator from Ohio desired to bring up the silver bill and I gave way I must confess with some reluctance, but still gave way with a kind of understanding on the part of the Senate, at any rate with notice on my part that after those bills were disposed of in their order I would ask that this momentous subject might be considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has that been reported from any committee yet?

Mr. SARGENT. The resolution asking the action of the executive department upon the treaty relations with China lies on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has not been referred to a committee or reported?

Mr. SARGENT. That resolution has not been referred to a committee. A bill relating to the same subject is now before the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I trust will be reported favorably.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit to my friend from California that it would be hardly fair to exclude an important bill reported from a committee, while the subject to which he refers is still under consideration by another committee, in order to take it up in another form.

Mr. SARGENT. The subject has two aspects. The matter of the resolution is one which, I think, the Senate can pass upon without the necessity of reference to a committee, and in that aspect of the matter I desire to press it on the attention of the Senate. The other being a matter more of detail requires the consideration of a committee. One depends on a general principle easily understood, and does not require the report of a committee. The bill, however, may require attention in its details, and therefore the suggestion which the Senator himself made that it should go to a committee I cheerfully assented to.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

Mr. SHERMAN. By the kind indulgence of my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] I move now to take up Senate bill No. 263. I do not want to antagonize it to any bill proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] or to the proposition of the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT;] but we must not waste much time now on the order of business. This bill has been twice under consideration, and I hope to close it. I shall get it out of the way as soon as I can. I move, therefore, that the Senate proceed to its consideration; and I will say now, beforehand, that I will give way to the Senator from Maine whenever he has an appropriation bill ready; but I hope we may take up this silver bill for consideration and stand by it and end it. I hope we shall end it now. We have no time for long speeches, but must act upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Feeling the force of what the Senator from Ohio has said in the fact that his bill, reported from a committee, has been twice under consideration, I yield; but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this important bill affecting human rights, to which I have referred, and bringing our legislation into direct harmony with the decision of the highest tribunal of the land, I shall move immediately upon the conclusion of the bill which he now proposes to take up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to take up the bill indicated by him.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know that I shall have any occasion to antagonize the Senator from Vermont; but I have a bill that I can proceed with. It is so small in its character that I do not care to antagonize it against anything; but I desire to put in a caveat against any interference whatever with the appropriation bills when they are ready. They will not be ready to-morrow; I can say that to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mean to stand in the way of the appropriation bills.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then I have nothing to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to take up Senate bill No. 263, and I give notice to Senators who desire to discuss the bill that I hope they will do it to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, obtained the floor.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now I understand the Senator from Ohio will yield to me to pass an appropriation bill which will not take fifteen minutes—the fortification bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I yield to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let this bill be laid aside informally for that purpose.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I now move to take up House bill No. 2134.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to lay aside the pending order informally and take up the fortification bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2134) making appropriations for fortifications and for other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not propose any amendments from the Committee on Appropriations; I am not authorized to offer any. It will be seen that the committee have recommended concurrence with the action of the House of Representatives; but it is due to the Senate that they should know something about the bill.

The estimates for this service, the exterior defenses and the repairs of fortifications and the armament of the same, were $3,294,000. The House of Representatives have appropriated $315,000, which is supposed to be enough simply to take care of the fortifications, without making any improvements whatever or making any provision of any considerable character for the armament. This is not a fixed definite service, and therefore the House of Representatives may, as of course the Senate may, exercise its discretion as to how much shall be appropriated for it. The usual appropriation for the last year or two has been from a million to a million and a half of dollars. Last year it was a little under a million, which did provide somewhat for the armament and somewhat for improvements. But considering the character of the times and considering the idea of the country and the fact also of the absolute necessity for rigid retrenchment, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have concluded to recommend concurrence in the action of the House in appropriating $315,000 as against $3,294,000 estimated for.

This is one of those branches of the public service where, as I have already said, a discretion may be exercised. It is not that inflexible service which fixes a salary and where the obligations of the law are imperative on us to provide for it; and wherever there has been anything of this character, the committee have endeavored to meet the House of Representatives in the exercise of a sound discretion exactly at the point where according to their information the necessities of the public service would permit; and so they recommend concurrence with the House in this bill which will leave no appropriations for improvements or for the armaments of the forts. That may be postponed. We are not in the presence of any imminent danger from abroad certainly, although undoubtedly this is a branch of the public service which ought not to be neglected, nor do I characterize or desire to characterize this as neglect. There is money enough, probably, simply to care for these exterior fortifications for another year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To preserve the status quo.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Precisely. The armament of these fortifications in the end will be a very large affair, and it will undoubtedly be the duty of the country from time to time to prepare it by annual appropriations. Not less than $75,000,000 is the estimate of the Department having this subject in charge for the armament simply of these forts. That will have at some time or other to be expended hereafter in armament; but of course that is very much in the future.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 7, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. T. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

JOANNA NAY PAGE.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a privileged motion. I find by the RECORD of this morning that yesterday leave was obtained for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers accompanying House bill No. 1723 for the relief of Joanna Nay Page. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote granting such leave, inasmuch as a report of the subcommittee has been made adverse to that claim.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

Mr. HURLBUT. I am directed by the Committee on Civil-Service Reform to report back certain testimony, and to move that it be ordered to be printed and recommitted.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

THOMAS D. WRIGHT.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3668) for the relief of Thomas D. Wright, of Carrollton, Kentucky, for the destruction of his property by the Federal troops in the year 1862; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EMIL HEINEMAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. DAVY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3669) for the relief of Emil Heineman, Francis Payson, and George H. Morgan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. COX. The Committee on Rules, who are authorized, I believe, to report at any time, have directed me to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution:

Resolved, That Rule 103 be so amended as to strike out the sixth clause, referring to the committee on public accounts and expenditures relating to public buildings, and insert at the end of said rule the following additional clause: "A committee on so much of the public accounts and expenditures as relates to the public buildings, to consist of seven members;" and this amendment shall continue in force only during the present session.

Mr. Speaker, the only amendment here proposed is to increase the number of members on this committee from five to seven, in consequence of the absence and sickness of some members.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. POPPLETON and Mr. BELL as the additional members upon the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

RAILROAD TRACKS IN SOUTH WASHINGTON.

Mr. HARRISON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a memorial of residents of Washington City for the removal of railroad tracks now used in the southern portion of the city of Washington, and also a brief on the right of Congress to repeal the privileges and franchises heretofore granted to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company and other railroad companies having grants to enter South Washington; and moved that the same be ordered to be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT NEBRASKA CITY.

Mr. CROUNSE. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce a short bill, which I desire to have put on its passage. I believe there will be no objection to it. The report of the committee is unanimous; and the measure has the approval of the War Department.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3670) reported as a substitute for House bill No. 175, authorizing the Nebraska City Bridge Company to construct a ponton-railway bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City, in Otoe County, Nebraska, was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the Nebraska City Bridge Company, a corporation having authority from the State of Nebraska and from the State of Iowa, its successors and assigns, to build, maintain, and operate a ponton-railway transit and wagon bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City, in the County of Otoe, and State of Nebraska; and said company, its successors or assigns, shall keep up and maintain a suitable ponton draw of not less than three hundred feet in length; and that said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats or rafts; but in no case shall unreasonable delay occur in the opening of said draw before or after the passage of trains; and the company, corporation, or individuals having the charge or control of said bridge shall, for the security of navigation, maintain, from sunset to sunrise, throughout the year, such lights on said bridge as may be required by the Light-House Board.

SEC. 2. That all railway companies desiring to use said ponton bridge shall have, and be entitled to, equal rights and privileges in the use of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal and telegraphic purposes across said bridge; and no greater charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction, or alleged obstruction, to the navigation of the said Missouri River, created by the construction of said bridge under this act, the cause or question arising may be tried before the district or circuit court of the United States of any State wherein the obstruction exists.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said Missouri River is hereby expressly reserved, without any liability to the Government for damages on account of the alteration or amendment of this act or on account of the prevention or requiring the removal of any such obstructions; and if any change be made in the plan of construction of said ponton bridge, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and any change in the construction or any alteration of said bridge that may be directed at any time by Congress or the Secretary of War shall be at the cost and expense of the owners thereof. Said bridge shall be constructed, as near as may be practicable, upon the line heretofore surveyed and established by the Nebraska City Bridge Company.

SEC. 4. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built.

Mr. CROUNSE. I repeat that this bill has the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Commerce, and also the approval of the engineer of the War Department. There can be no objection to it; and it is important that it should be passed promptly.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CROUNSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. PHELPS to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs occasioned by the resignation of Mr. BARNUM.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. THORNBURGH. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. WILLIS. I have the floor, and I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me to go on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.) Does the gentleman withdraw his demand for the regular order of business?

Mr. THORNBURGH. No, I insist on it.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ALABAMA, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour now begins at twelve o'clock and twenty-five minutes, and the regular order of business is the call of committees for reports of a public nature, the call resting with the Committee on Public Lands.

The pending business is the bill reported by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. Morey) from the Committee on Public Lands, the bill (S. No. 2) to repeal section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, making restrictions in the disposition of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, and for other purposes. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, confining the disposal of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida to the provisions of the homestead law, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the repeal of said section shall not have the effect to impair the right, complete or inchoate, of any homestead settler, and no land occupied by such settler at the time this act shall take effect shall be subject to entry, pre-emption, or sale: And provided, That the public lands affected by this act shall be offered at public sale, as soon as practicable, from time to time, and according to the provisions of existing law, and shall not be subject to private entry until they are so offered.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands were read, as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 11, after the word "act" and before the word "shall," the following: "which are unsuited for agricultural purposes." And at the end of the section add as follows: "and that all public lands in said States fitted for the purposes of agriculture shall be subject to disposal under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States, and not otherwise: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to affect the disposal of any mineral lands as now provided by law."

Mr. WALLING. Mr. Speaker, members will recollect that this bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands by the gentleman from Louisiana, (Mr. Morey;) that a lengthy discussion was had on its merits; that more than one-half of the time was occupied by the opponents of the measure; and that on the last day it came before the House, the 24th of May, Mr. Morey took the floor to close discussion, giving notice that the amendments that had been suggested by the Committee on Public Lands he was ordered to withdraw. At the end of that hour, discussion having been exhausted, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] rose to a question of privilege, calling up a contested-election case. The House therefore is now brought to a vote on the bill proper. Mr. Morey since then has been unseated; and, by order of the Committee on Public Lands, the charge of the bill has been turned over to me. In accordance with the instruction of the committee to Mr. Morey and with his notice to the House by order of the Committee on Public Lands, I now formally withdraw the committee's amendments to the bill, and demand the previous question.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, is one reasonable in itself, and is unanimously approved by the Representatives of the people interested in its passage. The legislation which it is proposed to repeal is not desired by those people. It was enacted, not by their request, but at the suggestion of people in other sections of the Union, under the idea that a principle which might well apply to other parts of the country would also apply to those States. The result of the experiment has demonstrated its utter failure to produce the effect intended.

It does not affect the homestead law elsewhere, but merely puts the lands in those States upon the basis of other public lands elsewhere in the United States. It is an act of justice to those people. It is an act of right. It is in the line of equality. It is a measure deemed proper by the Committee on Public Lands, who have unanimously reported it to the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. WALLING. I must decline to yield the floor, as three morning hours already have been taken up in the discussion of this question; and on the last occasion at the close of the morning hour notice was given that the vote would be taken. That morning hour was devoted to discussion in ten-minute speeches pro and con upon the bill. Other morning hours, as I have stated, have been occupied in discussion in the same way. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] occupied one entire hour. The bill has been discussed at greater length than any other coming before the House during this session. In justice to other committees, in justice to the House itself, and especially in justice to those interested in this bill, I must respectfully decline to yield the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I should like the gentleman to yield to me for only five minutes.

Mr. PAGE. Was it not the agreement when the bill was up before that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] should be accepted?

Mr. WALLING. No, sir.

Mr. PAGE. Or at least that a vote should be taken upon it?

Mr. WALLING. No, sir; there was no agreement except that at the close of the hour the discussion should be closed, and the vote taken on the bill without amendment.

Mr. KASSON. Was it not understood it should apply only to timber lands?

Mr. CLYMER. Is this unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. WALLING. It is, and under the order of that committee I now demand the previous question, having already formally withdrawn all pending amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WALLING. I decline to be interrupted further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING,] on behalf of the Committee on Public Lands, withdraws the amendments reported by that committee, and demands the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SAYLER. I desire to say on behalf of the Committee on Public Lands that there are three members of the Committee on Public Lands who favor an amendment to this bill.

On seconding the demand for the previous question there were—ayes 71, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WALLING and Mr. PAGE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 56.

So the previous question was seconed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the main question be now ordered?

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill a question. Will he permit any further debate upon it?

Mr. WALLING. I cannot. It has been debated at great length.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow an amendment to be offered for consideration?

Mr. WALLING. I cannot.

Mr. KASSON. On the question of the passage of the bill I shall call for the yeas and nays, to see if we are going back on the homestead principle.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to have the bill reported again before we vote on it.

The bill was again read.

The question was on the passage of the bill; and being taken, there were—yeas 108, nays 97, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, John B Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Eden, Egbert, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hartridge, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Lamar, George M. Landers, Levy, Lewis, Lord, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morgan, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Phelps, John F. Philips, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Riddle, John Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Siemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wike, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Fernando Wood, and Yeates—108.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Clymer, Collins, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Evans, Foster, Garfield, Goodin, Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Hartzell, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Holman, Hunter, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kimball, Franklin Landers, Lapham, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Neal, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Piper, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Robinson, Sampson, Savage, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Tarbox, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Young—97.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, John H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Bass, Blaine, Bliss, Blount, Bright, Caulfield, Chapin, Conger, Cowan, Darrall, Durham, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Fort, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Fuller, Gibson, Glover, Hancock, Harlson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hays, Henkle, Hereford, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunton, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kehr, King, Knott, Lane, Lawrence, Luttrell, Lynde, Magoon, Maish, MacDougall, McMahon, Morrison, Mutchler, New, Payne, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Poppleton, Powell, Purman, James B. Reilly, Rice, William M. Robbins, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Stevenson, Stowell, Martin I. Townsend, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Ward, Warren, Wheeler, White, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Woodburn, and Woodworth—83.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. DURAND. My colleagues, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS and Mr. CONGER, are absent by order of the House.

Mr. BRADLEY. My colleague, Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS, is absent on important business.

Mr. DURHAM. On this bill I am paired with Mr. HUBBELL, of Michigan.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair feels the necessity of asking the further indulgence of the House. He asks that he may have leave of absence for ten days, though he may not be absent for so long a time. Is there objection to this request?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, subject to the approval of the House, appoints the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] as Speaker during his absence. Is there objection to this appointment?

There was no objection, and Mr. COX took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MAILING OBSCENE BOOKS, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The calling of committees for reports has now reached the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2575) to amend sections 3893 and 3894 of the Revised Statutes, providing a penalty for mailing obscene books and other matters therein contained, and prohibiting lottery-circulars passing through the mails.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3893 of the Revised Statutes shall be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture paper, print, or other publication of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed or intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, and every article or thing intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use, and every written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, or how, or of whom, or by what means, any of the hereinbefore-mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, and every letter upon the envelope of which, or postal card upon which, indecent, lewd, obscene, or lascivious delineations, epithets, terms, or language may be written or printed, are hereby declared to be non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be non-mailable matter, and any person who shall knowingly take the same, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails, for the purpose of circulating or disposing of, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each and every offense be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or imprisoned at hard labor not less than one year nor more than ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

And all offenses committed under said original section 3893 of the Revised Statutes prior to the approval of this act may be prosecuted and punished under the said original section in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 2. That section 3894 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by striking out the word "illegal" in the first line of said section.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. This bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. If passed it does not materially change the two sections of the Revised Statutes that are proposed to be amended. Section 3893 of the Revised Statutes is perfected by the bill so as to provide a complete penalty for the mailing of all kinds of matter therein prohibited to pass through the mails.

The other section, section 3894, provides that "illegal" lottery circulars shall not pass through the mails. In some States lotteries are legalized, in others they are prohibited, so that we have matters mailable in one State that are not mailable in another. The object of the amendment to that section is to secure uniformity and prohibit lottery circulars of any kind from passing through the mails. This bill, or one substantially like it, was reported before, and, on the suggestion of various gentlemen and with the consent finally of the committee, it was recommitted and amended in some particulars to meet the suggestions made at that time. I think there can be no objection to the bill, and if there is no desire to say anything about it, I will ask that it be placed upon its passage. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-ROADS.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. HOAR. These amendments relate to post-roads simply, I presume?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The chairman of the committee informs the Chair that there is nothing in the bill in the shape of legislation except in the establishment of post-roads.

Mr. HOAR. I presume it is not necessary to read them. I understand that these post-roads are put into a bill of this kind on the request of any member as a matter of course, and there is no necessity to read them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the uniform course.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. At what time does the morning hour expire?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At twenty-five minutes after one o'clock.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want the engrossed bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not now engrossed, and it will go to the Speaker's table to come up whenever the business on the Speaker's table is reached by a vote of the House; but if the bill goes to the Speaker's table it can be taken from it by a motion.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will not call for the reading of the engrossed bill, but I ask that it be read in full on the third reading.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is this a third reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Has the call for the reading of the engrossed bill been withdrawn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has. The Chair understands that the object of the gentleman from Illinois is to exhaust the morning hour so as to verify the bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If by unanimous consent the morning hour can now be considered as closed, I am willing to dispense with the reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain such a motion during the morning hour.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I must ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I withdraw the request for the further reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over.

ALASKA COMMERCIAL COMPANY.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The Committee of Ways and Means have unanimously directed me to report back the following resolution and ask its adoption:

Whereas the Committee of Ways and Means, after a full and complete investigation into the law and facts relating to the granting of the lease to the Alaska Commercial Company for the right to take fur-seals on the islands of Saint Paul and Saint George, report that they find that the lease aforesaid was made in accordance with the act approved July 1, 1870, and has been complied with on the part of the lessees, and is for the advantage of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House there is no just ground of complaint against the Alaska Commercial Company or the officers of the Government who were intrusted under the law with the power to make and see to the performance of the lease aforesaid, and that it is entitled to the enjoyment of the franchise so long as it faithfully performs all the requirements and stipulations of the law and contract under which it holds its rights and so long as the act shall remain in force.

I will only state to the House that after four months of very patient and thorough examination and investigation the committee have unanimously agreed upon this report, and I have been directed to report the resolution back to the House and ask its adoption. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WALLABOUT BAY, BROOKLYN.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Naval Affairs the bill (H. R. No. 7) to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New York, to the city of Brooklyn, with amendments, and to ask its immediate passage.

The bill and amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill now?

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the bill is not before the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I trust the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. LANDERS,] in view of the fact that I am willing to make any explanation necessary to remove his doubts regarding this matter, will withdraw his objection.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. WILLIS. I am ready to answer it.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Why is the Secretary of the Navy selected to dispose of public land instead of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. WILLIS. I will answer the gentleman in regard to everything in this bill.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I only wish that question answered.

Mr. WILLIS. This land is in the heart of the city of Brooklyn; where there are 500,000 people, who without reference to party are demanding that this land, which is covered by water and produces pestilence, disease, and death, shall be sold. The terms and provisions provided by this bill are these——

Mr. THORNBURGH. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. WILLIS. I will answer it in a moment. The bill provides for four commissioners, two of them to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy and two of them to be the mayor and comptroller of the city of Brooklyn, the one a republican and the other a democrat; that this commission shall immediately proceed to agree upon the terms and conditions and consideration for which this land shall be sold, and that they shall report their conclusions to the next session of Congress, and, if the next session of Congress shall ratify their conclusions, thereupon the Secretary of the Navy is directed to execute and deliver a sufficient and proper deed of guarantee.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The gentleman has not answered my question, which is, why the Secretary of the Navy, instead of the Secretary of the Interior, is selected to dispose of public land?

Mr. WILLIS. The reason is——

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HURLBUT. My point of order is that, the bill being objected to, debate is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House, objection having been made.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I understand that this question is to be brought back to Congress again——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. And upon that understanding I withdraw my objection.

Mr. OLIVER. I renew it.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will not renew it. This is a bill of public necessity.

Mr. OLIVER. I insist upon my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill being objected to, it is not before the House.

SAMUEL B. NELSON.

Mr. COCHRANE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3671) for the relief of Samuel B. Nelson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask that there be printed in the RECORD the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk. It has been fully agreed upon by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD for information. It is a bill to provide a sinking fund for the Pacific Railroad.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," and other acts in relation to the railroad companies therein mentioned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to printing this bill in full in the RECORD?

Mr. HURLBUT. I object.

Mr. KASSON. Has not the bill already been printed?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Several amendments have been made to the bill. I ask that it be printed as a separate bill and recommitted.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3672) was received, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DURHAM. I object to any further business that will be in the way of my calling up House bill No. 2284, which is the oldest special order now on the Calendar.

Mr. LORD. I propose to call up a special order, being the bill for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] rise to call up each a special order.

Mr. LORD. The Geneva award bill was made a special order for Monday last at two o'clock.

Mr. DURHAM. The bill (H. R. No. 2284) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes concerning mineral lands is the oldest special order now upon the Calendar, having been made the special order for the 9th of March last. I am sure it will not take ten minutes to pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the House, and let the House determine between the motions of the gentlemen.

Mr. DURHAM. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] if I may have the assurance that my bill will be taken up after his bill has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the earlier special order is the one referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM.]

Mr. DURHAM. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] at this time, as his bill seems to be of more general interest than mine. Afterward I will call up my bill.

Mr. BANNING. There is an older special order, or at all events a more important one, than that of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM]—that is, the bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers—which I shall insist upon after the Geneva award bill has been disposed of.

Mr. DURHAM. All right; we will try our strength on our bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] to proceed to the consideration of the Geneva award bill.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TARBOX. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. KASSON. Is it a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TARBOX. It is a personal explanation.

Mr. LORD. How long will the gentleman take for his explanation?

Mr. TARBOX. Not more than fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] will proceed.

Mr. TARBOX. When on Monday last the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] occupied the floor in a personal explanation——

Mr. KASSON. Before the gentleman proceeds, I would inquire whether the gentleman from Maine is on the floor; and, if not, I would suggest whether it would not be more delicate for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] to postpone his personal explanation in order to enable the gentleman from Maine to be present.

Mr. TARBOX. In response to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] I will say that I should be very happy to have the presence of the gentleman from Maine when I may occupy the floor in an explanation touching a matter in which he is concerned, provided I can have some assurance when that gentleman's presence may be expected.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand he is in the committee-room.

Mr. KASSON. After the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] has occupied the floor I presume there will be no objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeding, and meanwhile there will be opportunity to advise the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. TARBOX. Upon that suggestion I am very happy to yield for the present.

EVIDENCE IN PACIFIC RAILROAD INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask my friend from New York [Mr. LORD] to yield to me a moment that I may present a resolution for the printing of evidence.

Mr. LORD. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized to print the evidence taken before said committee under the resolution offered by Hon. Mr. LUTTRELL, and under the resolution offered by Hon. Mr. TARBOX.

Subsequently, during the course of Mr. LORD's speech, the following occurred:

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from New York kindly yields to me to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution offered this morning by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] in regard to printing certain testimony was adopted. I only enter that motion now. I will explain the reason for it afterward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is entered.

Mr. LORD. I yield for the introduction of several bills.

SMYTH COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

Mr. TERRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3673) for the relief of Smyth County, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ERASTUS T. BUSSELL.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3674) to enable Erastus T. Bussell, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to make application to the Comissioner of Patents for an extension of letters-patent for a "combined rubber and spiral steel spring;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL DOCUMENTS FOR THE ARMY.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3675) to provide military headquarters and posts with copies of all publications made by authority of Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF GENEVA AWARD.

The House, according to order, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. LORD. I ask that the bill, with the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, be read:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, in the mode and subject to all the conditions, limitations, and provisions of chapter 459 of the laws of the Forty-third Congress, except as changed or modified by this act, to receive and examine the claims mentioned in section 2 of this act, and to enter judgment for the amounts allowed therefor in three classes.

SEC. 2. That the first class shall be for claims directly resulting from damage done on the high seas by confederate cruisers during the late rebellion, including vessels and cargoes attacked on the high seas or pursued therefrom, although destroyed within four miles of the shore, except as provided for in section 11 of said chapter 459. The second class shall be for claims for the payment of premiums for war risks, whether paid to corporations, agents, or individuals, after the sailing of any confederate cruiser. The third class shall be for claims for sums actually paid for insured property destroyed on the high seas by such confederate cruisers except claims for which judgments have been entered under section 12 of said chapter.

SEC. 3. That in examining claims in the second class it shall be the duty of the court to deduct any sum in any way received by or repaid to the claimant, diminishing the amount paid for any such premium, so that the actual loss of the claimant only shall be allowed; and no claimant in the second class who has been paid such loss shall be entitled to receive from any insurance company recovering in the third class any further sum on account of such loss.

SEC. 4. That the judgments rendered by said court under this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the sum of money paid to the United States pursuant to article 7 of the treaty of Washington, and accruing therefrom, not appropriated to claims provable under the provisions of said chapter 459 and the act extending the time for the filing of claims thereunder.

SEC. 5. That judgments entered in the first class shall be paid before judgments of the second class are paid and judgments of the second class shall be paid before judgments of the third class are paid. If the sum of money so unappropriated shall be insufficient to pay the judgments of the first class, they shall be paid according to the proportions which they severally bear to the whole amount of such unappropriated sum. If such sum shall be sufficient to pay the judgments of the first class and not sufficient to pay the judgments of the second class, the latter judgments shall be paid according to the proportions which they severally bear to the residue of such unappropriated sum. If such sum shall be sufficient to pay the judgments of the first and second classes and not sufficient to pay the judgments of the third class, they shall be paid according to the proportions which they severally bear to the residue of such unappropriated sum after the payment of the judgments of the first and second classes.

SEC. 6. That in other respects the said judgments shall be reported and paid in the mode provided for the payment of judgments by said chapter 459 and the act providing for the payment of judgments rendered and to be rendered thereunder.

SEC. 7. That all claims filed or that may hereafter be filed in said court in the name of one or more claimants, relating to a vessel in which other claimants are interested, shall be deemed and held to be legally filed the same as if all the parties in interest had joined in the filing of the petition.

The amendments reported by the Judiciary Committee were read as follows:

At the end of the first section add the following:

Such claims to be filed with the clerk of said court within six months from the passage of this act; and said court is hereby continued until July 22, A. D. 1877.

Insert after the words "vessels and cargoes attacked," in the third line of the second section, the words "or taken."

Mr. LORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] that he may offer a substitute.

Mr. KNOTT. As a substitute for the bill which has just been read, I offer the measure reported by the minority of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the creation of a court for the adjudication and disposition of certain moneys received into the Treasury under an award made by the tribunal of arbitration constituted by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded at Washington the 8th day of May, A. D. 1871, between the United States of America and the Queen of Great Britain," approved June 23, 1874.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the twelfth section of the said act as provides that "no claim shall be admissible or allowed by the court by or in behalf of any insurance company or insurer, either in its or his own right, or as assignee or otherwise in the right of a person or party insured, unless such claimant shall show to the satisfaction of said court that during the late rebellion the sum of its or his losses in respect to its or his war-risks exceeded the sum of its or his premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war-risks; and, in case of any such allowance, the same shall not be greater than such excess of loss," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That any claimant excluded by the provision hereby repealed shall have the like period of time within which to present, file, and prove its or his claim after the passage of this amendment as he could have had after the passage of the said act if not so excluded. And the time of the duration of the court created by the said act and its powers are hereby extended for a period sufficient to enable it to hear and dispose of such additional claims and the claims already referred to it; which period shall not exceed one year from the expiration of the time for filing claims under this section.

Mr. LORD. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to offer a substitute.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire in the first place to offer some amendments to the original bill.

Mr. LORD. I have not yielded for that purpose, but only for the offering of a substitute. At the proper time I will yield for amendments to the original bill, but not now. It is only fair that the principal question should be first discussed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I thought it better to offer all the propositions now.

Mr. LORD. No, sir, I object. I have only yielded for the purpose of allowing a substitute to be offered.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I understood when the committee acted on this matter that the arrangement was otherwise; but I will offer the following substitute:

That all bonds of the United States in which the money awarded to the United States by the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva has been invested, after paying all charges thereon and judgments as determined by the court of commissioners of Alabama claims under existing law, shall be canceled by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury; and all money, if any, arising from said award or from bonds in which it has been invested shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. LORD. I now move to recommit the bill and several amendments, in order that the debate may proceed with that motion pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, as near as can be estimated there remains unappropriated of the moneys paid under article 7 of the treaty of Washington over $10,000,000.

PROPOSITIONS TO BE SUSTAINED.

First. The award made in pursuance of such treaty was in favor of the United States as a nation against Great Britain as a nation, absolutely free from any trust or legal claim, to be distributed by the former according to its sense of justice. Therefore the last Congress had the power to legislate as it did in favor of actual sufferers, and with this exercise of its discretion this Congress ought not to interfere.

Second. The claim made by the underwriters that section 12 of chapter 459 of the laws of the Forty-third Congress should be repealed rests on no legal, equitable, or meritorious basis. Those who make this demand have been paid, in fact overpaid several millions of dollars. This sum they should not divert from those who paid them.

Third. Those who lost property on the high seas, and those who were compelled to pay war premiums by reason of the confederate cruisers should be paid from such unappropriated sum to the extent of their actual losses.

Fourth. If any interlocutory decision of the tribunal of arbitration, organized under the treaty of Washington, appears to be in conflict with the foregoing positions, although the award is binding as between the nations, such decision is in no manner binding on the United States, in regard to its own citizens, for the claims for all property destroyed by such cruisers are within the provisions of the treaty and are satisfied thereby. Neither the claims for war premiums nor for insurance could have been added to the award without allowing a double claim.

Fifth. The residue after the payment of such actual losses should be paid as a secondary loss to insurers excluded by section 12 of said chapter:

I.—THE AWARD WAS TO THE UNITED STATES AS A NATION.

I now proceed, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the first proposition, that this award was to the United States as a nation; and this, if I can have the attention of the House, I will demonstrate to it, I think, beyond all question. In this regard the majority report does not differ from one of the minority reports. The minority report, made by Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, is predicated on the theory that this award was wholly and absolutely in favor of the United States, and the United States the sole owner and custodian of the money awarded.

The Clarendon-Johnson treaty was rejected under the inspiration of Senator Sumner, notably because it was based upon the vicious principle of former treaties made with Great Britain, France, and Spain, which provided for payment directly to individuals, thereby failing to recognize the true principle upon which all claims against a foreign country for the destruction of property should be based. Mr. Sumner denounced the Clarendon-Johnson treaty "as a bundle of private claims," and asserted the principle which it is believed will be recognized in all future treaties, that if a nation has lost a portion of its taxable property by reason of the unwarranted acts of another nation, the claim for damages should be made and recovered by the nation, and when recovered the amount should be distributed to the actual sufferers, subject, of course, as a matter of law to the right of taxation.

The treaty of Washington was the result of a claim on the part of the United States that Great Britain by its unwarranted recognition of belligerent rights in favor of the seceded States and allowing its citizens to aid the cruisers, which, but for such recognition, would not have been on the sea, caused great injury to the material interests of this nation; and it was proposed that the commission which framed the treaty "should agree upon a sum to be paid by Great Britain to the United States in satisfaction of all the claims." (See papers relating to the treaty of Washington, volume 1, pages 9 and 10.)

Instead of following this suggestion, but in harmony therewith, the treaty of Washington was made, which contained the following articles.

Now, to these articles I ask the attention of the House to show how clearly the proposition is demonstrated that this is the money of the nation, received by the nation, to be distributed according to its sense of justice and according to actual merit:

ARTICLE I.

Whereas differences have arisen between the Government of the United States and the government of Her Britannic Majesty, and still exist, growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the "Alabama claims;"

* * * * * * *

Now, in order to remove and adjust all complaints and claims on the part of the United States, and to provide for the speedy settlement of such claims, which are not admitted by Her Britannic Majesty's government, the high contracting parties agree that all the said claims, growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels and generically known as the "Alabama claims," shall be referred to a tribunal of arbitration.

And it is important that the House should remember that the word "Alabama" was used generically and typically, (and in regard to this I presume there will be no dispute,) to cover all the losses occasioned by the confederate cruisers on the high seas.

From the foregoing article it will be seen that in the most comprehensive words the treaty of Washington provides for the reference of to such tribunal of all claims growing out of "the several vessels" which found a place upon the "high seas" under cover of the recognition by Great Britain of belligerent rights in the Confederate States. The claims and vessels are described in the argument of the counsel of the United States before the tribunal as "losses growing out of the acts of cruisers of the confederates designated by the typical name of the Alabama." (Volume 3 of papers relating to the treaty of Washington, page 209.) And it appears by the award of the arbitrators that claims were presented for losses occasioned by a large number of such cruisers.

I now call attention to the second article of the treaty:

ARTICLE II

The arbitrators shall meet at Geneva, in Switzerland, at the earliest convenient day after they shall have been named, and shall proceed impartially and carefully to examine and decide all questions that shall be laid before them on the part of the governments of the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, respectively. All questions considered by the tribunal, including the final award, shall be decided by a majority of all the arbitrators.

Each of the high contracting parties shall also name one person to attend the tribunal as its agent, to represent it generally in all matters connected with the arbitration.

ARTICLE VII.

* * * * * * * *

The said tribunal shall first determine as to each vessel separately whether Great Britain has, by any act or omission, failed to fulfill any of the duties set forth in the foregoing three rules, or recognized by the principles of international law not inconsistent with such rules, and shall certify such fact as to each of the said vessels. In case the tribunal find that Great Britain has failed to fulfill any duty or duties as aforesaid, it may, if it think proper, proceed to award a sum in gross to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for all the claims referred to it; and in such case the gross sum so awarded shall be paid in coin by the government of Great Britain to the Government of the United States, at Washington, within twelve months after the date of the award.

The award shall be in duplicate, one copy whereof shall be delivered to the agent of the United States for his Government, and the other copy shall be delivered to the agent of Great Britain for his government.

Thus by the express terms of the treaty the sum in gross was to be paid for all the claims referred to the tribunal.

ARTICLE VIII.

Each Government shall pay its own agent and provide for the proper remuneration of the counsel employed by it and of the arbitrator appointed by it, and for the expense of preparing and submitting its case to the tribunal. All other expenses connected with the arbitration shall be defrayed by the two governments in equal moieties.

ARTICLE XI.

The high contracting parties engage to consider the result of the proceedings of the tribunal of arbitration and of the board of assessors, should such board be appointed, as a full, perfect, and final settlement of all the claims hereinbefore referred to; and further engage that every such claim, whether the same may or may not have been presented to the notice of, made, preferred, or laid before the tribunal or board, shall, from and after the conclusion of the proceedings of the tribunal or board, be considered and treated as finally settled, barred, and thenceforth inadmissible.

The award of the tribunal is in entire harmony with this provision of the treaty of Washington.

Therefore all claims growing out of the acts of the confederate cruisers on the high seas, generically or typically known by the name of the Alabama, whether presented or not to the tribunal or whether allowed or disallowed by it, were to be absolutely satisfied and forever barred by the award, whether made by the tribunal of arbitration or the contemplated board of assessors. To assume that the Government did not by these provisions reserve to itself the supreme right to do justice would be to assume that it was acting in a most reckless and arbitrary manner, disregarding entirely the rights of its citizens and the merits of their claims.

These provisions make it entirely certain that the United States, recovering the money in its own name and at its own expense under its inherent right to recover the value of its taxable property so destroyed, intended to reserve and did reserve the right of distribution as to all the claims so satisfied, or to such of them as should prove to be the most meritorious.

From these provisions it appears that, in all its parts, the treaty of Washington was made for and between the two governments. They alone were to conduct the proceedings and to bear the expense. The claims to be satisfied were "all the claims," whether or not presented to or allowed or disallowed by the tribunal of arbitration. The rules incorporated were to bind the governments the same as "the duties (theretofore) recognized by the principles of international law." This international treaty recognized no individual right, but, as before suggested, repudiated the long-established heresy by which the citizens of one nation, through commissions, could prove claims directly against another nation, thus involving practices often discreditable and tending to bring the nation the claimants represented into disrepute. Both the dignity and interest of the nation, as well as its superior power to do justice, uphold the principles underlying the treaty of Washington.

Before proceeding to quote the instructions of the State Department, the views of the prime minister of Great Britain, the decisions of the court, and the statements of the counsel of the United States in relation to this question, all concurring in the view we have taken, attention is called to article 10 of the treaty of Washington:

In case the tribunal finds that Great Britain has failed to fulfill any duty or duties as aforesaid, and does not award a sum in gross, the high contracting parties agree that a board of assessors shall be appointed to ascertain and determine what claims are valid, and what amount or amounts shall be paid by Great Britain to the United States on account of the liability arising from such failure, as to each vessel, according to the extent of such liability, as decided by the arbitrators.

As in this article an express limitation is imposed upon the inferior tribunal created thereby, in case a gross sum was not awarded, not to inculpate any other cruiser than had the "tribunal of arbitration," and as no such limitation was imposed on the United States it shows that there was no intent to impose such a limitation upon the United States, the superior tribunal to both. Had the board been organized, the underlying principle was the same, the proceeding was still between the two governments; and it was to proceed, in the language of the treaty, "to the investigation of the claims which shall be presented to them by the Government of the United States, and shall examine and decide upon them in such order and manner as they may think proper, but upon such evidence or information only as shall be furnished by or on behalf of the governments of the United States and of Great Britain respectively. They shall be bound to hear on each separate claim, if required, one person on behalf of each government as counsel or agent."

As this limitation confining the board of assessors to the injuries done by the inculpated cruisers constitutes the only material difference between the tribunals it is evident that the object of the treaty in this regard was, if insisted on, to allow the test of evidence to be applied as to the value of the vessels and cargoes destroyed by each cruiser instead of relying upon the ex parte statements of interested parties received by the tribunal of arbitration. Either would make up the amount of the national loss from individual claims, in the one case on ex parte statements, in the other by the aid of testimony. The treaty further provides in regard to such board:

The report or reports shall be made in duplicate, and one copy thereof shall be delivered to the Secretary of State of the United States, and one copy thereof to the representative of Her Britannic Majesty at Washington.

All sums of money which may be awarded under this article shall be payable at Washington in coin within twelve months after the delivery of each report.

Thus, whether before the tribunal or the board, the two governments were the parties, and the award was to be paid to the United States, without limitation, to be distributed upon the claims satisfied by the treaty of Washington, according to their respective merits.

The minority report seems to assume that, had the board of assessors been appointed, it would have dealt with individuals. This, as has already appeared, is an error; either tribunal would only examine individual claims as evidence. It also states that—

It was not necessary, if indeed it would not have been indelicate, to insert a stipulation in the treaty that the United States should faithfully administer such sum as might be awarded to them in gross in accordance with the judgment of the tribunal.

Why indelicate to bind a nation more than the individuals composing it? Why indelicate to bind this nation more than the representatives of the three nations composing the "board of assessors?"

The reasoning of the minority is very far from being sufficient to reverse the axiom, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. But it is a sufficient answer to the speculations of the minority report to say that a "gross sum" was awarded and the "board" was not appointed. And it must be remembered that had this board of assessors been appointed every proceeding as to the award would have been the same as before the tribunal, except in regard to the single limitation put upon the board by the treaty in question.

In furtherance of the view that the sum so awarded "in gross" to the United States was paid to it as a nation, to be distributed in its discretion, bounded only by the claims satisfied by the treaty of Washington, we quote the instructions given by the State Department, under date of December 8, A. D. 1871, and found in the second volume of papers relating to the treaty of Washington, pages 415 416, as follows:

The President desires to have the subject discussed as one between the two governments. * * * In the discussion of this question and in the treatment of the entire case, you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded. * * * The Government wishes to hold itself free to decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case. If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government, without committal as to the mode of distribution.

We also quote the view of Great Britain; (See Foreign Relations of the United States, part 1, page 377:)

Mr. Gladstone, then prime minister, said:

"It appears to be implied that the government submitted the claims of certain persons not subjects of Her Majesty to arbitration.

"This is altogether a mistake. No claims of individuals have been submitted to arbitration in relation to the Alabama.

"What was submitted to arbitration was entirely a question between the two governments."

Now I ask the attention of this House to the decision of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims made on the precise question. I have read the treaty which in its broad range satisfied every claim referred to the tribunal of Geneva by the treaty of Washington, and every claim was referred to them which could possibly grow out of the ravages of confederate cruisers on the high seas. I have read to you the instructions of the State Department to its counsel at Geneva. Not one single suggestion was made by that tribunal as to the subject of distribution to individuals, the United States having reserved to itself the supreme right of distribution.

I shall read to you the decisions of the court created by the Congress, composed of intelligent judges, and which has had to pass upon this identical question. If the treaty, the award, the construction of Great Britain, the construction of the State Department, as well as the decisions of such court agree in this one direction, and more, if the last Congress in its discretion agreed with all these authorities and enacted the law the insurers desire to repeal, I ask by what right it is claimed that this Congress should repeal that law? Shall we yield to the arguments of newspapers, perhaps advertisements paid for by the very men who demand the repeal?

Several decisions made "in the court of commissioners of Alabama claims" sustain the declaration of the State Department that—

If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government, without committal as to the mode of distribution.

The act organizing the "court of commissioners of Alabama claims" was approved June 23, 1874. (See Statutes at Large of the Forty-third Congress, page 249.)

By section 11, page 247, it is made the duty of the court to examine claims admissible under the act, "to decide upon the amount and validity of such claims in conformity with the provisions thereinafter contained, and according to the principles of law and the merits of the several cases."

By the Constitution of the United States, article 6, subdivision 2, "treaties made * * * under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land."

It is alleged that the rule of damages enacted in section 12 of such act is in contravention of the treaty of Washington.

In Schreiber and others vs. The United States, page 4, the court say:

The court of commissioners of Alabama claims was, by the act of the 23d of June, 1874, constituted a court, not in form merely, but in every essential attribute of a court. * * * Its jurisdiction is certainly limited to a particular class of subjects, but within the range of its jurisdiction its power to hear, to decide, and to enter judgment is as complete as could be claimed for any court of the most enlarged jurisdiction.

In Williams vs. The United States, pages 2 and 3, the court say:

Let not the proper attitude of the claimant to the fund for distribution be misunderstood. Whatever his loss may have been, he had not the power to obtain compensation from Great Britain by his own acts. * * *

The Government of the United States accepted the sum awarded in full settlement of all the claims comprehended in the terms of the treaty. * * *

It is clear the Government had the right to prescribe the terms on which claimants should present their claims. They were not strong enough to compel payment of the money by Great Britain, and when this Government obtained it the claimants had no legal right to it except that which this Government, by its own acts, chose to accord.

Raynor, Justice, in Hubbell vs. The United States, page 3, says:

Nothing can be found in those proceedings to limit or control good faith on the part of our Government in making such allowance to claimants before us as in their judgment and discretion Congress might think proper. In fact, the very able committee to whom the British board of trade referred the investigation of the points at issue say in their report:

"The proper compensation for the losses occasioned by the cruisers is the question we have to examine, but with the mode of distributing that among the various claimants the American Government alone is concerned."

And the position taken by the Board of Trade of Great Britain is thus indorsed by the court of commissioners of Alabama claims.

In the recent case of Rhind vs. The United States, in which the point was distinctly before it, the court say:

The award was made in favor of the Government and not in favor of the claimants. The Government thus vindicated the national honor, but it did not assume to pay any particular class of claimants nor any particular claim. Having obtained the money by its own act and at its own cost, it had the right to prescribe the terms on which the distribution should be made.

The distinguished counsel of the United States, William M. Evarts, Caleb Cushing, and Morrison R. Waite, now Chief Justice, stated—see volume 3, page 16, of the papers relating to the treaty of Washington:

That these claims were all preferred by the United States as a nation against Britain as a nation.

It is evident that Great Britain did not become liable to any citizen of the United States for any loss sustained by him by reason of such cruisers. Neither could such citizen make any legal claim therefor upon his own Government. The wrongs done by Great Britain to the United States were treated throughout as a national claim. The moneys paid therefor were paid "by the government of Great Britain to the Government of the United States," and "the United States" is made the respondent upon the prosecution of any claim before the court organized by the act of Congress.

From the foregoing it follows that the Forty-third Congress had the power to enact chapter 459 of the laws of that session.

It should be stated also that "a treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty." (Foster vs. Neilson, 2 Peters, page 314; The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wallace, page 621; Taylor vs. Moden, 2 Curtis, page 454.) But we choose to rest the power on the higher ground that the nation recovered the money in question as a nation, for so much of its taxable property destroyed, to distribute it "according to its sense of justice" to actual sufferers by reason of the presence and ravages of the confederate cruisers.

The tribunal of arbitration was first to determine whether Great Britain had by any act or omission failed to fulfill certain duties to show a reasonable foundation for awarding to the United States a "gross sum" or organizing a board of assessors.

The determination of the tribunal as to liability was but interlocutory so far as the government and its constituent parts are concerned. It could in no manner, I repeat, control the United States, because, by the express terms of the treaty, the sum awarded was to be "a full, perfect, and final settlement of all the claims thereinbefore referred to," namely, "All the * * * claims growing out of the acts committed by the several vessels which have given rise to the claims generically known as the Alabama claims."

In no way was it referred to the tribunal of arbitration to settle questions between the individual citizens of the United States, and the nation reserved to itself the supreme right to do justice.

While the Forty-third Congress by section 15 of said act provided for a further distribution "in payment of other claims," should there be a residue, yet it is evident that it supposed that the actual losses it provided for would exhaust the amount of the award.

Now I wish to call the attention of the House to the position in which this matter would be left if we overruled the action of the last Congress in doing what it did in furtherance of justice. Had such supposition proved to be true, the recognition of the present claim of the underwriters would result in setting aside all the judgments rendered by the court of commissioners of Alabama claims; if paid, such companies could properly claim the amount due them from the United States.

The rule of damages asserted in section 12 is not only in conflict with such claim, but the act in question departed from the conclusions of the tribunal of arbitration, as construed by the underwriters, in several other particulars:

First. By directing that the difference in value between the amount of insurance and the vessel destroyed should be paid to the owner of the vessel.

Second. In allowing an insurance company, under section 12, to include all its losses by both the inculpated and exculpated cruisers.

Third. By excluding unincorporated insurance companies.

Fourth. By excluding the claim of any person not entitled at the time of the loss to the protection of the United States.

Fifth. By excluding all persons who during the late rebellion did not bear true allegiance to the United States.

If the underwriters are entitled to the value of the insured vessels destroyed, then any sum awarded to the owners for such difference in value should not be paid; if the findings of the tribunal were final, then any sum awarded to an insurance company for losses occasioned by the exculpated cruisers should not be paid, and the judgments should be modified accordingly. Therefore it appears that both justice and policy combine in requiring this Congress to uphold the action of the last Congress in relation to the money paid to this Government under the Geneva award.

As its mode of distribution was "within the power of the Congress," this Congress ought not to disturb it. Any other rule, particularly as relating to the distribution of money, would, as in this case, lead to great confusion. Questions resting in discretion, after having been decided by a competent tribunal, are not afterward reviewable, whether in legal or legislative forums.

II.—THE CLAIM OF THE UNDERWRITERS.

The underwriters assume that they have a specific interest in this fund and that the award would have been less to the extent of the amount of their claims had the tribunal of arbitration taken the same view of their rights as did the last Congress.

As has been seen, the insurance companies are put by the act of the last Congress, not only upon the same footing with other claimants, but are preferred to them, and allowed to prove losses outside of those occasioned by the inculpated cruisers, including war premiums paid by way of re-insurance.

But it is a great error to claim that the Geneva award would have been any less if the underwriters had stated that they had made profits amounting to millions of dollars by reason of such cruisers being on the sea, and had such tribunal held that they were not entitled to receive anything more.

It will not be disputed but that the basis of the Geneva award was the value of the vessels and cargoes destroyed by the confederate cruisers inculpated by the tribunal of arbitration. Claims for insurance were predicated on the value of the vessels or cargoes insured; so in either case, whether the owners or the insurers made the claim, the award as to value would be the same. This seems to be conceded by the distinguished gentleman from New York. The underwriters presented their claims; the war-premium claimants presented their claims, in pursuance of the invitation of the Government. One or both of them may have been an aid in estimating the value of the vessels and cargoes, but the necessary office of the tribunal was to ascertain the value of the property destroyed, leaving the United States to ascertain the actual sufferers; in other words, to trace the losses to their respective sources.

Now, if the House please, the doctrine of subrogation is the foundation-stone upon which the insurers have finally rested in regard to their claims. They have talked something about a trust. But this idea of a trust cannot exist in the light of the fact that this money was recovered by the nation. The underwriters have fallen back, therefore, upon the right of subrogation. They say that had the Geneva tribunal taken the same view of their claims as did the last Congress, the award would have been so much the less. We say that inasmuch as the award was necessarily made from evidence of the value of the cargoes and vessels destroyed, it made no difference whether an insurance company had ever been heard of or not. All they had to furnish was evidence. Not one dollar of their claims entered into the award. Not one dollar of their claims could have gone into the award, nor one dollar of the war premiums, without allowing a double claim. Therefore, if the value of the property destroyed was $15,000,000, and if the war-premium men had paid $8,000,000, and the insurance men $5,000,000, to have allowed all these claims would have been to nearly double the amount. To have allowed the war-premium claims would have added about $8,000,000; to have allowed the insurance claims would have added over $5,000,000 more, and increased the claim from $15,000,000 to $28,000,000.

The agent of the United States, J. Bancroft Davis, (volume 4, pages 7 and 8 of the papers relating to such treaty,) says:

We devoted our energies toward securing such a sum as should be practically an indemnity to the sufferers. Whether we have or have not been successful can be determined only by the final division of the sum.

The insurance companies who seek the repeal of section 12 are not in fact sufferers. If they were, as has been seen, they have their remedy and a wider range for damages than other claimants. The claim to subrogation is always a legal claim.

The underwriters, therefore, must place the right to be subrogated on a legal basis. Their claim under the right of subrogation is as foundationless as the assumption that the Geneva award would have been less but for their demands, or that the money is held for them in trust.

First. Subrogation exists in favor of an insurer who has paid a loss on the policy of insurance "to all actions against the person by whose negligence or wrong the loss was caused." (Dixon on Insurance, page 151.)

Second. Subrogation must therefore be based on a legal claim which the insured could have enforced. The stream can rise no higher than the fountain. No citizen of the United States by reason of such cruisers had any such claim against Great Britain, or against his own Government. He might have had a claim against the captain of the cruiser destroying his vessel but for his commission; he might have had a claim against the Confederate States but for a state of war. He could have no claim against Great Britain for exercising the legal right of recognition, and such recognition was too remote for any possible cause of action, assuming Great Britain suable.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will my colleague on the committee allow me a question?

Mr. LORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman asserts, as I understand him, the claim of the insurance companies upon the ground of a right of subrogation.

Mr. LORD. I deny that right.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then you are all right upon that point.

Mr. WILLIS. All wrong.

Mr. LAWRENCE. You may be all right there, but you are wrong on some other points.

Mr. LORD. I have not differed with you yet. Hold on till I differ with you. You are sound so far as I have yet gone.

In Langredge vs. Levy, 2 Meeson & Welsby, 530, it was claimed by counsel that when a duty is imposed any one injured by the violation of it may recover against the wrong-doer, but the court denied a principle which would lead to that indefinite extent of liability, and said, "To create liability the act complained of must result, not from an act remote and consequential, but one contemplated by the defendant at the time as one of its results."

The damage to be recovered must always be the natural and proximate consequence of the act complained of. (2 Greenleaf on Evidence, section 562.) A person damnified by a wrong-doer has no right to be subrogated to his indemnity. (McGay vs. Keelback, 14 Abbott, 142.)

Third. The premiums charged were based in fact on the expectation of total destruction; on the contrary, there was no expectation that by the award of an unthought of and theretofore unheard of tribunal a fund was to be provided for the benefit of the sufferers from the acts of the cruisers.

Fourth. If under a spirit of prophecy it could have been anticipated that such a tribunal might be called into existence ex gratia and not de jure, and should award money for the purpose of protecting actual sufferers by the ravages of such cruisers, a special contract would have been necessary for the assignment of such claim; but such contract would in law be void, upon the familiar principle that a man cannot assign that to which he has no legal claim, certainly not that to which he could never have a legal claim. At common law the conveyance of a mere right of expectancy is void. (Tooley vs. Dibble, 2 Hill, 641.)

A power to seize future acquired property does not operate even in equity as an assignment thereof. (Reeve vs. Whitmore, 9 Jurist, new series, page 1214.)

A deed does not convey property which did not belong to the grantor at the time of the execution. (Dunn vs. Thompson, 1 Common Bench, page 379.)

A cause of action, as before admitted, may be anticipated, by the contract of insurance. If an insured vessel is run down by another vessel under circumstances making the owner of the latter legally liable to the former, the docrine of subrogation would aid the insurer, but only because of such legal right. Assume that the destroyed vessel was at fault and the generous and wealthy owner of the surviving vessel, of his own grace, had indemnified the loser, could the underwriter claim the money?

If the underwriter could not claim the money in the precise case supposed, where the vessel run down was at fault, how would it be in the case where a generous owner whose vessel had inadvertently destroyed the other should say, "Sir, I will protect you; you have not come out of what proved almost to be a watery grave, charging upon me the fault. But admit that it is your own fault. I am rich and you are poor; therefore I will give you $5,000 to indemnify you." Will any lawyer in this House, will those who presented the minority report, claim that under such circumstances there was such a legal claim that the insurance company could claim the right of subrogation?

Therefore, in the case before the Congress, there is not even the shadow of a legal right for the insurers, who have been more than paid, to take the money in question from those who have paid them. The remotest possible semblance to subrogation they would create into a devouring Moloch, to consume the money which should go to their benefactors, to those who paid them at least two or three millions of dollars more than they paid out, as appears from the following table.

We have not the precise evidence how much the insurers made; I mean those insurers who cannot prove their claims under the act of last Congress, which I beg the House to remember they have the right to do if they lost anything. But we can approximate to it. Here is the table:

Claims for war premiums filed with Secretary of State		$6,146,219 71
Claims not filed, estimated by insurers from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000, say		2,000,000 00
		8,146,219 71
Paid out by insurance companies		5,750,693 00
		2,336,526 71

Leaving their actual profits, so far as has been ascertained, in round numbers, $2,500,000. Probably this amount is too small by half. We have one specific case to which I call the attention of the House, that of the Columbia Company:

The books of the Columbia Company show that it received for war premiums		$1,918,760 00
Paid re-insurance	$75,205 00
Losses	705,508 00
		780,713 00
Profits		1,138,047 00

On this basis insurers made more than they paid out.

This, I presume, is the case with most of the insurance companies. But whether they made one million or five millions or ten millions, it makes no difference in the principle. If they have lost anything they are fully protected by the present legislation.

The authorities quoted by the minority do not affect the question in controversy.

The question in the case of Randall vs. Cochrane, 1 Vesey, 98, was a question as to prize-money between the owners of a vessel and the insurer, who had paid the owners in full for their loss.

The case of the Lubeck Fire Insurance Company vs. Saint Louis, 7 Moore, P. C., 286, was as to subrogation between individuals under the French law in L. C., and touches no question in this case.

The case of Comynge vs. Vasse, 1 Peters, 193, arose under the treaty with Spain, (1819,) by which, in consideration of the cession of "the Floridas," the United States agreed to pay $5,000,000 to its own citizens for spoliations by Spain, to be ascertained as to the individuals by a commission. No national claim was involved.

The case of Rogers vs. Hosack, 18 Wendell, 319, arose under the French treaty of 1803, by which certain claims were to be paid to citizens of the United States, and under Jay's treaty with Great Britain, whereby the money was to be paid to the citizens complainant through the tribunals awarding the judgments. (Comynge vs. Vasse, supra, page 217.)

In the case of Campbell vs. Mullet, 2 Swanson, 551-613, it was expressly held that even in cases in which the individual citizen recovers, it is not a matter of legal right. The court say:

> It is said that the sums awarded by the commissioners are not matters of bounty or donation; can they be matter of right? What is right? That which may be enforced in a court of justice. * * * The ground of relief before the commissioners is the want of redress in any municipal court. Whatever the individual obtains is not on the ground of right, or private property, but of hardship and injustice; * * * a grant to the sufferer for what he lost. The inducements for one nation to give to the citizens of another this bounty are matters of liberality and conciliation, but not of strict legal right. * * *
>
> All persons receiving benefit under this commission succeed not in virtue of any consideration moving from them, but by an article of a treaty which gives as bounty from this nation to American citizens a compensation for losses.

If this be the law when the treaty treats with the citizen of a foreign state, how much stronger the rule when nation deals with a nation. But of course, when the insurer is the actual sufferer, he should be protected under the principle for which we contend. So far, and so far only, did Webster—or Great Britain—intend in the cases cited by the honorable member, [Mr. WARD.]

IV.—THE CLAIMS OF THOSE WHO LOST PROPERTY BY THE CONFEDERATE CRUISERS AND OF THOSE WHO PAID WAR PREMIUMS.

It may be hard to distinguish between the claims of those who had property destroyed on the high seas by the so-called exculpated cruisers and those who lost by being compelled to pay war premiums by reason of the existence of such cruisers. Practically the question need not be settled. The proposed bill puts in the first class the owners of such vessels, and persons who had property destroyed therein.

Some questions are raised in regard to those who paid war premiums which I propose now to consider. The principal objection (and to this I call the particular attention of the House) made to paying the losses they sustained is that the tribunal of arbitration held the claims for such "increased insurance" indirect, and our Government consented to their withdrawal from the consideration of the tribunal. The term indirect was introduced by the counsel for Great Britain. It is not necessary to ascertain or discuss its precise significance. If a right conclusion was made, it makes no difference if a wrong reason were given.

After performing the preliminary duty of ascertaining whether Great Britain had failed to perform certain duties, the tribunal, before it could award a "sum in gross," had to ascertain the amount of the damage done by "each vessel" inculpated. All other claims had been withdrawn or excluded except the claim for the destruction of vessels and their cargoes, the value of which the tribunal proceeded to ascertain.

The valuations made by the British and American cases differed very largely. From all the statements before it the tribunal came to the conclusion that the value of the vessels and cargoes so destroyed amounted to $15,500,000. Nothing could be allowed for sums paid for war premiums, nothing for sums paid by insurers, because, in either case, it would have been to allow a double claim. But by ascertaining the value of the property destroyed absolute justice could be attained. If the owner had been paid by the insurer, as against the owner, the insurer would be entitled to the money. If the insurer had been paid by war premiums, those who paid them as against the insurer would be entitled to the money. In other words, ascertaining the value of the property, the loss could and should be traced to the actual sufferer. Therefore the rejection or withdrawal of either the war premiums or insurance claims, both of which were presented, had no significance.

There is another answer which has been before suggested. By the express terms of the treaty the award of such sum "in gross" was to be in satisfaction of all the claims referred to the tribunal. These claims were as broad as the high seas, and covered all the destructions made by the confederate cruisers, namely, all claims "generically (or typically) known as the Alabama claims."

To Great Britain it was a matter of profound indifference to which class of claimants the money was paid. By objection and argument its counsel sought to reduce the amount of the award. On the other hand, the United States, most anxious to secure certain national rules, consented to the withdrawal of certain claims without passing upon their merits, yet reserving the power to do justice. Neither Great Britain nor the United States had any intention, in their respective attitudes, to pass upon the question as to who were the real sufferers, certainly not to foreclose them.

As all these claims were referred to the tribunal of arbitration it made no difference whether it allowed or disallowed them, for they were absolutely satisfied by the award, and therefore should be paid according to the intent of the treaty of Washington and pursuant to the declaration of the State Department. The war-premium claims were referred to the tribunal of arbitration.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to the declaration made in this regard by the government of Great Britain, and the reply of the United States showing that the minority report is greatly in error in giving the least significance to the position assumed by some, that these claims, because withdrawn, were not referred to the tribunal.

The treaty was made in 1871. In 1872 the Queen of Great Britain, in proroguing the two Houses of Parliament, stated:

In the case so submitted on behalf of the United States, large claims have been included which are understood on my part not to be within the province of the arbitrators. (See volume 2 of such papers, page 582.)

The Secretary of State responded, pages 583 and 584:

If they were not within the province of the arbitrators, why should the arbitrators give them consideration, * * * or why should they express their individual and collective opinion with regard to them?

If not within "the province of the arbitrators," why should the British government, * * * upon the statement of the agent of the United States that they will not be further insisted upon before the tribunal, ask for the entry of an order * * * "that they be henceforth wholly excluded from all consideration?"

A very significant reason why the United States should not raise the question as against the claimants is found in the fact that this Government withdrew such claims for a consideration largely advantageous to itself.

The American minister (volume 2 of papers relating to the treaty of Washington, page 516) says:

I think the principle declared in this article (the fifth) for future observance between the two nations is one which, if settled and maintained, must be of inestimable advantage to the United States.

The Secretary of State, in writing of these "indirect claims," page 476, says:

The United States now desire no pecuniary award on their account. * * * In the correspondence I have gone as far as prudence would allow in intimating * * * that we should be content with an award that a state is not liable in pecuniary damages for the indirect results of a failure to observe its neutral obligations. * * * This Government expects to be in the future, as it has been in the past, a neutral much more of the time than a belligerent.

In regard to the withdrawal of the claim for indirect losses (page 526 of such papers) the following appears:

In consideration thereof the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, consents that he will make no claim on the part of the United States in respect of indirect losses as aforesaid before the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva.

The British minister writes, (page 532)—

That the Senate considered that the adoption of the wider principle with regard to indirect claims would be an equivalent for the consent given by the President that he would make no claim for indirect losses before the tribunal of arbitration at Geneva.

It is stated by the Secretary of State (page 533) that the President, to preserve such a treaty, "has been willing to make large concessions."

The American minister writes (page 569) to the Earl of Granville:

I am now authorized * * * to say that the Government of the United States regards the new rule * * * as the consideration for and to be accepted as a final settlement of the three classes of the indirect claims put forth in the case of the United States.

The Secretary of State (page 579) says:

This is an attainment of an end which this Government had in view in the putting forth of those claims. We had no desire for a pecuniary reward, but desired an expression by the tribunal as to the liability of a neutral for claims of that character.

The counsel of the United States (page 223, volume 3) state—

That the United States did not insist on extravagant damages; their object was a higher one, and one more important to them.

The learned counsel (page 224) say:

We * * * have acted accordingly * * * regarding a mere question of the amount of national damages to be awarded as secondary to the higher consideration of the welfare and the honor of the United States.

Without this last statement it is evident that the United States never intended by withdrawing the indirect damages to extinguish all claims therefor as between this Government and its own citizens.

Notwithstanding, such recognition of the belligerent rights of the seceded States greatly prolonged the war, and this Government paid more to protect its commerce from the cruisers created thereby than the whole amount of the Geneva award, yet not having presented or for its own advantage having withdrawn or acquiesced in the rejection of its own claims for indirect losses and also the indirect losses of individuals who had also borne their part of the national losses, it would seem more than unjust for the United States, which acted voluntarily in the premises, to cover any portion of the award into the Treasury before the payment of all individual losses, even if the intent to pay the losses of individuals so denominated by the agent of the United States as "the sufferers" were not made apparent by every statement and proceeding involved in the history of the case.

In what way would the award be "an indemnity to the sufferers," as proclaimed by the agent of the United States, if such sufferers were sacrificed on the altar of negotiation from which the nation received such "inestimable advantage?" So far did the United States take the control of this whole matter that it, as the successor of the confederacy, took the Shenandoah and sold it in Great Britain, (Alabama Claims Correspondence, volume 3, pages 319, 447;) which seizure prevented the owner of one of the ships destroyed by the Shenandoah, before it entered Melbourne, from bringing his libel in a British court.

It is objected that those who paid war premiums have in some way received back the amount paid by them. It is a sufficient answer to this to say that in regard to this class the bill provides:

It shall be the duty of the court to deduct any sum in any way received by or repaid to the claimant, diminishing the amount paid for any such premium, so that the actual loss of the claimant only shall be allowed; and no claimant in the second class who has been paid such loss shall be entitled to receive from any insurance company recovering in the third class any further sum on account of such loss.

Therefore, if the premium itself were insured or repaid or added to the price of the goods, or diminished by non-payment of tonnage duties, or otherwise, the facts will be ascertained by the court and only the actual loss will be allowed. But we say both the reason of the case and the evidence concur in the following propositions:

1. The claimants who paid such war premiums were compelled to pay them because such cruisers were on the sea.

2. In order to obtain credit in the purchase of foreign goods, they were required to procure such increased insurance, or, if exporting, they had to pay such increased insurance on account of the war risks.

3. So many American vessels sailed under neutral flags, the competition made it impossible to add the increased insurance to the price of the merchandise.

4. These claimants are actual losers to the amount of the premiums paid by them, less such amount as they may have received from dividends or otherwise.

5. The owners of vessels had to pay such war premiums, for they were compelled to carry freight in competition with all vessels sailing under neutral flags, and not only lost the premium but had to take freight at less rates than the neutral vessels lying side by side, until the former were driven from the sea.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to what the evidence was before the subcommittee. Not only was it proven that the war premiums could not be added to the freight or the price of the goods, but it was proven by one witness that he offered to bring goods from China for fifteen cents less per hundred than was offered by the neutral vessels, and that he continued in business until his fifteen vessels were driven from the sea because he refused to hoist a neutral flag and abandon the flag of his country.

Many of these owners bore up heroically, preferring that their vessels should be "driven from the sea," rather than to sail under a foreign flag.

You of the South, who so heroically stood by the "lost cause" because you believed you were right, can but honor the men whom the lust of gain could not seduce to abandon a flag which they so intensely honored and which now floats again over a great and united people. May it thus float forever.

The abstract right of those who paid the war premiums to recover them has been settled by "the court of commissioners of Alabama claims" in ascertaining the loss in the insurance cases which have found a standing before this court under the act of the last session.

Now, if the House please, I wish to call particular attention to these decisions. I have already said that the insurance companies had a better foundation for their claims in regard to damages than any others who lost. Some of them have lost and have been before the tribunal created by Congress to award this fund to the proper claimants, and the question has been distinctly presented. It is claimed that the war premiums are necessarily indirect. We have no such term as indirect in American law. We speak of damages as direct and consequential. The Court of Claims has held that war premiums are the most direct of damages in three or four cases to which I will refer. I have copies of the records in court——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended.

Mr. LORD. I shall want but a very few moments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York proceeding?

No objection was made.

Mr. LORD. In the case of The Mutual Marine Insurance Company vs. The United States, No. 1098, the company paid for war premiums for re-insurance of its war risks the sum of $2,511.57 and was allowed, less scrip received, $470, $2,041.57.

In the case of The Merchants Mutual Marine Insurance Company vs. The United States, No. 257, the company was allowed war premiums paid for re-insurance of its war risks, $2,550.83.

In the case of The Ocean Mutual Insurance Company vs. The United States, No. 1093, the company "paid for re-insuring war risks" $27,209.59 and received for war losses re-insured $22,057.15. The balance it recovered in its judgment, namely, $5,152.44.

In The Commercial Marine Insurance Company vs. The United States, No. 1089, the company paid for war premiums by way of re-insurance $30,599.83 and received for re-insurance losses $10,556.40 and recovered in its judgment the balance, $20,243.43.

That the underwriters who demand the repeal of section 12 have made several millions of dollars out of their war risks during the rebellion has already appeared and is not disputed. That those who paid war premiums have lost several millions of dollars cannot be disputed. If they have not actually lost they cannot recover, and the insurers under the bill in question will have the benefit.

The statement of this case is its argument, unless some inexorable rule of law demands that insurers who have made these millions should take the fund in question from those who have lost millions not only but have also actually paid the insurers the millions which they have paid out on war risks and the millions they have made in profits.

We have shown that no such rule of law is in this case; that the insurers make a claim that cannot rest even under the shadow of a technical rule, for the facts show that the insurers neither by contract nor in expectation had any reference to this extraordinary and unexpected award.

Therefore the wheels of justice need not be reversed in obedience to an arbitrary and in this case an imaginary rule.

MUTUAL COMPANIES.

It has been suggested that the money paid for war premiums, so far as mutual companies are concerned, should be paid to the companies, with directions to ascertain and pay over to those who paid the premiums, called by some assessments. This plan is objectionable. Many of the companies have failed, all have changed; it will create too many tribunals. And without a sufficient guarantee as to uniformity in rules of evidence or decisions as to the law, far better to make the distribution through the court organized for such purpose, familiar with the general character of the cases, with the rules of evidence, and principles of law.

A more objectionable plan is, that such part of the award as belongs to the war-premium claimants, who paid or were assessed in mutual companies, be paid directly to the companies, leaving them to distribute according to their sense of the right or under the statutes of the particular States.

In New York such companies may, after "deducting expenses and liabilities," divide the money "derived from the Geneva award" among those who paid the premiums; but in this there is no guarantee that it will be done or justly done.

Many of the mutual companies have failed, not by reason of their war risks, but for other causes, and there would be an entire diversion of the money.

Several of these companies took fire as well as marine risks, and, after making large profits on their war risks, failed by reason of the Chicago and Boston fires, so that by payment to them there would be another diversion.

It may be here stated that a claim made by one of these companies in Boston on the Geneva award for over $145,000 sold for $1,000, or less than seven-tenths of 1 per cent. This shows the estimation of the Boston business men as to the value of claims of insurers who have lost nothing by their war risks. Again, many of the claimants in this lapse of years are dead, and those who represent them unknown; the money in such cases would remain with the insurance companies; under the bill proposed it would remain in the Treasury.

V. The bill proposed is strictly in accordance with justice and should be passed. It divides the claimants into three classes, to be paid as classified.

First. Those who had vessels or cargoes destroyed on the high seas by confederate cruisers, which for want of evidence, or on a divided vote, were exculpated by the tribunal of arbitration as in the case of the Shenandoah, a cruiser built, armed, and manned in England, it coaled in Australia; exculpated before it entered Melbourne, inculpated after.

To pay this class it will take less than $1,000,000.

Second. The second class is for claims for sums paid for war premiums subject to the conditions before stated. Five million dollars will cover this class of claims, leaving over four millions unappropriated, as will appear from the following table:

War premiums filed	$6,146,219 71
Not filed, (supra)	2,000,000 00
	8,146,219 71
Deduct for scrip or premiums returned to the insured, one-third	2,715,406 90
	5,430,813 81
Deduct claims which will never be filed, and reductions by court, at least	1,000,000 00
Leaves	4,430,813 81

It is claimed that this class of claims will absorb the whole of the award. I say, after the most careful examination—assuming that the tribunal which has so far acted wisely, justly, and with great discrimination, will observe the same rules of evidence hereafter as heretofore, that there will be left four, if not five, million dollars in the Treasury. In my judgment, the war-premium claims will not amount to more than $4,500,000 when reduced to judgments.

Before stating as to the third class created by the bill, I will say there are some who think that prisoners taken by these cruisers and suffering injuries thereby should be paid before any of the money goes to insurance companies; but the difficulty of reaching that class is so great, that I still adhere, as a matter of judgment, to the plan proposed by the majority of the committee in favor of paying the residue, after paying the actual sufferers by loss of property, to the insurance companies.

Third. This residue the bill provides shall be paid for insured property destroyed on the high seas by such cruisers, except for claims provable under section 12.

While the insurance companies can only recover their actual losses, and are thereby put on an equality with other claimants, yet when such actual losses which may be distinguished as primary are satisfied, may not Congress, if the amount paid under such treaty is sufficient, provide for losses of a secondary character?

The claim of the insurance companies has entered largely into all the discussions pertaining to the treaty of Washington and the award and legislation thereunder.

The determination of the Congress that all actual losses should first be paid has prevailed; yet it is true that, had not the cruisers in question destroyed the particular vessels insured, such companies would have had the amount they paid to the insured therefor in their treasuries.

The residue of such unappropriated sum which shall remain after paying actual sufferers should be paid, pro rata to their claims, to such insurance companies. This disposition of the residue is more just than the covering of it into the Treasury of the United States or returning it to Great Britain.

Great Britain having paid under the award of a mutual tribunal, and as the national losses of the United States by reason of such cruisers are far beyond the amount of the award, this Government has a strict legal right to cover such residue into the Treasury. But the United States asserted so often, and in so many ways, that to procure the adoption of rules so favorable to a neutral nation it would waive all claims for damages except those in favor of individual sufferers, it would not be consistent with the national honor to cover any part of the award into the Treasury of the United States; and therefore, as it makes no difference to Great Britain whether the money is paid on a primary or secondary loss—within the range of the treaty of Washington—it will be both just and proper to pay such residue to insurers so sustaining a secondary loss rather than to raise an international question to vex the ear of the ages.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question: Whether his bill or scheme contemplates the payment of losses by cruisers not named in the award?

Mr. LORD. It contemplates the payment of losses occasioned by all confederate cruisers on the high seas, because they were all referred to the tribunal of arbitration.

Mr. KELLEY. That was my understanding.

Mr. LORD. And they were all satisfied by the treaty of Washington, and all within the notice given by the United States to the tribunal.

Mr. KELLEY. I have not had the pleasure of hearing all that the gentleman has said, and I wanted that point settled.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 49) to confirm to the State of Florida the swamp and overflowed lands granted under the act of September 28, 1850;

An act (S. No. 398) for the relief of Luther Hall;

An act (S. No. 454) for the relief of the sureties of J. W. P. Huntington, deceased, late superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon;

An act (S. No. 737) granting a pension to Harrison H. Dodds;

An act (S. No. 767) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner;

An act (S. No. 773) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry, United States Army;

An act (S. No. 774) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel Jones, of Virginia; and

An act (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum, for the use of the District.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 26) to remove the political disabilities of Francis T. Nicholls, of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 2238) granting a pension to Fannie A. White;

A bill (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of A. F. McMillen, late captain First United States Heavy Artillery;

A bill (H. R. No. 3179) granting a pension to Thomas F. Wildes, late lieutenant-colonel One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan the use of tents and camp and garrison equipage for shelter of the surviving veterans of the war of 1812 and of the Mexican war during the centennial exposition at Philadelphia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 1592) to re-imburse Horace Glover for property unlawfully seized and sold by the United States Government;

A bill (H. R. No. 1970) relating to the approval of bills in the Territory of Arizona;

A bill (H. R. No. 2140) establishing Cheboygan, in the State of Michigan, a port of delivery; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President of the United States to propose a convention between the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, having for its object to secure uniformity in the coins and moneys of account of the respective countries; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that Mr. COOPER had been appointed as a manager on the part of the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2441) authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes, in place of Mr. BAYARD, excused.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNOTT addressed the House upon the Geneva award bill, and during his remarks the following discussion occurred:

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KNOTT. For what purpose?

Mr. BLAINE. Not for anything between the gentleman and myself; merely for a statement. Nearly an hour ago I was notified by a friend that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] had risen to a personal matter, and had waived his right to speak until I could be present, and that he would speak at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD.] I merely wanted to notify the gentleman of my presence, and to ascertain what his views and desires were.

Mr. KNOTT. I reckon the gentlemen can settle that privately.

Mr. BLAINE. The announcement was made publicly.

Mr. TARBOX. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] is in error in his informantion as to any notice I gave when it would suit my pleasure to again rise to the privileged question. I choose to select my own occasion for that purpose, and that is not at this time.

Mr. BLAINE. I understood that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] was proceeding when my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] interrupted him by the suggestion that I was not present.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not yield further.

Mr. BLAINE. I would ask if the gentleman proposes to avail himself of the floor when I am not present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BLACKBURN.) The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] is not in order at this time.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] will not cut me off.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine is not in order as long as the gentleman from Kentucky declines to yield further.

Mr. KNOTT. I supposed the matter was settled; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] said that he was not ready to go on at this time.

Mr. EDEN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to know whether the gentleman proposes to go on when I am absent?

Mr. RANDALL. He has said that he does not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] yield any further?

Mr. KNOTT. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. TARBOX.]

Mr. TARBOX. I will simply respond to the question of the gentleman whether I intend to proceed in his absence by saying that I certainly do not. I wish to speak when he is present, and shall do so.

DISTRIBUTION OF GENEVA AWARD.

[Mr. KNOTT resumed and concluded his remarks. They will appear in the Appendix.]

RECESS.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock, and I ask unanimous consent that to-night's session shall be set aside for debate upon this subject only, no business to be transacted.

Mr. MCCRARY. I desire to retain my place in this discussion, and I do not wish to go on before to-morrow morning.

Mr. MORRISON. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that there are a number of gentlemen here who desire to speak to-night.

No objection was made.

Mr. DURHAM. I would suggest to the gentleman that he make his motion for a recess until eight o'clock, as the hour is late now.

Mr. MORRISON. I will modify my motion so as to move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MACDOUGALL was granted leave of absence for two weeks from to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, was granted leave of absence for two days.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRISON'S motion, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House re-assembled at eight o'clock p. m., Mr. COX in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session this evening will be devoted to the discussion of the Gevena award bill; no vote to be taken and no other business to be transacted.

Mr. DAVY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my views very briefly in relation to the bill now under consideration. I for one am not in favor of the proposition entertained by gentlemen on this floor that the insurance companies who have paid losses upon policies of insurance covering vessels and property destroyed by certain privateers which England allowed to sail from her ports upon the high seas ought to be excluded from receiving any portion of this fund unless they can show that the premiums received by them during the war did not exceed the losses paid. Now, sir, in considering this question it is important to ascertain, first, whether this money belongs to the United States or not. If it does, then she has a perfect right to do what she chooses with it. She may refuse to pay any of these claims; she may appropriate it to any purpose she sees fit. But if it is a trust fund, she has no right to do with it as she pleases. If she obtained this money for those who suffered losses, then she holds it in trust, subject to the rights of those whose claims were allowed by the Geneva tribunal.

When this case on the part of the Government of the United States was served upon the English government or her representatives, that government raised the objection that claims for indirect losses, such as "the enhanced payments of insurance," were not embraced within the scope or intention of the arbitration. England demanded that these claims should be withdrawn; but our Government declined to withdraw them. A long diplomatic correspondence ensued upon this subject, which will be found in volume 2 of the documents or papers relating to the treaty.

In June, 1872, when the arbitrators assembled at Geneva, the adjustment of this question not having been arrived at by the representatives of the two great governments, our Government insisted that these remote claims should be allowed. The English counsel asked for an adjournment, which was granted till the following Monday, for consultation. When the arbitrators again assembled the following proceedings took place, as will appear by the official report found in volume 2 of the documents, beginning at page 577:

No. 112.—Mr. Davis to Mr. Fish.

[Telegram.]

GENEVA, June 19, 1872. (Received 4.50 p. m.)

Tribunal will this morning make declaration reciting British motion for adjournment, and reasons given for making it, namely, the differences between the governments as to competency of tribunal to determine the three classes of indirect claims, and then continues:

"The arbitrators do not propose to express or imply any opinion upon the point thus in difference between the two governments as to the interpretation or effect of the treaty, but it seems to them obvious that the substantial object of the adjournment must be to give the two governments an opportunity of determining whether the claims in question shall or shall not be submitted to the decision of the arbitrators, and that any difference between the two governments on this point may make the adjournment unproductive of any useful effect, and after a delay of many months, during which both nations may be kept in a state of painful suspense, may end in a result which it is to be presumed both governments would equally deplore, that of making this arbitration wholly abortive. This being so, the arbitrators think it right to state that after the most careful perusal of all that has been urged on the part of the Government of the United States in respect of these claims, they have arrived, individually and collectively, at the conclusion that these claims do not constitute, upon the principles of international law applicable to such cases, good foundation for an award of compensation or conputation of damages between nations; and should, upon such principles, be wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal in making its award, even if there were no disagreement between the two governments as to the competency of the tribunal to decide thereon. With a view to the settlement of the other claims, to the consideration of which by the tribunal no exception has been taken on the part of Her Britannic Majesty's government, the arbitrators have thought it desirable to lay before the parties this expression of the views they have formed upon the question of public law involved, in order that, after this declaration by the tribunal, it may be considered by the Government of the United States whether any course can be adopt d respecting the first-mentioned claims which would relieve the tribunal from the necessity of deciding upon the present application of Her Britannic Majesty's government."

DAVIS.

No. 113.—Mr. Davis to Mr. Fish.

[Telegram.]

GENEVA, June 19, 1872. (Received at 6 p. m.)

The counsel write me as follows:

"We are of the opinion that the announcement this day made by the tribunal must be received by the United States as determinative of its judgment upon the question of public law involved, upon which the United States have insisted upon taking the opinion of the tribunal. We advise, therefore, that it should be submitted to, as precluding the propriety of further insisting upon the claims covered by this declaration of the tribunal, and that the United States, with the view of maintaining the due course of the arbitration on the other claims without adjournment, should announce to the tribunal that the said claims covered by its opinion will not be further insisted upon before the tribunal by the United States, and may be excluded from all consideration by the tribunal in making its award."

DAVIS.

No. 114.—Mr. Fish to General Schenck.

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 22, 1872.

Send following by telegraph, and also by mail, without delay, to Davis, Geneva:

"Mr. Fish to Mr. Davis.

"Your telegram of 19th informs me that the tribunal has made a declaration stating that the arbitrators have arrived at the conclusion that a class of the claims set forth in the case presented in behalf of the United States do not constitute, upon the principles of international law applicable to such cases, a good foundation for an award of compensation or computation of damages between nations, and should, upon such principles, be wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal in making up its award.

"You also inform me that the counsel of this Government before the tribunal at Geneva have advised in writing that they are of opinion that the announcement thus made by the tribunal must be received by the United States as determinative of its judgment upon the question of public law involved, upon which the United States have insisted upon taking the opinion of the tribunal; that the counsel advise, therefore, that this judgment be submitted to as precluding the propriety of further insisting upon the claims covered by the declaration of the tribunal; and that the United States, with a view of maintaining the due course of arbitration on the other claims, without adjournment, should announce its opinion that the claims referred to by the tribunal will not be further insisted upon by the United States, and may be excluded from its consideration by the tribunal in making its award.

"I have laid your telegrams before the President, who directs me to say that he accepts the declaration of the tribunal as its judgment upon a question of public law, which he had felt that the interests of both governments required should be decided, and for the determination of which he had felt it important to present the claims referred to for the purpose of taking the opinion of the tribunal.

"This is the attainment of an end which this Government had in view in the putting forth of these claims. We had no desire for a pecuniary award, but desired an expression by the tribunal as to the liability of a neutral for claims of that character. The President, therefore, further accepts the opinion and advice of the counsel as set forth above, and authorizes the announcement to the tribunal that he accepts their declaration as determinative of their judgment upon the important question of public law upon which he had felt it his duty to seek the expression of their opinion; and that, in accordance with such judgment and opinion, from henceforth he regards the claims set forth in the case presented on the part of the United States for loss in the transfer of the American commercial marine to the British flag, the enhanced payment of insurance, and the prolongation of the war, and the addition of a large sum to the cost of the war, and the suppression of the rebellion, as adjudicated and disposed of; and that, consequently, they will not be further insisted upon before the tribunal by the United States, but are henceforth excluded from its consideration by the tribunal in making its award.

"FISH."

Claims of a national character and also claims for indirect losses were thrown out by the arbitrators.

Upon the subject of indirect losses the court said:

Count Sclopis, on behalf of all the arbitrators, then declared that the said several claims for indirect losses mentioned in the statement made by the agent of the United States on the 25th instant, and referred to in the statement just made by the agent of Her Britannic Majesty, are, and from henceforth shall be, wholly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal, and directed the secretary to embody this declaration in the protocol of this day's proceedings.

Now, sir, in distributing this money shall we recognize the decision of that tribunal or not? If we propose to be governed by the Geneva decision, then we must distribute the money awarded to us to those whose claims the arbitrators considered Great Britain liable for. A nation cannot afford to transgress the plain principles of justice and honor any more than individuals. I maintain, sir, that we only hold this money in trust for those who sustained direct losses. It must be applied to the purposes for which the arbitrators designed it. What right have we to exclude the class of claimants in whose name we presented our demands to Great Britain, and for whom the money was awarded? If we intended to exclude them it should have been done when the Government called on our citizens to present their claims. If we did not intend that the insurance companies should be paid, we should have said so. We did not say so; and can we now exclude them without doing great injustice to them, and without bringing dishonor to our Government? Let us, sir, carry out the very spirit and letter of the treaty. We must bear in mind that this award was not made to the Government of the United States as a government and the proceeds to be applied to general use and purposes. We obtained it to repay certain losses which we specified and presented to the court for its decision, and it was paid to us in trust for the losses which the findings of the arbitrators set forth. The language of the award was for all claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal:

The tribunal, making use of the authority conferred upon it by article 7 of the said treaty by a majority of four voices to one, awards to the United States the sum of $15,500,000 in gold as the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal. (Decisions and award papers relating to treaty of Washington, volume 4, page 53.)

Thus it will be seen that all claims expressly excluded from the consideration of the tribunal cannot justly be claimed to have been referred to its consideration; and none will contend that such claims, as were expressly and deliberately excluded from the consideration of the arbitrators with the consent of both parties, were "referred to the consideration" of said tribunal.

The honor of the American people will not permit us to disregard the conditions upon which we received this money from a friendly power, as clearly indicated by the action of the arbitrators at Geneva.

I, for one, would be glad if our Government could rightfully and legally distribute this money among all those who had sustained either direct or indirect losses, but I do not see how she can honorably do it. She cannot without ignoring the decisions of the Geneva tribunal.

I claim, sir, that we have no moral or legal right to depart from the judgment of that tribunal. If a government has that right, then with equal propriety she may depart from all principles of international law. The Government of the United States, after all national claims had been thrown out, still insisted upon the payment of the private claims of her citizens, and among them the claims of the insurance companies, our Government representing all the time that it wanted payment for them in order to indemnify them out of the sum awarded, leading the arbitrators to believe that they were presented in good faith. We insisted that the sum to be awarded should be large enough to cover all private claims, otherwise the United States might be called upon to make up to the private claimants what the arbitrators failed to give. Now, after we have insisted before the arbitrators that these claims should be allowed, how can we refuse to pay them?

It would be claimed at once by Great Britain that we presented to the Geneva tribunal and asked that certain private claims or direct losses be allowed, and then disposed of the money awarded to pay such specific claims contrary to the spirit and decision of said award. I ask you could we in the disbursement of this money thus violate the conditions upon which it was received without degrading ourselves in the estimation of the civilized world? It appears, sir, that the officers of our Government who received this money regarded it as a trust fund, for the certificate of deposit or bond which was issued was in these words:

The United States of America are indebted to Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State, in trust, to be held subject to the future disposition of Congress, in the sum of $15,500,000.

Now, sir, I admit we can exercise an arbitrary and sovereign power and do whatever we choose with this money because it is within our grasp and the claimants must submit. They are powerless, because there is no appeal from our decision. They cannot sue the Government or compel her to pay them a single dollar.

But, sir, upon what principle of law or justice can we do it? And upon what principle can we deprive the underwriter of his claim to this money, and give it to a class of claimants who were not recognized before the Geneva tribunal? If we compel the underwriters to give an account of their profits, that we may determine how much to pay them, why not compel those who paid war premiums to render an account and compel them to show whether they have not received compensation in profits sufficient to overbalance the extra premiums which they have paid? Why is it not just as reasonable to compel the merchant to show a balance of losses over his profits before recovery as it is the underwriter? The reasoning applies with equal force to the one as to the other. Take the vessels and cargoes destroyed that were insured; the owners were paid for their losses by the insurance companies according to the contract of insurance. Then, as these companies in fact sustained the loss, equity and justice as well as the decision of the arbitrators at Geneva demand that they should receive their share of the damages awarded. We ought not as legislators to be influenced by any feeling of prejudice which we may have against insurance companies. It is our duty to do right and protect the honor and credit of the nation under all circumstances.

The arbitrators only held Great Britain liable for depredations committed by certain named confederate cruisers. But, by the bill reported by the majority of the committee, it is proposed to pay a class of claimants who were distinctly ruled out before the Geneva tribunal. Now, after our Government agreed to abide by the rulings of that court and received the money awarded in trust for such claimants as were recognized at Geneva, we never can appropriate said money in payment of such demands as were excluded by the tribunal from its consideration in making up the award without greatly impairing the good name and integrity of the nation. It would be bad enough for Congress to disregard the settled rules and principles of law between private individuals; but to ignore the decisions of a great international court, chosen to settle the dispute between two great nations, would not only be bad faith on our part toward a friendly nation, but an unwarrantable infringement upon the rights of a large and worthy class of our own citizens.

Now, sir, aside from the decisions of the Geneva tribunal, there are certain legal principles which should govern our action in this case.

I believe that this question as between the underwriter and the insured must be decided upon legal principles. The underwriter must be treated as a surety. By the contract of marine insurance, the company becomes the surety against the loss for the owner. And in case of loss, such company, according to the acknowledged laws of the land, stands in the place of, and succeeds to, all the rights of the owner.

The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that the insurer in such cases is entitled to the right of subrogation, and succeeds to all the rights of the owner, including the right to all moneys recovered on account of loss or destruction.

Story speaks of the doctrine as derived from the civil law. He says:

By the contract of marine insurance the company becomes the surety against loss for the owner, and in case of loss, like any other surety, becomes entitled to stand in the place of the creditor; the company succeeds to all the rights of the owner, including the right to recover the vessel if restored, and all moneys recovered on account of its loss or destruction.

In the case of Hall & Long vs. Railroad Company, 13 Wallace Reports, 376, the court held "that the insurer stood practically in the position of a surety he is entitled to all the means of indemnity which the satisfied owner held against the party primarily liable." It rests upon the broadest and clearest principles of law and justice, because the insurance and the rate of premium are based upon the principles of subrogation. If the underwriters are not entitled to the indemnity, then, sir, I ask, who is entitled to it? For the owner has already been indemified for his loss under the contract which he made with the insurance company.

The English lawyers before the Geneva tribunal even admitted the right of the insurance companies to be subrogated. The counsel for Great Britain said:

> The American insurance companies who have paid the owners as for a total loss are, in our opinion, entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the latter, according to the well-known principle that an underwriter who has paid as for a total loss acquires the rights of the assured in respect of the subject-matter of insurance. This principle was explained and acted on in the well-known English cases of Randall vs. Cochran, 1 Vesey, sr., 98, and the Quebec Fire Insurance Company vs. Saint Louis, 7 Moore's P. C., 226, and is well recognized by the courts of America.

In 1835 Mr. Webster said:

> There is no more universal maxim of law and justice throughout the civilized and commercial world than that an underwriter who has paid any losses on a ship or merchandise to the owner is entitled to whatever may be received from the property. His right accrues by the very act of payment, and if the property or its proceeds be afterward recovered in whole or in part, or whether the recovery be from the sea, from the captors, or from the justice of foreign states, such recovery is for the benefit of the underwriter.

Suppose this money was handed over to the court to be distributed according to legal principles and according to the terms of the Geneva arbitration; does any lawyer upon this floor believe that the court would not hold that as between the underwriters and the insured, whatever claims the insured may have had to this money, it becomes subrogated to the insurance company upon their payment of the policy of insurance?

I think, sir, that this whole matter in the first place ought to have been referred to the judicial tribunals of the country, and let every person who claims any portion of this money submit his claim to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is the proper tribunal to settle this disputed question, and we ought not to be afraid to let the question of title to this fund be judicially determined, and without doubt all claimants would be satisfied with the result and justice would be done between the high contracting parties and the cestui que trust.

Entertaining the views which I have already expressed, I cannot vote for the bill presented by the majority of the committee. It takes the money that we collected from Great Britain and gives it to a class of claimants who were not recognized before the Geneva tribunal. Such a distribution of the funds is clearly against all principles of law and justice, and it will greatly impair the high character and standing of the American nation among the peoples of the Old World.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ought perhaps to explain how it happens that I undertake to discuss this bill at all, for it seems to me that it belongs rather to that class of legislation which concerns the lawyers, especially of the House, rather than laymen and men of business, but my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. LORD] requested that I should make an examination of the bill, probably because he wished to have the views of a man of business. I took it up and followed the subject with great interest, and the result was that I had to read the entire discussion in the Forty-third Congress and all the treaties and the instructions of the State Department, and everything in fact that has been done by Congress in reference to this important matter, and I have arrived at some conclusions which differ from the conclusions which are contained in the report of the majority of the committee and the two reports of the minority.

The most important subject of discussion in the Forty-third Congress was the distribution of the sum of money awarded by the international tribunal which met at Geneva to pass upon what are commonly known as the Alabama claims; and no discussion was ever more thorough and exhaustive, receiving as it did the careful attention of the leading members of the Senate and the House. The result was the act which it is now proposed to supplement by additional legislation.

I agree fully with the proposition laid down in the majority report, that it would be unwise to unsettle the principles upon which this legislation was based. In fact, it is difficult to conceive of a case in which legislation, framed upon a new basis of settlement, would be more productive of confusion and unmitigated evil. Under the existing law a court has been organized, awards have been made, precedents have been established, equities have been defined, and money has been paid beyond recall. No one would be reckless enough to pull down the edifice which has thus been laboriously constructed and begin to build anew. Principle and policy alike concur in this case to preserve, and not to destroy. But while we are thus limited by the underlying principles embodied in the conclusions of the last Congress, it is the right and the duty of the existing Congress to cure whatever defects may have been discovered in the law as it stands, and to carry to their logical consequences the principles upon which it is based.

What, then, was settled as the governing principles of the existing statute? First, it is based upon the fundamental idea that the award was paid over by Great Britain to the United States, not as a trust fund to be distributed to particular claimants who had proved losses, but as a sum of money absolutely within the discretion of Congress as to its disposition. Whether we accept this judgment as right or not, it is now too late to re-open the question and proceed upon any theory which would limit the right of Congress to distribute this money, or even to retain it in the Treasury for the benefit of the whole people if it had seemed good to do so. But it did not elect to retain it in the Treasury, but, on the contrary, the conclusion was reached that the fund should be distributed, not as a trust fund, but to those parties, and to those only, who had sustained actual loss and damage by the acts of the confederate cruisers.

It was also decided that this distribution should be made within certain limits clearly defined by the act. It provided that those who had sustained losses by the inculpated steamers without insurance should be paid in full. Those sufferers were placed in the most meritorious class, and justly so. It next provided that those who had had partial insurance should be indemnified as to the excess of their losses over the insurance received. Next that insurance companies should be indemnified for actual losses paid by them on war risks, whether those losses occurred through the acts of the inculpated or exculpated steamers, after crediting the total amount of war premiums received on war risks. By this action the legal doctrine of subrogation was entirely disregarded and rejected evidently upon the consideration urged in the discussion: that no one, whether private individuals or insurance companies, sustaining loss had or could have any legal claim upon the Government in the distribution of this fund, for the reason mainly that the losses were the result of seizures legally made during a state of recognized war. The equitable and not the legal doctrine is the underlying basis upon which the whole act rests. It was admitted, and it cannot be denied, that the insurance companies proved the loss; but because they proved it it did not follow that they sustained any portion of the damage. As a matter of fact these losses were, except in a few cases involving no great amount, recouped by imposing war rates of insurance upon the insured, and to the extent that insurance companies were not thus indemnified they were allowed a lien upon the fund.

This statement covers all classes which were included in the distribution provided for by the legislation of the last Congress. That legislation excludes all claims for war premiums, all claims for loss by exculpated cruisers, except so far as the latter losses were allowed to the insurance companies as an offset against the aggregate amount of war premiums received.

Now, then, I lay down the proposition that it is neither competent nor wise for this Congress to disturb this legislation. Whatever might be our views, if the question were still an open one, we are bound by the principles settled and concluded by the Congress upon whom fell the duty and the responsibility of dealing with the question. It is in fact in the nature of res adjudicata. But on the other hand I am equally clear that it is our duty to correct any failure of that Congress to carry into effect the principles upon which its legislation was intended to be based. In fact in the closing debate upon the adoption of the report of the conference committee this doctrine was distinctly avowed, and it was conceded on both sides that the present Congress would necessarily be called upon to rectify errors, supply omissions, and provide for the further distribution of the fund upon the principles of equity and justice. Now two manifest errors appear to me to be incorporated into the law of the last session, the first of which arose from confounding what are known as mutual-insurance companies, having no capital stock and making no profits, with insurance companies having a capital stock upon which dividends are paid. The latter class are organized for the profit of the stockholder alone, and in no respect differ from corporations organized for manufacturing or trading purposes. They engage in a lawful business for the express purpose of making money for the stockholders. Mutual-insurance companies on the other hand have no such object in view. They take profit out of no one. They have therefore no profits to divide and they have no stockholders among whom to divide profits. They merely provide a machinery, so to speak, for the distribution of losses, and not of profits; and all that they have to do is to assess the losses incurred by any one associate upon the whole number of associates for the time being in proportion to the amount of insurance taken by each. In other words, they are self-insurers, and therefore they are in reality uninsured. This will be made plain by imagining that ten merchants send out their cargoes without any insurance whatever. Some of these cargoes arrive at their ports of destination safely and some are lost. In the course of time it naturally occurs to the owners that the loss in any particular case may be too heavy for one to bear alone, and they agree to distribute the loss over the whole number in proportion to the value of all the cargoes. The loss when made remains a loss without possibility of indemnity from any source whatever. Therefore in the aggregate these ten merchants are just as much uninsured as if they had never combined to distribute the loss among the whole number.

Hence, the mutual-insurance companies belong in the most meritorious category; and, but for the fact that they are called "insurance companies" and have chosen so to regard themselves and have come to be so regarded by the public, it seems to me that they might have gone before the court and proved their claims as in the class of uninsured. To deprive them of this right was and is a gross wrong which should be repaired by restoring them to the precise position which they would have occupied if each individual had continued to insure himself without any agreement with any other individual to divide whatever losses might occur.

The second error in the existing statute was made in the exclusion of claims for losses caused by the exculpated cruisers. In calling this an error I do not mean to imply that Congress had not the absolute right to exclude losses by those cruisers; on the contrary, I assert that they had, and I should have had no difference with them if they had in reality excluded them. But, while apparently excluding claimants for such losses, they in fact allowed a portion of them to come in when they authorized insurance companies to include in their statement all damages resulting from inculpated and exculpated cruisers alike, subject only to deduction by the total amount of war premiums which they had received. Take the case of a company which lost $100,000, $40,000 of which was by inculpated steamers and $60,000 by exculpated steamers. The amount of war premiums received by this company amounted to $40,000. The court, on the principle it has laid down, would award to that company $60,000 as the balance of loss, which is, in effect, a payment in full of the amount of loss caused by the exculpated cruisers. This principle has actually been decided in the case of the Mutual Insurance Company of New Bedford, as will appear by the following brief statement:

The Mutual Marine Insurance Company of New Bedford paid for losses caused by all the confederate cruisers, including one by the Sumter, an exculpated cruiser	$88,019 17
It paid war premiums on a part of its own risks, re-insured in other companies	2,041 57
	90,060 74
It received in war premiums	45,863 02
The court of Alabama claims gave its judgment for the whole balance of the gross amount	44,197 74
	90,060 72

Thus it has received in war premiums or from the Geneva award the whole amount of its gross losses by both inculpated and exculpated cruisers and all it paid for war premiums.

Had $41,569.45 more of its gross loss been caused by the exculpated cruisers, the judgment of the court would have been the same, for by the existing law payment for all actual loss on all the war business of an insurance company may be made from the Geneva award fund, provided such loss does not exceed its gross payment for destructions by inculpated cruisers.

Now, then, if it be just to allow the insurance companies payment for the losses caused by the exculpated cruisers, upon what principle of equity and justice can private individuals who have sustained losses by these cruisers be denied equal indemnity? And yet this is the precise inconsistency which prevails under the existing statute, giving in fact a preference to the incorporated companies over private persons, which should never be the policy of enlightened legislation. The logical sequence of the principle thus recognized is that all losses caused by the exculpated cruisers should be paid out of the fund.

There is still one other feature of the existing legislation which is inequitable, and which doubtless would have been corrected if it had been pointed out. The persons who paid war premiums were not recognized by the Geneva tribunal nor by the Forty-third Congress, for the reason, as is clearly stated in the decisions of the tribunal and the discussions in Congress, that the premiums so paid were, as a rule, added to the price of the goods and in reality recouped from the community at large. This view is clearly enforced in the minority report submitted by Judge LAWRENCE. Now, this view is undoubtedly sound, except as to parties who, prior to the sailing of the confederate privateers, had made contracts to deliver goods at fixed prices, either in home or foreign ports. In those cases it was impossible for them to add the amounts which they may have paid for war premiums to the prices of goods specified to be delivered at fixed rates in the contracts. To such party the amount paid for war premiums was an absolute and total loss. Such persons fall clearly within the fundamental principle of the legislation of the last Congress, that all who sustained actual, direct losses by reason of the acts of the confederate privateers should be indemnified out of the fund to the extent of such actual loss, and no further. But I can imagine no other case in which parties who have paid war premiums should be admitted to share in the award.

Any surplus which may remain after providing for the classes thus indicated should be held subject to the further disposition of Congress. It has been suggested that the balance, if any, should be returned to the British government. But when it is remembered that the fund was paid over in a gross sum upon the express understanding that if it should prove to be insufficient to meet all just claims upon it no further demands should be made upon Great Britain—thus, in fact, giving that power a receipt in full—no good reason in equity or comity can be advanced why any portion of it should be returned. The settlement was full, final, and absolute; and it seems to me that it would be little short of an insult to Great Britain, after such a settlement, to offer to return any portion of the money.

The conclusions to which I arrive are therefore as follows:

First. That the stock-insurance companies having received full indemnity for all their losses, and having actually profited at the expense of the community at large by war risks which they imposed and collected, are entitled to no further beneficial legislation, unless we are prepared to overthrow the fundamental principle adopted as the basis of the existing legislation.

Second. That mutual-insurance companies, never having derived either profit or indemnity from any source whatever, should be paid the full amount of their losses, whether incurred in consequence of the acts of inculpated or exculpated cruisers, upon the express condition, however, that the money so received shall be divided among those, and those only, who were assessed for the losses paid, and not to any insured party who did not contribute to the payment of losses caused by the confederate cruisers.

Third. That losses sustained by private individuals from the acts of exculpated cruisers should be paid in the same manner and to the same extent as if those losses had arisen from inculpated cruisers, because this rule has already been applied to the insurance companies.

Fourth. That the war-premium men, as they are commonly called, are entitled to be indemnified in all cases in which they were precluded by actual contracts or other circumstances equivalent thereto from adding the amount of the war premiums to the prices of the goods which they insured.

It will be seen that these conclusions, which are the result of a careful study of the debates of the Forty-third Congress, are not in harmony with any one of the reports submitted by the majority and the minority of the Judiciary Committee. I cannot expect that the mere presentation of these views will lead to such modifications in the proposed legislation as I now advocate; but as they are presented in no partisan spirit, and differ quite as much from my own preconceived notions, held before I had fully examined the subject, as they do from the conclusions of the majority, I venture to suggest them to the careful consideration of the committee, in the hope that before the bill now pending be put upon its passage the amendment which I may venture to offer will at least not meet with opposition from the committee and commend themselves to the favorable judgment of the House.

POLITICAL CONDITION OF THE SOUTH.

Mr. NASH. Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose to crave the indulgence of the House during the present session, in view of my inexperience in public legislation, and especially in public speaking, but the recent speech of the honorable member from North Carolina [Mr. YEATES] is such an extraordinary production in its reflections upon the existing State government of Louisiana and the character of many of its citizens that I feel that I would be false to my public trust were I to remain silent and fail to refute the many glaring misrepresentations of the distinguished gentleman's production. The gentleman from North Carolina has given the caption to his speech, "Economy, Retrenchment, and Reform," and the House now being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I shall follow with a like caption as the text for my remarks.

The gentleman from North Carolina in his speech says:

> I could go through the Southern States and select leading secessionists of the country whom the republican party has hugged to its bosom long ago. There is one distinguished hero and leader, General Longstreet, whose fiery columns were felt on every battle-field but a few years since, and whose name was worth a thousand men to the cause of secession. Where is he to-day? and where has he been for the last eight years? He is on that side, and they think him a marvelously proper and good patriot.

Now, sir, General Longstreet needs no defense at my hands, being a representative man of that class of our reconstructed citizens who immediately after the close of hostilities patriotically came to the front, accepted the situation, put their shoulders to the burdens and responsibilities of bringing order out of chaos by re-establishing the practical relations of the insurrectionary States and the people to the Federal Government. He had political sagacity and independence of character to be among the advanced guards in this patriotic labor of reconstruction. The democratic party in like spirit and for like purposes, as evidenced by the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina, have made General Longstreet a target of their displeasure and attack. The gentleman admits that General Longstreet performed valiant services for the confederacy, and I will tell him that he has done equal service for the reconstruction of the Federal Union; and I do not understand why he should be specially assaulted for the performance of his duties as a citizen. But it seems the special pleasure of the democratic party to assault the character and impugn the motives of all white men who act in concert with the policy of the republican party in the Southern States, as well as to doubt the integrity and ability of the few colored men called to the performance of the public trusts therein. I can better explain my position to the House by reading a portion of the recent report to this House made at the last session of Congress bearing on the subject, and known as the Hoar Louisiana report, in which the honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. HOAR] used the following language:

> Charges of corruption are made by the conservatives against republican officials without the slightest discrimination. They assume that the acceptance of office is a badge of fraud. No matter how high the position hitherto occupied socially, how spotless the reputation, the moment of acceptance of office witnesses an entire reverse. The gentleman suddenly becomes a blackguard, the honest man a thief.

Mr. Chairman, comment by me is unnecessary. The language of this report gives to the world the true secret of the ostracism and menaces of the democratic party against such worthy citizens of the South as General Longstreet; so I will dismiss all further reference to that portion of the debate.

Again, the member from North Carolina, [Mr. YEATES,] further along in his speech, uses the following language:

> Now, Mr. Chairman, to be perfectly serious, we all know that the republican party did not start out in the war with the aim of freeing the colored people. It declared in its resolutions in Congress and in the proclamations of its President that that was not the object. But, sir, the colored man was freed, in spite both of the northern and southern men, by the will of God; and the colored people are learning that. Another thing: the republican party did not willingly give the colored man his right to vote.
>
> A MEMBER. Who did?
>
> MR. YEATES. I will answer that question. They undertook to pass the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and said to the southern people, "Vote for that." You are fresh out of the war, now turn around and abuse and curse your friends and let them die. We would not do that. If the republicans could have got the white people of the South to have voted with them they would have let the colored man go on forever without a vote. But when they found out that the southern people, though defeated in arms, still rose pure and strong in virtue and could not be beaten down in that way, they threatened us that they would let the colored people vote. Is not that the history of the times?
>
> So, in due course of time, when they could not get our votes then they turned the colored people loose and let them vote. What else did they do? They multiplied offices and filled those offices with ten thousand carpet-baggers, who came down and prejudiced the colored people against us. * * * They poisoned the minds of the colored people; they left the country a howling waste and wilderness; they destroyed liberty in Louisiana * * * and in all the States where they had the power to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I am willing to admit with this gentleman that the colored race owe their freedom rather to the providence of Almighty God, who took His own good time and adopted His own means to accomplish this great result, than to any party. Being one of that proscribed race which has been benefited by the results of the war of the rebellion in the providence of God, I take this occasion to publicly offer up my thanksgiving and heartfelt prayer of gratitude to Him who is the Giver of all good for the emancipation of my race in view of the anticipated future which I trust awaits them as citizens of this Republic. But, sir, I cannot agree with the gentleman in that portion of his speech where he announces that the colored race owes nothing to the republican party for the enjoyment of the political rights conferred upon us. I may be no historian, but this much of history do I know, because I have been an actor in its scenes. Let me remind the gentleman what the democratic party have done for us in the past. When the thirteenth amendment, abolishing slavery, was proposed, the democratic party, both in Congress and throughout the country, opposed it; when the fourteenth amendment was proposed the democratic party opposed it; when the fifteenth amendment was proposed the democratic party, with a vehemence only equal to its assaults upon the life of the nation, opposed it. Why, sir, when arming the negroes was proposed, the democratic party opposed it; when paying pensions to negroes was proposed, the democratic party opposed it; when giving the right of suffrage to the colored people of the District of Columbia was proposed as an experiment, the democratic party came forward with its usual philanthropy and opposed it.

Now, sir, tell me where any measure of constitutional law or general legislation has been proposed or enacted for the benefit of the emancipated black race which the democratic party has not strenuously opposed; and, not satisfied after the popular verdict had been rendered in favor of the rights which we have thus far secured, this same democratic party in the South, encouraged and backed by its brethren of the North, has kept a continual warfare upon the advancement, peace, and prosperity of our people. Therefore, I propose to give a timely warning to these stirrers up of strife, what they may expect if they continue this war of races. Ex-Governor Pinchback, of my State, hit the nail squarely on the head in his recent address before the colored convention at Jackson, Mississippi. Said Mr. Pinchback:

> I tell you, my white friends, that this killing off our people must be stopped, and I intend to help in putting a stop to it. Not by force of arms, not by use of needle-guns and Remington rifles, by breaking up this issue of race and by breaking up your whiteline democratic party. The colored people are bound to have their rights, and I advise you who are gentlemen to be the ones to guarantee them those rights; for if you do not, in sober earnestness I warn you to beware of the day when the ruffian class of whites shall unite with the more ignorant class of colored people! I leave you to imagine the result.

Sir, it is not difficult to comprehend the effect of a combination like that named by Mr. Pinchback. When it shall be made, if it ever shall be, the day will be a sorry one for southern society. So far it has been for the interests of the ruffians and outlaws of the South to work with the white-leaguer. But the moment the scramble for spoils shall have fairly commenced there will be a division, and in that division white respectability must be re-enforced by colored decency, or the cotton States will be handed over to a rule as shameless and scandalous as the imagination can conceive. There has been a great deal of opposition manifested by the native southern whites to the education of the colored people. Wherever the republicans have had control, as in Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, a system of schools has been put in operation that would have honored the New England States themselves. But the moment any of them fall into the hands of the democracy, that moment public education meets with discouragement. This is such egregious folly that it is surprising that the people of the South do not see it. The danger to that section is and has been in the ignorance of the masses. Designing demagogues can influence the uneducated and thus compass their ends; whereas, if intelligence were universal, any combination of vice and ignorance would be impossible. Let the South realize this fact and encourage popular education. The race issue is the issue of ignorance. Education dispels narrow prejudices as the sun dispels the noxious vapors of the night. The South needs more and better schools than the North, for she has a wider field for them. Not only has she a large colored population groveling in the dust of intellectual squalor, but a majority of her white citizens are without the facilities for mental improvement. Reform this altogether. Let a spirit of progress in this respect be manifested, and the southern people will find the North giving them a helping hand and bidding them Godspeed in the work.

Mr. Chairman, there are other portions of the gentleman's speech that I might take notice of, but I hardly deem it necessary, inasmuch as I have already noticed those parts of it which apply more particularly to the interests and people of my State.

As to a defense of the whole republican party, which he has seen fit to arraign, there need little be said. We have before us to-day a living and useful illustration of the wise forethought and broad philanthropy of the men of 1776. To-day it is the boast of the republican party that every man born in this country or naturalized, no matter what his condition in life, his race, or color, is an American citizen, and, as such, is entitled to equal rights before the law, and to a participation in the elective franchise. The republican party, which has achieved much for the country, has wrought no greater work than this. It is a proud day for us. Although we have passed through a sanguinary struggle in which thousands of our brave and patriotic citizens have yielded up their lives, yet we cannot lose sight of the fact that at the close of the conflict the immortal principles so happily announced in the Declaration of Independence have not only been preserved, but have grown into practical and living reality. This is the essential creed of the republican party. It is true we have not yet seen unqualified acquiescence in this grand result on the part of our democratic fellow-citizens, but the time is not far distant when even the people of the South must lay aside the prejudices engendered by the late war, and accept in its fullest sense the freedom of citizenship and equality before the law of all men. Democratic conventions may be silent on this subject, and a democratic House may be criminally neglectful of its highest duty; the people themselves may be misled and deceived by political leaders; the "still, small voice" of reason may be hushed and silenced by the turbulent passions of the hour, yet the day is not far distant when this underlying principle of the republican party will be fully acknowledged and accepted by all the people. When this shall be done, the first great purpose of the republican party will have been accomplished; and it will then be the duty of that party to preserve intact its own great power.

The mission of the republican party is not yet ended. The loyal people of this country, who preserved the Government in war and have maintained its honor in peace, are not yet ready to hand it over to the party that conspired to destroy it and has resisted every effort to make it indestructible. At no time in our history has the cause of civil and religious liberty made such progress as in this decade under the fostering care of the republican party. In giving freedom with civil and political rights to one race it has not been unmindful of the rights and liberties of the other. The same constitutional provision that gave freedom to the black man makes it forever impossible to enslave any portion of the white race. The citizenship secured by the fourteenth article of amendment to all persons born or naturalized in the United States applies alike to all persons, rich and poor, white and black. The inhibition upon the States to make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States, or to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or to deny to any person within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, is a bulwark of safety to every citizen and a protection against the oppressors that might otherwise be created by sectional jealously or local hate. All these constitutional provisions were passed in the interest of personal liberty and individual security. The love of liberty is inherent in human nature. It may be stifled, but not without much difficulty. Whenever it is not gratified there is danger to the state. Gratify it and you insure the safety of society. Neither these constitutional provisions nor any statute passed in conjunction with them oppresses or harms any human being. A government which cannot protect its humblest citizens from outrage and injury is unworthy the name and ought not to command the support of a free people.

These are the works of the great republican party of the nation, which saved the country in war and is able to preserve it in peace. This is the party which must control the destinies of this free country for years to come.

The awful scenes of the late war are passed, and forever. The battle-cry is no longer sounded; war's thunder-clouds have rolled muttering away, and the skies are bright after the storm. The heroes of one side are sleeping side by side with those whom they withstood in battle, and they sleep in peace. The grave has closed over their animosities and a truce has been proclaimed between them forever. Let the living strike hands also, for we are not enemies but brethren. A man with the noblest instincts may succumb to a temporary madness, but he is nevertheless a man, and when the cloud has passed away he is to be restored to a man's loves and rights and privileges. Brother, late our foe in battle but our brother still, this country is our joint inheritance, this flag has always been our joint banner. The glories of our past belong to both of us. This purified land, this great, united people, these broad acres stretching from ocean to ocean, yet bound by the cord of commerce, which makes of oceans near neighbors and of mountains level plains—this boundless wealth, this tireless energy, this hunger for progress, this thirst for knowledge—it is yours, it is ours, and no power can despoil us of it. We alone by our dissensions can destroy this rich inheritance. Over brothers' graves let brothers' quarrels die. Let there be peace between us, that these swords which we have learned to use so well, may if used again strike only at a common foe. Let us sing anthems of peace; let the song be taken up throughout the land; by the shores of the great lakes, by the waters of the Gulf, in the land of the loom and spindle, in the land of gold, on broad prairies, on sunny savannas, let the chorus again and again break forth, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." We have had enough war. Too many widows' weeds are scattered in this land; too many orphan children are gazing upon and lamenting the past. It was a just and righteous war, bravely fought and nobly won. Thank God it is over; and let us hope it will be revived only in memory.

I think the time has arrived for the ravages of this war to entirely disappear. Where any turbulent elements still exist the law should have its just sway, however much we may dread such necessities. And unto every citizen is there a duty assigned. As to what that is no honest patriot can doubt. The elimination of bias and bigotry and the general education of the high and low of every section will be found the true source of our national prosperity; and as the mind is expanded, reason will come forth from the dark obscurity of ignorance to balance with a nice hand the scales of justice.

America will not die. As the time demands them great men will appear, and by their combined efforts render liberty and happiness more secure. The people will be ready and answer in every emergency that may arise. If they have been able to direct and manage affairs wisely in the past, how much additional power will they have in the future with which to mold and invigorate the mighty fabric of the Republic. The union of national prosperity with social harmony, which is sure to come, will be indicated by one rapid reconstruction. Wisdom and knowledge from their highest pinnacles must no longer view the progress of national greatness, but its perfection. From Maine to Alaska will resound the shouts of rejoicing which will arise from millions of intelligent and happy freemen. With such watchwords as freedom, equality, and fraternity no factor of discord will be apparent. The seed has been sown and the harvest shall be reaped, and such a one as has never been known before in the history of nations—a harvest of peace, prosperity, and virtue.

But before this millennium dawns there will be still much to accomplish. However, we may comfort ourselves with the reflection that the path of virtue is sometimes dark; if we follow it steadily difficulties and embarrassments will melt away. The cloud will one day roll off, and the bow of hope and promise will be found in its place. Let us surrender no vital principle; neither let us waste precious time in the idle discussion of obsolete issues. The policy to be adopted must be one that will build up our waste places, cover our broad acres with waving grain, send our ships into every sea, start our factories, bridge our streams, and make the hum of industry resound on all sides. Let us go on as an orderly, law-abiding people, and wait patiently for the time when the reward cometh; for the time when a sense of justice shall once more animate the hearts of all, and malice and hate shall give place to brotherly love.

With the ardent prayer that our Government may remain an everlasting unit, and that the great Commonwealth of Louisiana regain and then maintain her lofty position among the sisterhood of States, I shall close with the prediction that this Government "of the people, for the people, and by the people" will not perish from the face of the earth.

And then, on motion of Mr. REAGAN, (at nine o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLACKBURN: The petition of Samuel Lee, to be re-imbursed the amount expended by him in contesting for the seat of Hon. JOSEPH H. RAINEY in the House of Representatives, United States Congress, to the Committee of Elections.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of Omar P. Norris, for additional compensation as a United States Army officer, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOAR: The petition of Sidney S. Turner, for a renewal of a patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. LAPHAM: The petition of soldiers of the late war, for an equalization of bounties, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PHELPS: The petition of W. A. Norton and others, professors and instructors in Yale College, for an additional appropriation to the board for testing iron and steel and other metals, to the Committee on Appropriations.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 8, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. WEST. My attention has been called by parties interested to the fact that neither the Journal nor the report of the proceedings in the RECORD corresponds exactly with the report made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] yesterday upon the bill (H. R. No. 1652) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Citizens' Railroad and to regulate its construction and operation. The Senator from Kansas reported the bill adversely; but, as the committee were divided, he asked that it be put upon the Calendar. I move that the Journal be so corrected as to contain the request of the committee, that the bill be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill has been placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Journal is right.

Mr. WEST. I followed the Secretary as he read the Journal, and did not hear it so stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the entry in the Journal.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1652) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Citizens' Railroad and to regulate its construction and operation, reported it without amendment, and that it ought not to pass.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill goes upon the Calender when reported adversely if it is not postponed indefinitely.

The Journal was approved.

PUBLICATION OF DISTRICT TAX-LIST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, June 7, 1876.

SIR: In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 2d instant directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish the Senate with a copy of the contract entered into with the National Republican newspaper for the publication of the list of delinquent tax-payers for the present year, and to inform the Senate whether the collector of taxes for the District has charged delinquent tax-payers for the publication of such list in excess of the price paid said newspaper, and if so, by what authority the same has been done, we have the honor to send herewith a copy of the contract with the National Republican newspaper and a statement of the collector of the District, from which it will be seen that in the opinion of the collector no excess of the price paid for said publication has been charged delinquent tax-payers.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
S. L. PHELPS,
Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY,
President United States Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Iowa, praying the passage of a law authorizing the Federal courts in that State to grant a general injunction restraining all persons from mining or other operations, except the cultivation of the soil by actual settlers, on the so-called Des Moines River land grant; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, presented the petition of Sarah E. Cook, James F. O'Brien, and others, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying that the District commissioners be authorized to inclose the Holmead burial-ground; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of W. B. Sherrell and other citizens of Morgan and Winston Counties, Alabama, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Hartsell to Houston, Alabama; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GORDON. I present the petition of S. D. Lee, of Mississippi, praying for the removal of his political disabilities. I will state that this petition has been presented once before and by some mistake was mislaid. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask, I believe with the consent of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER,] that the bill (S. No. 475) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery," approved July 17, 1854, reported adversely by him yesterday, be recommitted. I do this at the request of one of the parties interested.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection to a recommitment, but the bill would have to be changed very much in order to meet the approval of the District Committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, it will be open to amendment in the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Would it not be better for the purposes of the Senator from Ohio to allow the bill to go on the Calendar?

Mr. SPENCER. It is already on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall violate no confidence in saying that the committee, I believe, are absolutely and irreconcilably divided upon the bill. It would be impossible to get a conclusion of the committee upon it, and therefore it is utterly useless to recommit it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to say a word touching this matter. The Senator from Kansas and myself were charged, as a subcommittee, with this bill. We did not agree, and the committee discharged us from its further consideration. I desired that the bill should be at least reported back to the Senate without recommendation, so as to come fairly before the Senate without any prejudice on account of any judgment of the committee. I think that ought to have been done, and I believe I shall venture to request that the bill be referred again that we may consider it again and see if we cannot report it back without prejudice and allow it to go on the Calendar without any report at all, either adverse or favorable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be very glad indeed if the committee would be willing to let the bill stand upon the Calendar without any recommendation. It is a very common proceeding to do so.

Mr. INGALLS. There is no written report accompanying the bill, so that, practically, the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio is met. There was a mere formal report on the bill from the committee, we being unable to agree.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to make a further remark. This bill relates to a grave-yard, and involves a great deal of feeling on both sides. On one side they are capitalists, on the other side there are those who have buried their dead in that place and want some voice in its control. It is a subject that appeals very strongly to the sympathies of everybody, as well as to the sense of right. I think it ought to be placed before the Senate at least without any action on the part of the committee, further than to be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not ask that the bill be recommitted if the Senator from Kansas states that it will stand upon the Calendar without recommendation. I am perfectly willing, after what has been said already, to let the matter stand as it is. I made the motion at the request of a gentleman known to Senators themselves, an officer of the Government, who has a good deal of interest in the case.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Kansas has stated the case. The committee were divided, a majority being in favor of an adverse report. I do not know how we can make any statement on the floor of the Senate which would change the conclusion of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon the statement made by the Senator from Kansas that the bill may stand as a formal report, I think it just as well to let it remain on the Calendar. It will be open to amendment when it is reached, and I will not press a motion to recommit.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 286) for the relief of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 109) for the relief of the estate of I. M. Micow, of the State of Alabama, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3263) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, to report it back with amendments. I am instructed also to give notice to the Senate that to-morrow at one o'clock this bill will be called up for action.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1680) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta J. Foust, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3037) granting a pension to Samuel D. Falls, late unassigned recruit Ninth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the report of the House committee.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2198) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha R. Robinson, of Portsmouth, Ohio, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 31) granting a pension to Patrick Glackin, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1936) granting a pension to John Haley, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2295) granting a pension to Thomas Leach, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HOWE, from the Joint Committee on the Library, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 910) to provide for the construction of a new library building.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A petition of citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, praying to have donated to them a certain amount of condemned cannon for the erection of a bronze monument to commemorate the battle of Fort Moultrie, fought June 26, 1776;

The letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Captain J. M. Hamilton, praying that the date of his commission be changed from June 6, 1867, to July 28, 1866;

The petition of Alexander Brigham, praying the passage of an act giving him back pay and bounty for services rendered in the First Michigan Cavalry;

The petition of James T. Shelley, praying to be re-imbursed for the amount of certain moneys expended by him in recruiting, organizing, and drilling troops for the United States Army during the late war;

The petition of Charles Edward Nott, of Northampton, Massachusetts, praying Congress to provide by law for a permanent centennial star on our national flag;

The memorial of Tarvin C. Grooms, late of the One hundred and fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying compensation as first lieutenant from November 15, 1863, to February 1, 1864; and

The memorial of James G. Gibbes, of Columbia, South Carolina, praying the Government to refund him moneys advanced to Union soldiers during the late war.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William Martin, late of the Fifty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying for back muster and pay as chaplain of the Fifty-third Indiana Volunteers, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2620) granting a pension to Jonas A. Bigelow, Company K, Fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1849) granting a pension to Abigail S. Dawney, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3495) for the relief of the mail contractors on route No. 19319, in Tennessee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 547) for the relief of settlers upon certain lands in the State of Minnesota, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2701) granting a pension to Nancy H. Blacknall, widow of Thomas Y. Blacknall, late private Company L, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Butler County, Pennsylvania, praying the passage of an act granting a pension to Hamilton Gillespie, late a private in Company K, Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

MARY H. BARTLETT.

Mr. BOOTH. I am also instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 803) to repeal an act granting a pension to Mary H. Bartlett, approved January 28, 1873, to report it without amendment. This bill repeals the pension of this lady because she was married at the time the bill giving her a pension was approved. I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It repeals the act granting a pension to Mary H. Bartlett, widow of E. W. Bartlett, late acting steersman on the United States steam-ram Monarch, approved January 28, 1873.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICERS DETAILED AS INSTRUCTORS.

Mr. GORDON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 166) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it with an amendment and ask the immediate consideration of the bill. It is important that it should be acted upon now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 5 to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

That section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read, "but the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed thirty at any time," instead of twenty, as in said section provided.

Mr. GORDON. The bill merely authorizes the increase of the number of officers detailed to drill the boys and to teach military tactics at the different academies, under the law of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 911) to fix the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 912) for the relief of Thomas H. Halsey, paymaster United States Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 913) to establish post-roads in Missouri; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 2473) to authorize claimants upon even-numbered sections of land within the twenty-mile limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad to make proof and payment for their claims at the ordinary minimum rate of $1.25 per acre be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

RAILROAD GRANTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. MAXEY. I offered a resolution the day before yesterday which went over under the objection of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] who now withdraws his objection. I proposed that the resolution should instruct the Committee on the Judiciary. I have been since informed by the chairman of that committee that, on account of the amount of work they have, he prefers it to go to the Committee on Railroads. I ask that that change be made.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolutions, submitted by Mr. MAXEY on the 6th instant:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, instructed to ascertain whether or not the railroad corporations, or any of them, mentioned under acts—

First, an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extensions to Red River," approved July 25, 1866.

Second, an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the southern branch of the Union Pacific Railway and Telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas," approved July 26, 1866.

Third, an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," approved July 27, 1866—

Have issued any bonds or securities of any kind predicated upon the conditional grants of the lands of the Indians of the Indian Territory claimed by said companies or corporations under the above-mentioned acts; and, if it be ascertained that such bonds or securities have been so issued, then it shall be the duty of the said committee to discover the amount of the same, in what hands they are held, and whether or not the public faith of the United States is pledged for their payment or redemption.

Resolved further, That the said committee, in the discharge of the duties hereby imposed, be, and they are hereby, authorized to call for persons and papers, and be required to report the result of their investigations to the Senate as early as practicable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] to amend the resolution by striking out "the Committee on the Judiciary" and inserting "the Committee on Railroads."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The motion was agreed to.

SEWERAGE ON TIBER CREEK.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to inquire and report to the Senate whether the system of sewerage along Tiber Creek north of the Capitol has been completed, and, if not, to furnish an estimate of the cost of connecting sewers to drain the surface-water of the valley of said Tiber Creek and the several streets crossing the same, and to state what effect, if any, the failure to drain the surface-water in said valley has had or will probably have upon the public health.

CIRCUIT-COURT JURISDICTION.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 240) relating to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to suggest that there is a virtual substitute for the bill, consisting of two sections. If the Secretary will just read the amendment, doubtless no Senator will care to hear the original bill; it is somewhat long.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee report to strike out the second and third sections of the bill.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the first section by inserting after the word "injunctions," in line 3, the word "duly;" by inserting after the word "circuit," in line 4, the words "justice or;" in line 6, by striking out "at law or in equity;" in line 7, after the word "court," by inserting "and duly served;" in line 7, after the word "shall," by inserting "unless otherwise provided in the order or decree;" in line 9, after the word "proceeding," by inserting "duly served with such injunction;" and after the words "United States," in line 11, by inserting "and elsewhere;" so as to make the section read:

That an injunction duly issued by the circuit court of any judicial circuit of the United States, or by the circuit justice or judge of any judicial circuit of the United States, in an action or proceeding pending in said court and duly served, shall, unless otherwise provided in the order or decree, be binding on and operative against the defendant or defendants in said action or proceeding duly served with such injunction in every judicial circuit of the United States and elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the second and third sections, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the said defendant or defendants shall have the right, on due and proper notice to the plaintiff or plaintiffs in said action, to move to dissolve, vacate, or modify the said injunction for the judicial circuit in which said motion is made, and the circuit court or circuit judge shall have jurisdiction on sufficient cause to dissolve, vacate, or modify said injunction in and for the judicial circuit of the circuit court or circuit judge in which said motion is made.

SEC. 3. That every circuit court or circuit judge of the United States shall have jurisdiction, according to the rules and practice of the court, to punish, as for a contempt of court, any person violating within the judicial circuit of said court or judge an injunction legally issued by any other circuit court or circuit judge, and duly served on said person in the judicial circuit in which the said injunction was issued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section [4] 2:

And provided further, That this section shall not apply to any case unless the same shall have been instituted within seven years next after the first publication or performance of such play or drama.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That it shall be no defense or bar to an action or a motion on the part of the proprietor or owner of the origial manuscript of a theatrical play or drama to restrain and enjoin the public performance, representation, or exhibition of said play or drama on the stage, in violation of the rights of said proprietor or owner in or to said play or drama, that the said play or drama has been printed or published: Provided always, That the said play or drama was not printed or published before the plaintiff in said action or on said motion became proprietor or owner of the same by purchase or otherwise: And provided further, That this section shall not apply to any case unless the same shall have been instituted within seven years next after the first publication or performance of such play or drama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF P. B. S. PINCHBACK.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report made by myself from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on the 17th of April of the present year, providing for the compensation and mileage of Mr. Pinchback, late a contestant for a seat in this body.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback, late contestant for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, be allowed an amount equal to compensation and mileage of a Senator from the beginning of the term for which he was a contestant up to the period of the determination of the contest by the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the report be read in this case. It is very brief.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not offer that resolution this morning. Certainly it will lead to debate, and if the object is to pass it in the morning hour, it will not be accomplished.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it be not passed in the morning hour, it certainly will not be passed at this session, it seems to me.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It certainly will not be passed in the morning hour. It will lead to debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the resolution will be taken up. I think as a matter of justice to Mr. Pinchback and to this body the resolution ought to be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves the present consideration of the resolution which has been read.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if he purposes to take up this resolution to the exclusion of the regular order for one o'clock?

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not interfere with that.

Mr. MITCHELL. It does not interfere with it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have no objection, then.

The question being put, there were on division—ayes 16, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. MITCHELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on all political questions, and as this has somewhat that appearance from the vote now being taken, I decline to vote. I would vote for taking up the resolution if he were here, and I presume he would vote against it.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CONKLING, (after having first voted in the affirmative.) I voted to take up this resolution, which I am in favor of doing. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. KERNAN] who is unavoidably absent, and has been for several days, on all political questions; and on referring to my friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] he expresses the opinion that this is a political question; and therefore I prefer to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission will be given to withdraw the vote if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired on political questions generally with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN;] and after the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from New York, on the advice of the Senator from Kentucky, I will not vote.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest that I understand the three Senators who have gone to Mississippi on the investigating committee are paired on all political questions, and I believe this is regarded as one.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will say that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] and I are paired on the bankrupt law, and on nothing else. As to whether he is paired with anybody else on any other question I do not know.

Mr. COOPER. On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN,] and therefore do not vote. I do not know how he would vote on this motion to take up.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, is this a political question?

Mr. SARGENT. That is not a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to determine; that is for the Senator from North Carolina to decide.

Mr. MORTON. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] are paired on all political questions with their colleagues on the Mississippi Committee, [Messrs. BAYARD and MCDONALD.] That this is regarded as such I have no doubt.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Clayton, Cragin, Ferry, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, West, and Wright—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Caperton, Christiancy, Cockrell, Dennis, Eaton, Gordon, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Whyte, and Withers—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Windom—35.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2575) to amend sections 3893 and 3894 of the Revised Statutes, providing a penalty for mailing obscene books and other matters therein contained, and prohibiting lottery circulars passing through the mails;

A bill (H. R. No. 3670) authorizing the Nebraska City Bridge Company to construct a ponton-railway bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City, in Otoe County, Nebraska;

A bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 2) to repeal section 2303 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, making restrictions in the disposition of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2456) to release any title of the United States to a certain tract of land in Braxton County, West Virginia, to Sarah Wilson; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

NATIONAL-BANK RECEIVERS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference appointed by the two Houses on House bill No. 2441, authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes, after full and free conference, have agreed upon the following report, to wit:

That the House recede from its disagreement to all the Senate amendments except No. 11, and agree to the same:

That the Senate recede from its amendment No. 11, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: Amend the proviso so that it will read:

Provided, That such savings banks now established shall not be required to have a paid-in capital exceeding $100,000.

JOHN SHERMAN,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
HENRY COOPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. S. COX,
J. A. KASSON,
SCOTT WIKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the residue of the morning hour be devoted to the calling of bills on the Calendar subject to objection.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. ANTHONY. There was an understanding some time ago when a certain point on the Calendar had been reached that the concurrent resolutions and the resolutions should come up and be considered. As the Calendar is called now, the resolutions have no chance whatever. I think they ought to come in with the bills and the general orders, according to the dates at which they were reported. There is a concurrent resolution there that I am very anxious to reach, though I should not want to take it up at this period of the morning hour. I make the suggestion, therefore, that when the Calendar of unobjected cases is next called the resolutions, concurrent and Senate, shall have place according to their date. As they are put on the Calendar behind the general orders, they will never be reached otherwise. I hope that will be generally understood, and that the Secretary will take notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island? The Chair hears none, and that order will be observed. The Secretary will report the first case on the Calendar.

DANIEL H. KELLY.

The bill (S. No. 685) to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WITHERS. Let the report be read, unless the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] who reported the bill, will state the circumstances of the case.

Mr. KEY. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. LOGAN from the Committee on Military Affairs, on the 3d of April:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Delilah Kelly, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report, which was submitted to the Forty-third Congress to the same petition, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill:

[Senate report No. 378. Forty-third Congress, first session.]

MAY 22, 1874.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. No. 841:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom the petition of Delilah Kelly was referred, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

This is the petition of Delilah Kelly, who claims to be the widow of Daniel H. Kelly, deceased, late a private of Company F, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteers. The evidence shows that deceased enlisted in the military service of the United States about December 1, 1861, at Couche's Gap, Tennessee, under Captain David Fry; that while on their way in Lee County, Virginia, the command was attacked by a large force of rebels, and, after a hard fight, continuing from two o'clock till dark, the deceased, the captain, and several others were taken prisoners. The recruiting papers were in the hands of deceased, who had been made orderly sergeant, and, by direction of said Captain Fry, were destroyed the night after their capture, on which account no return was ever made of the enlistment of deceased. The deceased was sent to the rebel prison at Richmond, where he died.

The facts in this case are testified to by Captain Fry and one Thomas Davis, both of whom were taken prisoners with deceased. The particulars are stated minutely, and so clearly as to satisfy the committee of their truthfulness, and the signature of Captain Fry is verified by the War Department.

The committee, being fully satisfied of the justice of this claim, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. LOGAN. My attention is called to the fact that the Senator from Virginia asked me a question. I did not hear him.

Mr. WITHERS. I merely asked for a statement of the facts to obviate the necessity of reading the report.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not designedly refuse to answer. I was conversing with another Senator at the time.

Mr. WITHERS. The report is satisfactory. I saw that the Senator was engaged.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICHOLAS VEDDER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 527) for the relief of Major Nicholas Vedder.

Mr. WITHERS. There is an adverse report in that case, and also in the next case. Let them go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BOUNTIES TO COLORED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 637) to provide for the payment of bounties, &c., to colored soldiers and sailors and their heirs.

Mr. WITHERS. There is an adverse report in that case also.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Why not let it go off the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WESTERN AND ATLANTIC RAILROAD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 177) to authorize the Secretary of War to adjust and settle claims of the State of Georgia against the Government on account of the Western and Atlantic Railroad.

Mr. GORDON. The morning hour has nearly expired, and the bill is likely to lead to debate. I shall have to be absent for a few days, and I will let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be returned to its place upon the Calendar. The morning hour has expired.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BOGY to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, the present bill proposes to revive the issue of the silver dollar of the standard of 1837—412.8 grains in weight, nine-tenths fine—without any limitation of the ultimate issue, and to make it a legal tender for all sums of $20 or less. If I differ from others as to its merits, it is not because of an unwillingness to appreciate their arguments, and I hope to be credited for the sincerity of my own convictions and for at least a patriotic desire to maintain the interests and the honor of our country. If I can attract the attention of the Senate to the character of this bill, my whole purpose will have been accomplished. The bill would seem to be a very little affair, and yet it would by the issuance of a degraded dollar revolutionize the policy and the traditions of the American people. It is urged upon us as a step toward specie resumption, and it is a step, but a desperate step. The market value of a paper dollar to-day is about the same as that of the silver dollar, or a small fraction less, with which redemption is to be offered. There is also pending an amendment to make this an unlimited legal tender or to remove even the twenty-dollar limitation; but the gates would be open wide enough at $20 to let loose an irrepressible and unlimited inundation in the end. The policy of paying small debts in silver and large debts in gold, however, will be scouted by the people unless the metals shall be made of equal value. Small debts due to the poor must be paid in as good money as large debts due to the rich; nor should even savings-banks be compelled to pay in gold in lump sums what they may have received in silver driblets.

But adopt this bill and what a pie-bald, higgledy-piggledy system of legal-tenders we should offer to the world! This view of the merits of the measure has been so accurately presented by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] that I shall only barely refer to it; and in doing so I wish to do full justice to that able Senator, because on a former occasion I find that I charged him with "Pendletonianism" on perhaps insufficient grounds. We have differed widely upon financial questions, but we both voted for the 1879 resumption act, purpose to stand by it; and I am glad to be able to agree with him, so far as he has disclosed his views, upon the present bill. He thinks we promised to make the greenback dollar equal in value to the gold dollar, and that will be the opinion not only of our own people, but that of the world.

But let this bill become a law, with silver bullion at fifty-two pence per ounce, as it is now, and we shall have in circulation—with gold standing at 113 in greenbacks—two half-dollars, or other silver small coins of equal amount, worth in paper 93.17 cents and in gold 82.46 cents; silver dollars in paper 99.68 cents and in gold 88.22 cents; gold dollars standing at par and United States notes worth in gold 88¼ cents; and all these to a greater or less extent, and without regard to race or color, a legal tender. In addition, also, there is the United States trade-dollar, worth 89.76 cents in gold and about 101.42 cents in paper. This presents a heterogeneous assemblage, each one of which would require a letter of introduction to any other one, and all intercourse would begin and end with the words, "I beg your pardon, but you seem to have the advantage of me." The prices of products for sale would be as difficult to ascertain as the old puzzle of school-boys touching the number of cubic feet in a pile of brush.

I listened with eager interest for two days to the speech of the distinguished Senator from Nevada, whose ability and learning upon these subjects do him so much credit, though adorning all the related questions quite as much as the one involved in this bill; but I regretted to find he was not for the gold dollar he so sharply described in his memorable speech of two years ago, when he said:

> This Government pledges its honor that this coin is nine-tenths fine and contains 25.8 grains in weight.

The Senator is now very willing to give us the silver dollar, but a dollar containing just as little silver as possible and worth not over eighty-eight and a quarter cents.

There has been no hint from any quarter except in the amendment proposed by me, which since the last fall in silver will be inadequate, that we were to start silver as a legal tender of equal mint value with gold. The argument offered is for a double standard, but the bill will practically give us silver, and nothing else. We have the voice of Jacob but the hand of Esau. Having no feeling in this matter to make me waver a hair's breadth from what I believe will most conduce to the public welfare and maintain a decent respect for national honesty, I have proposed some amendments, and first to limit the amount of silver which may be used as a legal tender to $5. If that could be adopted, then hardly any other amendments would be pressed by me. Should that fail—and I may very well say that I have no lively expectation that any amendment to be offered by me will prevail, as I greatly fear "Ephraim is joined to idols"—I shall offer the amendments which seek to make the silver dollar as good as the gold dollar, that is to say, containing 467.8 grains of silver, which would be of about the same real value. Here I could wish for the potential aid of the distinguished Senator from Nevada. I much fear he will wait for a more convenient season. Further, it has seemed to me that it might be better to have the silver dollar, if issued at all, so issued as to take and hold the place of small bills, and therefore I shall propose that these shall be redeemed first. Whatever the result may be my duty will then have been discharged. I know that the advocates of silver claim that it is now temporarily depressed and that congressional omnipotence by legislative action can here and now inflate it so that it will float at a much higher appreciation. This I judge to be a great mistake. The cost of silver very possibly has been as permanently reduced by the steam quartz-mills and the "bonanzas" of the Comstock and other lodes as the cost of cotton was reduced by the cotton-gin and the savannahs of the South. It may not be just now the accepted and popular doctrine, but I have a deep conviction that silver as a stable measure of value has been forever dethroned, and that is evidently the distinctly pronounced judgment of the most enlightened nations of the present time.

The Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES,] appropriating all the logic of the wildest paper inflationists, as it seems to me, proclaims that resumption on a gold basis is impossible. Said he, "I tell you, gentlemen, the thing cannot be done! Resumption in gold is out of the question; it is not practical financially; it is not practical metallurgically; it is not practical internationally; it is not practical politically; in short it is not practical at all." And he added, "I can no longer wonder that the interchangeable theory or any other form of paper lunacy has obtained a footing in the land." And he thinks finally the plan of gold resumption not a whit better than that of the demagogues and rogues.

This confident assertion from so high an authority, imbedded in a large array of historical facts, glittering with flashes of denunciation for those who may entertain a different conclusion drawn from the same facts, might have deterred me from venturing to suggest any doubt as to its infallibility, but, fortunately for me, I find an argument ready-made, not so ancient indeed as many of the authorities cited by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, but which even he will feel bound to respect, and which, if I am not much deceived, not only answers the extract I have just read from the late speech of the Senator, but will lift up and bear away the oppressive load of "plutocratic" epithets so pitilessly heaped upon the world's most perverse admiration of gold. If gold, however, is capable of resisting the strongest acids, it may be expected to survive these epithets. Of course I refer to no other argument than that of the Senator from Nevada himself two years ago, when he captivated the whole Senate by a most felicitous speech. I shall read a few extracts from the speech made April 1, 1874. It will bear repetition:

> Does this Congress mean now to leave entirely out of view and to discard forever a standard of value? Did any country ever accumulate wealth, achieve greatness, or attain a high civilization without such standard? And what but gold can be that standard? What other thing on earth possesses the requisite qualities? Its value is represented by the average amount of labor required to produce it. Its scarcity gives a small quantity of it great value, so that it is easily transported from place to place. It is capable of division and subdivision, and also of being reunited—all without loss. It is in every commercial country made into coins and stamped, by national authority, with a certificate as to fineness and weight. It is flexible and self-regulating, and flows by natural laws wherever the exigencies of trade demand it.
>
> Gold is the articulation of commerce. It is the most potent agent of civilization. It is gold that has lifted the nations from barbarism. It has done more to organize society, to promote industry and insure its rewards, to inspire progress, to encourage science and the arts, than gunpowder, steam, and electricity.
>
> The use of gold had its origin in the necessities of mankind. The human heart is set upon it. It will command the proper services of everybody at all times and in all places. The necessities which compel its use are as inexorable to-day as they were at the beginning, although improved systems of exchange have diminished the proportionate volume necessary to do the work.
>
> So exact a measure is it of human effort that when it is exclusively used as money it teaches the very habit of honesty. It neither deals in nor tolerates false pretenses. It cannot lie. It keeps its promises to rich and poor alike.
>
> While it has seen human institutions perish and human governments crumble and decay, it is itself imperishable. The gold that was in Solomon's temple possessed the same qualities as the gold dug to-day from the sands of Africa. The gold of California and the gold of Australia are precisely the same. It defies the corroding hand of time and the friction of the ages. It is the common denominator of values. It makes possible the classification of labor and the equitable interchange of commodities. Gold has intervened in the bargains made between men since the dawn of civilization, and it has never failed to faithfully fulfill its part as the universal agent and servant of mankind. But it withdraws from the companionship of the bedizened harlot called irredeemable paper money, and says to every people, "Banish her before you look for my return." It is the oxygen in the commercial atmosphere, and its absence produces financial asphyxia.
>
> The value of gold is not affected by the stamp of government. That is merely the final and reliable evidence of its weight and fineness.
>
> You must have something with the attribute of extension when you measure extension; to measure weight you must have something of specific gravity; and to measure value you must have something of value—something that requires labor to produce it. Gold has this requisite. The stamp on a gold dollar says in effect: "This Government pledges its honor that this coin is nine-tenths fine and contains 25.8 grains in weight." The Government stamp on every piece of coin is a certificate to mankind that the bearer has rendered a service unto society which is measured by that piece of metal, and that he is entitled to an equivalent service from society in return, payable on demand. Such a draft has never yet been dishonored.

I thought this a sound argument at the time, and hope to be pardoned for thinking so still. Let me read a little more:

I differed from nearly every Senator on this floor in the reasons which induced me to support the amendment introduced by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.] The objection was made by friends of that amendment that it would have a tendency to make gold rise in price. Now, sir, I say gold ought to rise. Every other commodity in this country—butchers' meat, groceries, provisions—everything that enters into domestic use has risen, so that in relation to them greenbacks are really at a depreciation of fully 40 per cent., while in relation to gold, which has been shorn of one of its chief uses by being demonetized, the same greenbacks are at a depreciation of only 10 or 12 per cent. The effect of this is to discourage mining enterprises and depress mining interests. If the Government ever intends to resume specie payments these interests should be stimulated and encouraged by every legitimate means.

Two years ago gold was too cheap; now it is not cheap enough. It ought not to be, according to the Senator, any more than at the rate of fifteen and one-half of silver to one of gold, while it stands to-day at the rate of over eighteen to one. Now let me read how easy it was to get gold for a resumption of specie payments two years ago as contrasted with the insuperable difficulties presented a few days ago. There was then no lion in the way and no lack of courage. I will again read from the earlier and, as I think, better speech:

Gentlemen ask, "How will you get the gold with which to resume specie payments?" As a general proposition, I would say that the Government should hoard gold; that it should take no part in the gold gambling of this country. I admit it would be a great injustice to the debtor to say that specie payments shall be resumed immediately, because he contracted his debt when currency was worth about what it is to-day, and it would not be just to make him pay in an appreciated currency. But he has to pay some time. I would put it off three years, and say that on the 1st day of January or the 1st day of July, 1877, the greenbacks, the national legal-tenders, should be redeemed, either in bonds or in gold, at the option of the Government, and destroyed, and at the same time I would repeal the legal-tender clause as to all debts contracted after that time. This would be contraction, and would cause a reduction in the price of everything. Without such contraction the maintenance of the specie standard would be impossible. The effect of that would be to make the condition precedent to a return to specie payments. Unless we make these conditions precedent, unless we fix that time certain in the future, the people will never commence to prepare for it, and will never be more ready than they are to-day.

It is as though you were owing a certain debt and you asked your creditor when you should pay it, and he should say, "Well, pay it by and by; pay it almost any time." The debtor is never ready to pay a debt when that is the understanding. But if you are told the exact time when the debt is to be paid, you will put your house in order and get ready to pay it. If you will fix a time for resumption, it will not be the Government alone that will resume; that will be the least and easiest part of it. Resumption will take place on the part of the people of the country. If the Secretary of the Treasury alone were to redeem, he would be a shining mark against whom all the banking-houses of the world could make their combinations, and Wall street would assist in the work. They could and would make corners on him in gold, but they could not make corners on forty millions of people. When the people knew that gold was to be the currency of the country at any stated time, each man would have his little amount of gold and it would flow into the country in a thousand Pactolian streams. There would be no doubt about it. The people would be ready. Gold will be found all over this country when you do not banish it; when you permit it to circulate; when you give it its true function.

All I have to say on this point is this: If resumption was possible in 1877 it is incomprehensible how it can be impossible in 1879. The flow of the "Pactolian streams" may be just as safely predicted surely in 1879 as at the earlier period of 1877. The metallurgical, international, and political impracticability that had no terrors then is even less formidable now. We resumed specie payments in 1843 with less gold on hand than we had in 1837 at the time of the great suspension, and in one year's time thereafter increased our stock of gold nearly 50 per cent. The result was similar in 1858, when resumption took place with less gold on hand than the year before at the time of suspension, and the stock of gold increased the following year. The circulation of paper money also expanded at the same periods.

The bill under consideration "to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin" beyond all doubt presents the gravest questions that are likely to have the attention of the present Congress. We were compelled by the urgent necessities precipitated upon the national Government by the late rebellion to resort to a lavish issue of paper money, and the difficulty of retiring it when no longer needed is as great as that of denying the coveted drug to the opium-eater whose will has been conquered and enslaved by its habitual use. To escape from this vexatious calamity the present bill has been offered and offered as a remedy; but a careful study of its provisions, of the policy it will fasten upon the country, and of the results which must follow from the moment of its passage, will show that, instead of being a remedy, it will aggravate the evils from which the country now suffers, and from which we have unavailingly tried to escape.

At the present moment no silver dollars of the standard here proposed are in circulation, and the standard is fifty-five grains less of silver than would be required to equal that of the standard of our gold dollar, which would require 467.8 grains of silver instead of 412.8, as now proposed. Put them both, gold and silver, in circulation, and could we expect ever again to see the gold dollar, or gold of any description? Every man who had a debt to pay or workmen to pay off would use the cheapest legal tender, and gold would be practically and most expeditiously banished. Ten or twelve per cent. disadvantage would more effectually remove gold from circulation than a statutory exclusion.

The limitation of silver as a legal tender to the sum of $5 by this bill is to be abandoned, and the sum hereafter to be allowed is fixed at $20; but there is no limit fixed as to the amount which may be ultimately issued by Government, and it is to be receivable for all dues to the United States except customs. When the country shall have been flooded with this low-priced silver coinage, rushing in for postage, internal revenue, and from all other sources, except customs, at over one hundred and fifty millions annually, can any sane man expect that it will ever be redeemed? No, sir; we make no promises of that sort. We have promised to redeem United States notes and here is a bill presented which nominally proposes to do this but in a coinage of no greater present value than the paper itself! It needs no seer to prophesy, if we take the first step in the issue of silver upon the basis of this bill, that such a step can never be retraced, but must be followed by the universal and unlimited employment of silver as the exclusive metallic currency of the United States.

If the direct proposition were to be made for the adulteration of our standard of legal tender there are few that would have the hardihood to propose it, and yet the present bill practically offers nothing less. We have no silver dollars now in circulation—and have had none for a quarter of a century—and when we had, there was a sufficient protection from inflation or from any undue issue in the fact that silver was formerly valued at a much higher price than it is now. But here it is proposed to resuscitate silver dollars upon a standard of a gone-by century, ighoring the great depreciation of silver, and then to practically make a fourfold increase of the amount which may be used as a legal tender. If the adulteration of the coinage of a nation deserves the blasting condemnation with which historians have visited it for ages, this measure when fully developed will not escape the sharpest criticism of future commentators. We are to restore an obsolete coin and give it room—much now, and all that may be required hereafter—to absorb all the bonanzas now reposing under the Sierra Nevada and all the rejected coinage of half the civilized world.

The learned Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] does not blind himself to the possible profits of this new device, and makes the rather startling annunciation that we must pay the national debt in silver or not pay it at all; and he argues that we may do this legally. This distinguished Senator, for aught I have yet heard, speaks for his side of the Chamber, although in a wholly different voice from that of his great predecessor, Benton, and if his words should be as much respected abroad as the author is here, our bonds now held by foreign owners would be sent home by ship-loads to be sold for whatever they would bring. The world could not afford to trust us. In other words, the Senator would have us copy the example of Austria and make two standards of coin, and, one being greatly depreciated, issue no more of the other, in order to scale and pay off the national debt at much less cost. The price of silver has fallen ever since this question was last before the Senate and need not and does not now cost the Government more than fifty-two pence per ounce. The gold cost of the dollar proposed yields about 13 per cent. profit, that is to say, the gold cost of $1,000, exclusive of the cost of coinage, would be $822.27, and, if made an unlimited legal tender, a million of dollars of our public debt would be worth no more than $822,270. Surely the agitation of such perilous propositions as this is not calculated to aid in funding the national debt at a lower rate of interest. But the Senator from Missouri does not stand alone. Are not the words of the Senator from Nevada, who seeks the same change of the legal-tender standard, even contending for it as a constitutional right, equally radical and significant? He asks for nothing different. He says: "We have thoughtlessly so worded our laws that until we alter them we can only pay in gold." Manifestly that means that we should thoughtfully so word our laws that we can pay in silver. That would scale the public debt at the rate of $177,730 in every million; but would that be honest?

We have for years collected all revenue at the custom-house in gold and have set apart that identical revenue and solemnly pledged the good faith of the country that it should be devoted to the payment of the public debt. This fact cannot be obliterated without obliterating the public honor, not without a plain and palpable breach of the public faith.

Our silver dollar has passed out of use, and the silver subsidiary coins were not intended to regulate the intrinsic value of the standard of legal tender. They were tokens of value, and so long as the amount issued or to be tendered was limited, the actual value of the silver represented was of little consequence and they passed without depreciation. But the moment these limitations are removed their value will be reduced to the value of whatever bullion they happen to contain.

There is no nation now which attempts to maintain a double currency of gold and silver which does not practically limit the issue of silver. The chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SHERMAN] was mistaken if he intended to claim that an unlimited double standard existed in England, as he will find by a further study of the subject.

The silver coinage of England is wholly subsidiary, and of lower intrinsic value than even our own, being in the proportion of 1 to 14.2, and the overvaluation profit upon its issue is wholly reserved to the government. From the annual report of the British mint of 1871 I take the following extract:

The silver coin is issued through the medium of the Bank of England, which is able, as in the case of gold, to judge from the amount in its possession and the demands made upon it at what times and in what quantities fresh supplies will be required for circulation. As, however, silver is a token coinage, representing more than the intrinsic value of the metal used in its manufacture, it is coined for the profit of the state, and not from metal brought in, as in the case of gold, by the public. Silver bullion for coinage is purchased with sums advanced to the master of the mint from time to time from the consolidated fund by the treasury, under the ninth section of the coinage act of 1870.

It is sufficient in this place to point out that under the coinage act of 1870 no obligation is imposed upon the state to coin silver for the public.

This shows that their silver coinage represents more than its real value and the excess accrues as profit to the state, while gold bullion can be exchanged by the owners at its full value for gold coins.

It is also a misapprehension to suppose that Germany, after having demonetized silver, has any purpose of abandoning that policy. When Germany made gold her standard there were many millions of silver in the country, and a double standard was permitted for a limited time to facilitate the settlements of existing contracts; but on December 27, 1875, even the silver thaler ceased to be a legal tender except to the amount of $5. Germany is getting rid of her three hundred and fifty millions of old silver as rapidly as possible without glutting the market, and this undoubtedly contributes something to the depression, not temporary but permanent, of the price of silver bullion; and any one who fancies that Bismarck has made a stupid blunder and will advise the abandonment of gold as the standard of Germany is simply misinformed.

It is true that what are called the Latin states, or France, Italy, Belgium, and Switzerland, had a monetary convention by which silver and gold were made interchangeable at the rate of fifteen and a half of silver to one of gold, but the issue of five-franc pieces, nearly similar in value to our dollar, was limited in 1872 to $60,000,000, and by a more recent agreement has been further restricted to $24,000,000, or 120,000,000 francs. Belgium and Switzerland are, however, anxious, even with this limitation, and though the convention expires in less than four years, or in 1880, to return to the gold standard. Italy, where there is a large amount of depreciated paper money afloat, may prefer a cheap silver standard, and possibly somebody there too may expect in the end to find that the cheapest medium in which to pay off the national debt. In France silver has flowed in so plenteously as to be at 12 per cent. discount, as compared with their gold. The concentration there is so great that it cannot be gotten rid of without immense loss. The Bank of France has gold enough on hand, $250,000,000, to warrant an immediate resumption of specie payments. There are no political difficulties in the way. But the gold, if paid out while it brings 12 per cent. above the price of silver, would not stay in France a moment. Hence the Bank of France may not be expected to resume specie payments, whatever its ability, until silver, of which the bank holds one hundred millions, shall be demonetized. The Government of France cannot afford to permit the bank to exchange or to sell its gold and resume on silver. It will be seen by the latest intelligence that the French minister of finance, finding their position wholly changed from what it was in 1868 and 1870, has just offered the proposition—since this debate began—that no more silver five-franc pieces shall be coined. The trade of France is far too great to be conducted on a silver basis. India, hitherto absorbing so much of the surplus silver of the world, is controlled by Great Britain, and is likely to have the ascendency of gold established there much sooner than we can by our example force any other country to adopt silver as their financial queen and empress.

Thus, while other nations are sorely perplexed with depreciated silver coinage and doing their utmost to escape from its embarrassments, we are gravely asked to plunge into the same inextricable perplexity as a measure of relief. To the extent of our fractional currency I am heartily in favor of the emission of silver coins, and while it is limited to the amount required for change there will be no discrepancy between it and the better standard of gold, if we ever reach that standard; but the moment we go beyond this limitation our silver money will be at a discount, and the oscillations in value will be as great as they have been for the past five years in our paper currency. One of the most potent reasons for a return to what is called a sound currency is to avoid the harassing fluctuations of paper; but a return to silver, judging by the past and present, would positively augment these fluctuations. Since 1870 the price in London, the great market for silver, has varied from 60*d.* per ounce to 52*d.*, or nearly 16 per cent., which is actually more than the variation during the same period of our paper money.

But it is claimed that the depression in the present value of silver is merely temporary, and that if we pass this measure we can not only revolutionize the market here at home, but stop what is claimed to be the almost universal undervaluation abroad, and this notwithstanding it is known that the unprecedented production of silver for some time past will be largely surpassed the present year. If the product of silver in the United States in 1875 amounted to $40,000,000, no one can estimate it at less than $50,000,000 in 1876. A much smaller influx of silver after the discovery of the mines in Mexico and Peru brought about a reduction in the value of silver which revolutionized the money standards of the world, and this when an extraordinary market existed for both coinage and the manufactures of silver. Then Spain supplied the world with the Spanish milled dollar, and the tables of the wealthy were everywhere loaded with silver-plate. India and China then and since appeared capable of absorbing silver to an indefinite amount. All these circumstances have wonderfully changed, and speculation in the future rise of silver bullion may be considered much more hazardous.

The supply of silver in Mexico continues at about $25,000,000 annually, and might be undoubtedly very largely increased under more skillful management. Other nations outside of our own produce annually much more than an equal amount, which, added to the product of the United States, makes an aggregate of at least $130,000,000. The product of the mines of Mexico and South America alone was held by Humboldt, and is now held by Chevalier, as capable of indefinite expansion. To these must now be added the marvelous mines of Nevada, Colorado, Arizona, Utah, and Montana, the owners of which seem to command fortunes never dreamed of by even the possessor of Aladdin's lamp. They may well exclaim, in the language of Holy Writ, "Who hath weighed the mountains?" Large portions of Europe have combined and resolved to use as little as possible of silver, much less certainly than heretofore; and the oriental market at last seems to have been cloyed, or at least is now contented with about one-half of its former supply, and finds no means by which it can pay for more. Gold has found its way there, and some is obtained from their native mines. Silver rupees will not pay for goods or interest on an immense Indian debt in England. It takes gold. Silver even from China is sent to the London market. Japan, the most enlightened among eastern nations, has already, with her increasing commerce, established the gold standard.

When we come to the use of silver bullion in the manufacture of solid plate, there has also been a marked change. Barbaric displays of dishes made of silver have been largely superseded by glass, chinaware, and porcelain; bronze and other metals have taken its place elsewhere; and much of the table-service formerly of solid silver has given way to plated ware, for the reason that while not inferior in appearance, it costs less and does not require a burglar-proof safe. The world, whether the style of living is more luxurious or not, hardly makes any greater demand for solid silver-plate than what existed in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, although in the arts the use of silver has undoubtedly been extended. The potential fact stares us in the face that the proportionate value in 1849 of silver compared with gold was $15\frac{7}{10}$ to 1, while it is to-day $18\frac{13}{100}$ to 1; which conclusively shows, notwithstanding the recent enormous yield of the gold-fields of California and Australia, that the production of silver is in excess of the demand, and consequently has been steadily sinking in value.

Under these circumstances—and I have not attempted to state them too broadly—it would seem almost preposterous to undertake to raise the value of silver throughout the world by the poor experiment of coining dollars worth no more than $88\frac{1}{4}$ cents each, and making them a legal tender to the amount of twenty dollars. If the Consolidated Virginia Mine produces $3,600,000 of silver and gold in one month at a cost, as reported, of only $300,000, then other mines must close up or the price of silver must fall. Twelve hundred per cent. profit, and counted by millions, is brilliant, and may be possibly too brilliant to last. The stock of the great lodes, however, is not yet waning in price. The owners are not overanxious to sell out. Whether the present mines will be exhausted or others even richer will be discovered, no very safe conjecture can be made; but for the present generation it seems clear that with American mines growing more productive, with leading European nations shaking off their heavy loads of silver coin, pushing its dispersion wherever a vacuum can be found, and with a diminishing market in India, diminishing ever since it was gorged by the influx of silver arising from the cotton famine in England, there are likely to be more sellers than buyers of silver, and that at a price, with some variations, tending in favor of the buyer. As a uniform standard of legal tender I cannot hesitate to say that silver must prove a disastrous failure. With a double standard we should have a double lack of uniformity, with oscillations hither and thither, and ever fitfully sinking to the lowest point of either one or the other of the competing metals.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance declared that he had "always supported the policy of encouraging the production of iron, wool, and fabrics." And then he asked, "Why not of silver?" If it needed protection, I should be in favor of putting a moderate duty upon the importation of foreign silver, the only legitimate mode of protection; but such protection would not protect, as our abundance requires a foreign market, and we can produce it cheaper than it can be obtained, except from stocks on hand, anywhere else in the world. If we could only find a market for it, we should not be vexed by this bill, which after all would offer a market first to the surplus stock of Europe rather than to the mines of America. I would encourage the production of silver bullion to the largest extent possible, only I would not put a Government stamp upon it, and say that it should be legal-tender at a price 10 per cent. above its real value, and no other. Ultra protectionist as I have been called, but not very accurately, I have never proposed to stamp iron or copper, and say that it should be accepted as a legal tender at a price fixed by Government and far above the market value. This would be pushing the doctrine of protection rather too far. As long as we have been fasting, I do not think we are so hungry for silver as to offer a bounty like that.

It may also be observed that our interest in protecting the American product of gold cannot be greatly inferior to that we have in silver. Beyond the placer products, exclusively of gold, the quartz mines, yielding silver most abundantly, produce at the same time 40 to 45 per cent. of gold, and but 55 to 60 per cent. of silver. Why, then, should we be called upon suddenly to adopt a measure as likely to depreciate the value of gold as to appreciate that of silver.

It may be sound policy for us to go into the market and buy the silver ingots needed for forty or fifty millions of subsidiary coinage and for Government to profit by the difference between its intrinsic value and its nominal value as a token coinage, though that seems to be begrudged by silver bullionists, who claim that the owners of silver have a right to have it coined free of charge and with all the benefits of the increased nominal value; but at this moment to allow the Government of the United States to go into the market for the amount of silver required for specie resumption would be to take all the risk of the depreciation of an immense sum of silver, and to postpone any resumption until the people holding United States notes and all other public debts became satisfied they were never to have anything better. This is more protection to silver than the American people can afford, and it is a sudden and violent blow at those who favor the gold standard, those whom the Senator from Nevada would call the "plutocracy," or the men who are so unfortunate as to be gold-diggers, not quartz-miners, when they might perhaps earn even more by digging potatoes.

This measure would also be a great wrong upon the laboring-men of the country. They have been long imposed upon by a depreciated currency. They are impatiently waiting for a return to specie payments, when wages and all articles of consumption shall be adjusted upon a solid basis, and wages very likely would be adjusted upon this silver basis because it is metallic; but, being 10 or 12 per cent. below that of gold, the laborer would be the sufferer to that extent, and would be the loser of one day's work in every ten, while whatever he consumed would still be likely to bear the old inflated prices. If he still owed a mortgage on his house or farm, it would have to be paid in gold, but his $20 of wages would be paid in silver. Would not that be setting at defiance the divine command, "Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small?"

Hard-money men may jump at the conclusion that silver in the place of paper would be some remedy for our present inflated currency, but it would be only a change; intrinsically perhaps better, but much more inconvenient; not any reduction of the amount required to be in actual circulation, because of no higher current value. The evils of inflation would remain in full force and to the same extent. All hope of unity in monetary affairs would be forever extinguished. If the time should ever arrive when it should be thought advisable to unload our depreciated silver, the difficulties in the way would be greatly multiplied. The Government would be unwilling to assume the loss, and debtors would be still less willing to accept of a higher standard in the payment of debts. We should necessarily fall into the examples of former ages, and, as silver became depreciated, clip the gold coins, if any remained, or reduce the quantity of gold and increase the alloy they might contain. This process has been fully tried, and if it commends itself to the judgment of the Senate we can try it again by starting a legal tender of silver dollars at 10 or 12 per cent. below the standard of gold, and then gold must either be debased or be hustled out of the country. The survival, not of the fittest, but of the poorest only, is possible under the laws of trade, which inexorably rule whatever comes forth as money.

This measure, however, should it unfortunately become a law, would prove to be a step that cannot be retraced in the policy of a silver currency alone. Gold could not be kept in its company. Nor could our monetary affairs be conducted in harmony with those of other nations. There would be a universal and continuous dislocation of exchange with all other countries, and a positive difference of between 10 and 15 per cent. against us, and for us to pay, in every commercial transaction abroad. The millennium of "a non-exportable currency," sought after by some moon-struck philosophers, would have arrived. This is not, therefore, a measure in accordance with the highest experience of the world, and we "kick against the pricks" when we flout at the wisdom of other nations. At the international convention only a few years since, where this subject was considered by the most competent men of the age, the conclusion reached was in favor of a gold standard alone, and our representatives to that convention fully coincided in that conclusion. But now it is here abruptly proposed to have a gold and silver standard, one being at a heavy discount at the start, and then we are to trust to the happening of such future accidents to silver mines as will cripple the production of silver and thereby raise its present value. The wisdom of the world as exhibited in its best examples among nations and men is to be disregarded, and we are to be suddenly captivated by theories which promise small local benefit and incalculable general injury.

In olden times, when labor was less paid by more than one-half than now, and when silver was rated at more than twice its present value, the circulation of silver was both a necessity and a convenience. In India, China, and Mexico, where wages now bear no proportion to wages in America, silver is equal to their wants, and may be tolerated; but the workingmen of this country, after a week or a month of toil, will not be willing to be paid off in a coin such as may be current with the lowest class of laborers among mankind. The civilization on this continent will not suddenly turn Asiatic. China may be so poor as to accept of silver alone, but that is not the condition of the American people. They are looking forward to the golden age, and will not be turned back to the age of silver, bronze, or iron. Silver may answer for the currency of countries having little home trade and less foreign commerce, but will not answer for the large trade of enterprising peoples, nor of nations competing for high positions in all the markets of the world. Germany has recently made such strides in universal education and power in all the industrial arts and in an extensive commerce, that silver no longer answers her purpose, and at some cost she is replacing it with gold. Silver is equally insufficient and equally inappropriate for the American people or for the United States. If we are to have a foremost place among commercial nations, it must be won by running the race with the wisest and the strongest, and not by stooping to conquer pigmies nor by being content to shine among the dull, and showing vigor only among the decrepit.

By the existing law a resumption of specie payments is to be brought about as early as January, 1879. Many people are supposed to be anxious that this shall not be postponed, nor any hinderances placed in the way. To redeem our fractional currency with subsidiary silver coin would strengthen our power to resume, because fractional currency is redeemable in United States notes, and when these come to be payable in gold, fractional currency would not be surrendered for silver worth 12 to 15 per cent. less.

Thus far as we stand to-day the way is clear. At present we have no silver dollars, and even not enough subsidiary silver coins yet to replace the fractional currency; but in the Treasury and in the country there is not less than $150,000,000 in gold—probably more—and upon a resumption upon a gold standard all this would be ready for circulation. There would be so much capital for the redemption or maintenance at par of so much paper. But start the issue of silver legal-tender upon a lower standard than gold, as this bill proposes to do, and no gold would show itself except for export and perpetual ostracism. The cheapest money would be the only money to be had, and a resumption even upon that inferior standard could not take place until the entire amount required should have been furnished. To purchase silver bullion and coin it might require a series of years. So far as resumption is concerned, we must bear in mind that we have no silver dollars, while we have a very considerable sum in gold. Whether this is in the hands of the Government or in the hands of the people, it will be equally serviceable in the work of resumption.

No such extravagant quantity of gold would be required to be substituted for paper money to bring the latter to par as has been sometimes estimated. In addition to what we now hold, it is probable that one hundred millions would be more than enough. Even gold is much cheaper and the stock of the world twice as large as at the beginning of the present century. Our annual export of cotton, amounting to $189,000,000, is all paid for by the "plutocrats" in gold, or its equivalent. Our exports of wheat and flour and other provisions are paid for in gold or its equivalent, which, with petroleum and tobacco, amount to two hundred and fifty millions more. We have only to pinch our imports and we shall at once increase our hoard of gold. Beyond this, we last year exported over fifty-nine millions of gold coin, and when we come to have any use for it at home, the export of gold will be likely to cease. Our imports of gold coin also should not be overlooked, which amounted last year to $12,115,155. The gold product of the world for twenty-five years has been at about one hundred and twenty millions annually. We have outstanding $370,000,000 of United States notes, but if they were exchangeable at the will of the holder for gold a much smaller sum of gold would sustain them at par, so that not less of paper and gold in the aggregate might circulate together. There is not the slightest danger that ample supplies will be beyond our reach. When gold can be had for paper very little will be wanted. The world's stock is increasing more rapidly than population, and as a measure of value the tendency of even this supreme standard has long been downward. It must now be exchanged for much less corn and labor than it commanded in 1850. Bills of exchange and paper redeemable in gold at the will of the holder have taken and evermore will largely take the place of gold. France has no ore-bearing mines, and yet it is a country which has four or five times as much gold as we have, and holds it fast because they intend to bring their paper to a level with gold.

But if we start out with silver as a legal tender, we shall soon have nothing else, and then I admit it will take a good deal of it to resume specie payments. It might stiffen the market price a trifle, but it would not stiffen our national Government. Nevada cannot hope to supply it all, but must encounter the rivalry of the present waiting European surplus.

It has been argued that a double standard of gold and silver will prevent oscillations. That is not our experience, nor that of Europe. Wherever it has been attempted, even if starting upon an accurate equilibrium of values, a variation has soon appeared which has always practically resulted in leaving only the cheaper currency in the field. To maintain this dual currency, a debasement of the superior money has been the common stratagem. That has sometimes been our own expedient. Our first dollar of 1792 contained 416 grains of standard silver; was to be of the value of the Spanish milled dollar then current, and so remained until 1834, when it was reduced in weight to 412.8 grains, but contained the same amount of pure metal. But, owing to a mistake on the part of Hamilton, in specifying 371¼ grains of pure silver instead of 377¼ grains, it was always about 2 per cent. below the value of the Spanish milled dollar, and 3 or 4 per cent. less than the dollar of 1786. It soon, however, became more valuable than our gold coinage, and very few were ever issued. In our subsidiary coinage the alloy in 1853 was largely increased, and even this coinage all disappeared when brought into contact with paper still more depreciated.

The present standard of gold is also inferior to that which our revolutionary fathers established. In 1792 the eagle contained 270 grains of standard gold, but in 1834 it was reduced to 258 grains, and the gold minted previously was to be received as legal tender at a premium of about $6\frac{6}{10}$ per cent. And now a bill has just been reported from the Committee on Finance proposing a convention with Great Britain by which we are to offer to reduce still further the gold-dollar unit by about 3 per cent.

These changes of the standard of our money have been made most often to obviate the rise or fall in the value of one or the other of the precious metals; but the change is notably always downward, and oscillations continue greater than ever.

A double legal-tender standard of coins cannot circulate together and be interchangeable unless at the time of equal intrinsic value, except in the case of limited coinage of small denominations required for change.

The act of 1873, by which the future issue of silver was regulated, has been referred to as though it were an ill-timed measure which passed "in the interest of a few plutocrats in England and in Germany," without much consideration. The bill, with a full report prepared in 1869, came to the Senate in 1870, and passed the Senate in 1871. It did not, however, pass the House until the next Congress, and then the Senate treated the measure, as all measures which have been once considered and passed are treated, or as requiring little debate; but the bill was not passed without the "deliberate judgment" of Congress. On the contrary, it was long pending and most patiently considered in both Houses of Congress and by their committees, as well as by the officers of the Government, as the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the Superintendent of the Mint, and the Comptroller of the Currency all abundantly show. Any other course would have thrown the depreciated silver upon our own markets, and our customs would all have been paid in such silver. Prior to the passage of this act, it will be seen, the value of silver bullion was calculated upon the silver dollar of account, not upon the intrinsic value of an ounce of silver, and the branch mints at San Francisco and Carson City always had to pay too much for it. * The act of 1873 was the result, therefore, of no narrow statesmanship and was not inharmonious with the prior act of 1853; but was dictated by that prudent forecast which guards the future, and any policy based upon its subversion will be freighted with calamities. But this act only established by law the policy which has been practically pursued by the Government since when the memory of man hardly runneth to the contrary. It started no new policy, but maintained the old. The issue of any large amount of silver-dollar coinage has never been the policy of the United States. From 1805 to 1836 not a dollar was struck at the Mint, and only $1,000 were struck in 1837 or 1838. From 1793 to 1805 inclusive the whole amount coined was $1,439,512. From 1793 up to and including 1840 the whole amount coined was $1,501,822. Since 1840 the whole amount coined has been $6,544,016. But the sum total of the silver dollars struck at all the mints of the United States from 1793 up to this day amounts to no more than $8,045,838. (See appendix A.)

These facts show the inconsiderable figure that silver dollars have played in our monetary affairs from the foundation of the Government, and the groundlessness of the complaint relative to the law of 1873. Spread over the whole time since the adoption of the Constitution, the average issue would have amounted to less than $100,000 annually; but no such insignificant sum seems now to satisfy those who are the supporters of the present scheme of a so-called double standard. No moderate and fructifying shower, but an impetuous flood, is demanded. The double standard of gold and silver may find a place in statute laws, but it is a delusion everywhere else, and practically one or the other, whichever is most valuable, must by the inexorable laws of trade be expelled. We have thus far kept pace with the world, and generally by law or administration held silver appropriately in its subordinate position. To undertake now to champion silver against a world overstocked would be an exhibition of knight-errantry worthy only of the feudal ages.

Silver is urged to the front because it is now more abundant and consequently cheaper than gold. So is copper, so is iron, the ancient currency of Sparta, but our country is not yet ready to adopt any metallic standard of money merely because of its abundance. A genuine standard of money best maintains ascendency by its real value and known stability, of which silver has lost much of the former and can no longer claim the latter.

It is undesirable to place our money in actual use in such a condition as to bear no harmonious relations with that of other nations to which we are bound by the strong ligaments of a large as well as of a constantly increasing commercial intercourse. Our trade silver dollar should satisfy those engaged in commerce with the oriental world, without an extraordinary attempt to hamper that of vastly greater magnitude where gold is indispensable.

Nor will it be wise to degrade our own people to the level of inferior races whose rewards of labor are solely computed in silver, whose genius develops neither agriculture nor manufactures, and whose feeble ambition is unequal to the grasp of commerce. At a season when business of every kind is greatly depressed here and throughout the civilized world, when capital is seeking a bomb-proof shelter from all ventures, distrusting all enterprises, setting nobody at work, and afraid of the public faith of towns, cities, States, and even of nations, it would be extremely unfortunate for us to initiate a policy which may have no other goal than the threatened payment of a large portion of the public debt, not in gold but in either gold or silver, as we shall find most for our interest. Now the scheme embraces only United States notes, but these cannot be properly held less sacred than any other description of the public debt; and some of those who now most conspicuously favor this scheme do not conceal their earnest desire for its adoption without any reservation whatever.

By the argument of my friend, the distinguished Senator from Nevada, and the statistical tables appended to his speech, it would appear that he regards the circulation of silver as the great panacea for failures in business, for fires, divorces, homicides, suicides, and other crimes. I respectfully suggest that this may be advertising rather more than any certificates of cure will be likely to support; and the fact that paper has been the only currency in circulation for the last fifteen years seems to have been overlooked.

No one could hail with more delight than myself any plan by which our public burdens could be honestly diminished, but no plan of using depreciated silver as the instrument of such a diminution at the expense of the slightest stain upon our honor and good faith ought to receive any countenance from the American Congress. We have invited the world to look at us upon our centennial anniversary, and shall we ask the vast crowd that comes at our bidding to make a note of the art and skill with which it has been proposed to scale a part of the public debt by the issue of a cheaper legal tender? A double standard might offer too great temptation—buying in one and paying in the other, as our visitors would think—for double dealing. The public credit is sensitive to the slightest touch of the law-making power, and we cannot afford to give a hint to all the holders of our public securities that, if they would save 10 or 15 per cent. of their investments, now is the time to unload. No greater financial disaster could befall all parts of our country than a panic arising from even a remote threat of paying off any portion of the public debt in silver. This bill, to be sure, only goes now to the extent of making it a legal tender for all dues to the Government, except customs, and to the extent of $20 between individuals; but the arguments brought forth in support of the step would justify the major proposition of removing all restrictions, its main spokesmen proclaim it, and the policy once begun, as it is here proposed, would not be likely to leave the Government any other sufficient available resource. We might continue to pay interest in gold, unless silver should invade the custom-house, but when it came to the principal it would be silver or nothing. For ten years we have been striving to obtain some substantial alleviation of the public burdens by the process of funding the public debt at a lower rate of interest, but this sound policy will be ended from the moment we accept the policy of a double legal-tender standard, and the public debt of the United States will no longer be fundable at 4½ per cent. or even 5 per cent. Our credit might not perhaps be classed with that of the Khedive of Egypt or the Sultan of Turkey, but it would no longer approximate to the highest rank among nations.

Ready as I am to restore to circulation a legitimate share of silver upon almost any terms, I cannot aid in giving it a monopoly of the whole field, and believe it to be my duty, as I trust others upon a careful examination will find it to be their duty, to urge some radical amendments if the bill shall be pressed to a final vote. To me it is of little consequence, but it is to be measured by its possible results upon future generations. May I not appeal to the good sense of Senators, to their broadest patriotism and sober second thought, to see to it that the bill shall here be so shaped as to bring no reproach upon American statesmanship and no prejudice to the future prosperous career of our country?

* Report of November 10, 1872.

APPENDIX A.

Statement of the number of silver dollars coined in the mints of the United States from their organization until the passage of the coinage act of February 12, 1873.

PHILADELPHIA.

1793		1817
1794	$204,791	1818
1795		1819
1796	72,920	1820
1797	7,776	1821
1798	327,536	1822
1799	423,515	1823
1800	220,920	1824
1801	54,454	1825
1802	41,650	1826
1803	66,064	1827
1804	19,570	1828
1805	321	1829
1806		1830
1807		1831
1808		1832
1809		1833
1810		1834
1811		1835
1812		1836	$1,000
1813		1837
1814		1838
1815		1839	300
1816		1840	61,005

Statement of the number of silver dollars coined in the mints of the United States, &c.—Continued.

1841	$173,000	1859	$73,500
1842	184,618	1860	315,530
1843	1 65 100	1861	164,900
1844	20,000	1862	1,750
1845	24,500	1863	31,400
1846	110,600	1864	23,170
1847	140,750	1865	32,900
1848	15,000	1866	58,550
1849	62,600	1867	57,000
1850	7,500	1868	54,800
1851	1,300	1869	231,350
1852	1,100	1870	576,150
1853	46,110	1871	657,625
1854	33,140	1872	1,109,435
1855	26,000	1873	964,150
1856	63,500
1857	94,000	Total	7,022,850
1858

NEW ORLEANS.

1838		1857
1839		1858
1840		1859	$200,000
1841		1860	250,000
1842		1861	395,000
1843		1862
1844		1863
1845		1864
1846	$59,000	1865
1847		1866
1848		1867
1849		1868
1850	40,000	1869
1851		1870
1852		1871
1853		1872
1854		1873
1855
1856		Total	974,000

CARSON.

1870	$12,158	1872	$3,526
1871	304	1873	3,300
		Total	19,288

SAN FRANCISCO.

1854		1865
1855		1866
1856		1867
1857		1868
1858		1869
1859	$15,000	1870
1860	5,000	1871
1861		1872
1862		1873	$9,700
1863
1864		Total	29,700

RECAPITULATION.

Carson	$19,288
Philadelphia	7,022,850
New Orleans	974,000
San Francisco	29,700
Total	8,045,838

Years.	Philadelphia.	New Orleans.	Carson.	San Francisco.
1793 to 1805	$1,439,512
1793 to 1840	1,501,822
1841 to 1873	5,521,028	$974,000	$19,288	$29,700
Total	7,022,850	974,000	19,288	29,700

Total for the years 1793 to 1873, $8,045,838.

Mr. BOOTH Mr. President, the provisions of the bill under consideration, known as the "silver bill," are important; its theory is more important. I ask the hearing of the Senate to some considerations touching both its form and substance.

First, let us examine the bill in its details with a view to its probable practical operation. The first section provides for the coinage of a silver dollar of 412.8 grains of standard silver, and that said dollar shall be a legal-tender for any amount not exceeding $20 in any one payment, and shall be receivable in payment of all dues to the United States except duties on imports; and that the trade-dollar of 420 grains standard silver shall no longer be a legal-tender.

The circulating medium of the United States consists of greenbacks and bank-notes convertible into greenbacks, of gold coin, fractional currency now being retired, and subsidiary silver coin, really a token coinage by a limitation upon the amount to be issued, made equal to greenbacks in value; gold coin being used only in business transactions on the Pacific coast, where it circulates to the amount of about $25,000,000, and by the Government in the collection of customs and payment of principal and interest of funded debt, and worth at this time 12 to 13 per cent. more than the national and bank notes which constitute the great body of the circulation.

Now, certainly one great object to be attained, the greatest, I think, in any legislation upon the currency, is to bring the different currencies in use to one standard of value, and, if possible, to that standard recognized by the commercial world. The new factor which it is proposed to introduce not only does not reconcile those now in use, but is an additional element of variation.

When this bill was introduced about a month ago, the bullion of the silver dollar it proposes to coin was worth 11 per cent. less than gold and 2 per cent. more than greenbacks. It is now worth 13 per cent. less than gold and ¼ to ½ per cent. less than greenbacks. If this bill can be operative at all, the value of silver will be somewhat enhanced by the new use created for it, but just how much no one can predict. If, in the fluctuation of the bullion market or the value of legal-tenders, the silver dollar should again become worth more than the greenback, who would pay an obligation in silver which could be discharged in United States notes? You compel the use of gold for certain purposes but give an option to silver, and whenever it is worth more than United States notes it will drop from the Mint into the melting-pot, but never go into circulation.

In that condition you could only compel its use by withdrawing from circulation all national and bank notes of less denomination than $20, and then you would have the anomaly of requiring small transactions to be conducted and small payments to be made in a medium of greater value than large ones, in place of the absurdity of supposing it will be done without compulsion.

Suppose there shall be continued decline in silver in the markets of the world, and it would take more silver dollars than greenbacks to purchase a hundred dollars in gold or a hundred bushels of wheat, then as fast as they could be manufactured silver dollars would crowd national notes out of circulation, supplanting paper money not by a superior but by an inferior currency. That is the natural law, if there be anything natural about money. I admit that it would be counteracted for a time by the practical limitation of silver coinage to the capacity of our mints.

This is purely mechanical and does not concern the theory of the bill. The tendency of silver to fall below greenbacks would be mitigated, not destroyed, by the inability of the Mint to manufacture silver dollars fast enough to supply the demand; this indeed would be a new variable quantity introduced into a question, which can only be solved by an equation—an equation we shall endeavor in vain to formulate where all the quantities are unknown variables. No man can predict the relative value of silver and greenbacks six months from now, or on the day this bill may become a law. Yet the practical operation of the bill depends upon the remote contingency that this silver coinage, with its legal-tender limited to $20, shall settle to and fluctuate with national notes legal tenders for any amount.

Rhetorical criticism distinguishes between an improbable possibility and an impossible probability. I am at a loss to know to which of these categories this contingency belongs.

Though I admit that silver being below greenbacks the bill may be operative for a period—not, however, ex proprio vigore—but simply from the mechanical disability of the Mint to comply with the theory of the bill.

We have had experience enough to teach us that values cannot be fixed by legislation. The only possible way in which an identity of value can be maintained between two instruments created by law, is to make them interconvertible; and that brings me to consider the second section of the bill which provides—

First. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to exchange silver dollars for an equal amount of United States notes which shall be retired and canceled, and not again be replaced by other notes, &c.

Now, how is the Secretary of the Treasury to get silver dollars with which to redeem greenbacks? By collections of internal revenue?

If silver should be worth less than greenbacks it will be paid into the Treasury to the extent of its manufacture; but who would want to exchange greenbacks for it, giving more for less? In that event it must either lie in the Treasury as dead capital or be paid out to reluctant creditors of the Government under the twenty-dollar legal-tender clause; the smallest claims upon the Government losing the largest percentage of the discount, and claims of $20, or under, losing it all. Suppose the silver to be worth more than greenbacks, who will pay it into the Treasury when he can pay greenbacks—that is, pay more when he can pay less?

To cover every contingency, suppose that, being in commercial value less than or equal to greenbacks, it does get into the Treasury, and that in the fluctuations of both or either it is enhanced—then first come first served. The most active holders of greenbacks would drain the Treasury's till, and the Government would be compelled to suspend specie payments after resumption. As soon as that contingency did occur no more silver would flow into the Treasury, and silver-specie redemption would have the fluctuations of the tides without their regularity.

Again, we have a law requiring the redemption of national notes in coin on and after January 1, 1879. The present bill is not inconsistent with it, and if it be enacted and the resumption law not repealed, we shall have this condition of things on that day; the bills of the denomination of $20 or under can be redeemed in silver, of larger denomination must be redeemed in gold.

Of course the largest holders of money could avail themselves of this profit to the greatest extent. The banks would accumulate the greenbacks of denominations larger than $20, in order to make the premium on gold. They would call in their own large notes, substitute the smaller, and be able to redeem their own circulation in silver while receiving the interest on their bonds and collecting their reserves from the Government in gold. Under the law a bank having any large bills in circulation could easily avail itself of the opportunity for the whole of this profit, and retiring its whole circulation by making the deposit required in the Treasury and then issuing a new one.

The remaining provision of this section requires that the United States notes which shall be redeemed in silver be canceled and not be replaced by other notes. Upon this I have only two suggestions:

First. In the past few years silver has been just as mercurial, just as variable in value as United States notes; for the one quality we desire in money, stability, it is not superior. While this condition continues, it is a questionable gain to substitute an interest-bearing for a non-interest-bearing debt.

Second. No one, I imagine, supposes that silver itself, except for purposes of change, will circulate very extensively as money.

The freight on silver, when sent by express, by railroad, or steamship, may not be greater than on gold; but no one wants to carry even $20 in silver in his pocket, or to get an express-wagon, a handcart, or a dray to make a deposit in, or collect a draft from, a bank.

What would really circulate would be promises to pay silver, and we should end by using the credit of a bank instead of the credit of the Government as money.

There are those who think this an improvement, and that it is "specie payment." I do not; and I think the history of American banking sustains the conclusion that bank credit is not any more stable than the credit of the Government.

The fact that under every system of banking we have ever had prior to the one we now have, which is based upon the credit of the Government, the loss to the people through bank bills has equaled their average circulation every thirty years may justify the doubt that that model of human perfection, the bank director, is absolutely and immaculately infallible, or that the difference between him and that summum malum, the politician, is so great that it cannot be calculated by logarithms or measured by astronomical instruments.

I pass to section 3, and have to confess that its meaning is to my mind so obscure, that I fear I shall not comment intelligently upon the meaning it is intended to express. Its first provision reads:

> That any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at the mints, to be taken at its market value, as ascertained and publicly announced from time to time by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to be paid for either in silver dollars, or with gold coin, or United States notes.

The privilege to deposit is as wide as language can make it. Under any ordinary rule of interpretation payment must be made on the day of deposit at the market value of that day. Our mints have a capacity to coin, in addition to other necessary business, not to exceed fifteen million silver dollars a year. Under this provision of the bill, in the present condition of the silver-bullion market, enough bullion might be deposited in one day to run the mints for years; the Secretary of the Treasury would be at the mercy of the bullion dealers, and would be compelled to receive and pay for bullion in large quantities when it was high and unable to buy it when it became cheap. So far from being able to take advantage of fluctuations of the market, the fluctuations would take advantage of him.

What is the meaning of "market value" in this clause? Of course the market value of silver must be quoted in something other than silver. To quote it in itself would be as absurd as saying the price of a bushel of wheat is a bushel of wheat, or to refine the mathematical axiom, "Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other," into "The same thing as equal to itself."

It is true that silver coin is manufactured silver, and bullion raw material; but in this instance the cost of manufacture is so uniform and so slight that it need not be taken into account. Silver dollars, where there is no legal restriction upon the amount which can be coined, will fluctuate in value exactly with silver bullion. As a matter of fact, we know that silver is quoted in gold. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] interpreted the clause under consideration as authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for silver bullion the gold price in silver coin or greenbacks. This is the obvious meaning of the language, but the conclusion is so obviously absurd that I suppose we shall be driven to seek some other construction.

The meaning intended probably is that the bullion shall be paid for either in gold coin, or in silver coin, or greenbacks reduced to gold value. I only pause to note the fact that we are compelled to go back to gold as the world's standard of value even in providing the material for silver coin, and to point the moral that laws of trade cannot be overruled by acts of Congress, and that beneficent legislation on the subject of trade must be in harmony with these silent laws which we can neither enact nor repeal.

In this connection I may refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] that the "relation between gold and silver is hereby fixed at 15½ to 1." As the weight of the silver dollar has already been fixed at 412.8 grains and of the gold dollar at 25.8 grains, the amendment does not change either of these weights, but only a rule of arithmetic, and makes the following a legal proportion: 412.8 : 25.8 :: 15½ : 1.

The concluding clause of the section gives the Secretary of the Treasury the option to buy silver bullion out of the "bullion fund," but as the sellers have an unlimited option to sell under the prior provision the Secretary will not have an opportunity to exercise his until the rules which govern buyers and sellers are reversed.

The theory of the bill is to give circulation to silver, but its provisions seem to me inadequate to accomplish the result. The logical conclusion of the able and learned speech of the Senator from Nevada is that we should make silver the standard of value and medium of exchange.

I do not underestimate the force of his reasoning in favor of what is called the "double standard," but no one knows better than he that only one standard will be in use at one time except so far as a specific use is given by law to the other, as is the case in regard to gold with us in payment of customs and interest.

The superior convenience of "paper money" will prevent the extensive circulation of silver coin. So long as the representative of value will answer the same purpose as value itself the coin will not circulate, but only its representative. Why not issue the representative upon the bullion without the expense and delay of coinage? The Government might receive silver bullion in bars or ingots and issue notes thereon in multiples of $5, redeemable at the option of the Government in silver coin, or upon presentation of a stipulated amount, in standard silver bullion.

As we shall ultimately reach the point where paper promises to pay silver will circulate as silver, why not start there and avoid the payment to the owners of silver bullion a profit which will accrue from the inability of the Mint to supply the demand for silver coin? Why not look the whole question in the face, and adopt a bill which will give the theory of this bill fair play, if the theory be correct?

The question now arises, and it is a pivotal question, what should be the value of the silver dollar? How much should it express? Shall it be of the same weight as when we parted company with it, twenty-three years ago? Shall we assume that it retains the same relation to gold, the accepted international standard, that it did then, though we know it does not? Shall we recognize by law the relation which we know exists to-day and make the bullion in the silver dollar to be coined equal to that of the gold dollar which is coined? Shall we endeavor to ascertain what the value of silver will be when the bill is passed which shall make it possible to use silver as the basis of circulation, and establish upon that the legal relation between silver and gold? If the latter, who can determine or even approximate that relation to-day?

The Senator from Nevada argued very ably in favor of the double standard, but it was a double standard that started from the same point, the two lines running together, and where the variations of each were supposed to be corrected and equalized by the average of relation of each to the other. That is, gold and silver starting from a common point, both variable of changing relations to each other, both would touch a straight line drawn from that point oftener than either. This would undoubtedly be true so long as the variations of both were about that line, each being sometimes above and sometimes below it. I am aware of the difficulty of drawing that straight line of value. I anticipate the answer that it can only be fixed by first knowing the average of differences between gold and silver. But here a new factor comes in, the comparatively modern factor, the use of credit as money, and the impossibility of a correct solution drives me back to consider the necessity of the single standard by which all values shall be measured, to which all quantities shall be reduced.

The assimilation in value between national notes and silver to-day is an accident—an accident which cannot be properly taken into account in fixing the relation between silver and gold in the adoption of silver as the currency of the country. The Senator from Nevada in effect admitted this when he expressed the opinion that the adoption of silver for that purpose would approximate its value to our present gold coinage; that is, bring back the relation between gold and silver to the proportion of 1 to 16. The general theory of his speech failed, I think, to give due weight to the use of credit as money, for he assumed that by universal experience only gold and silver furnished the materials out of which money could properly be made. Granting this for the purposes of the argument, though by modern usage and with vast labor-saving credit is used as money for ninety-nine one-hundredths of business, let us consider what is the philosophy of the double standard. It is this; that gold and silver, both starting from the same point, a common unit of value, their average differences after leaving that point will establish the line about which values ought to be determined, and that practically for the time being values always will be determined by the factor which happens to be below that line. This is a very different question from starting from two points, one ten degrees below the other, in the hope that the lines drawn from each will eventually meet and then vary about a mean line. Since the time we ceased to use the silver dollar it has diverged from gold ten degrees; shall we get down to the level of the one or up to the level of the other?

If we intend to get down to the level of the silver dollar as established by this bill, what shall we gain by the exchange? It will cost us an annual interest of at least $14,000,000 to make the exchange of greenbacks for silver. If credit will answer precisely the same purpose as silver, but we must revert to silver because it costs more, by a parity of reasoning we ought to abolish all labor-saving machinery, for in making exchanges the use of credit is only an improvement on that labor-saving machinery of which money is the original invention. If, on the other hand, it is supposed that, by the use of promises to pay in silver, silver itself will be brought back to the relation in value it sustained to gold twenty-three years ago, I shall endeavor to show that with less difficulty and expense we can bring greenbacks and gold to a common value, utilize all without losing the special advantage of either.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not expect to inaugurate the millennium by legislative enactment; I do not expect to reverse the law, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou earn thy bread;" I do not expect the world to move except as the glacier moves, imperceptibly. To-day will not be greatly better than yesterday or to-morrow than to-day.

Whoever looks to great immediate improvement from inflation or from instant return to specie payments may prognosticate and give loose rein to imagination in safety, for both are impossible; the first absolutely, and the last because no living man has the courage to face its consequences.

I have heard here and elsewhere that it is a point of honor to resume. Sir, if that be so, there is nothing else to be considered. If it be a point of honor to resume, it is a disgrace to think of consequences. The national honor is above all other considerations; when that is involved, the nation that hesitates is lost. Resumption in itself is easy, more easy than lying.

Pass a bill to-morrow that greenbacks can be funded into fifty year 4 per cent. gold bonds, and the day the bill is signed gold and greenbacks will be of equal value. In six months, if any greenbacks are outstanding, they will be at a premium in gold. If national honor is involved we are disgraced; and doubly disgraced because redemption is so easy. It is true we should drive banks into liquidation, bring mortgaged property to the red flag, debtors to bankruptcy; but if the national honor be in pawn, we should redeem it though at the price of a million lives, and it is base huckstering to talk about loss of property. Perish all considerations of pecuniary loss to citizens in the presence of that greater loss, national honor.

Pardon me, Mr. President; this is mere "parrot-talk," it is "sound and fury." If the national honor were at stake, we should not hear of it first from the money-changers in the temple, but from the voice of the people driving the money-changers out; or to change the simile, it would be the people, blind to all else, stalking by the instinct of honor into the temple and grasping its columns to save it or perish in its ruins; for where honor is to be saved nothing can be counted as lost. National honor is not a thing discovered in debate and cast as make-weight into the scales of argument. It is not rhetorical hyperbole. Instinct feels it before reason discovers it. It is a thing for which to stand against the world, against the world in arms; supreme devotion to which would count loss as gain and would feel the world dropping beneath its feet with the ecstasy which consoles, sustains, translates, and transfigures the martyr—the feeling which makes man a hero, the hero a god. I confess I am impatient with phrases which are used to bridge over a want of meaning. Let us look at this question of "honor" closely. First, if any man of honor honestly thought after close communion this were the question, to him it would be the only question, and he would not stand upon the order of resumption, but resume at once. Until this were done he would > Make mad the guilty and appal the free,

> Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed
> The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Let us look into this question of honor. We have passed through a war where the nation's honor and safety were at stake. In preserving both we spent all the gold and silver in the country, (not to mention some hundreds of thousands of lives which were freely given for the national honor and which are not rated in money,) and went into debt for some $2,500,000,000. A portion of this was borrowed from the people themselves, and there being now no gold and silver coin left, some form of credit had to be used, as some form of credit had long before been used, as money; a portion of this loan by the people was so used from necessity—that necessity which is supreme law.

Now, we are compelled to speak of the Government and the people as distinct things; but so far as revenues and debts are concerned, the revenues of the Government are derived from the people, the debts of the Government are paid by the people, and in this regard at least the Government is the corporation of which the people are the stockholders.

Let us suppose a corporation composed of one hundred stockholders, having exclusive possession of an island cultivated on joint account: The corporation owes a large debt, larger than it can immediately pay, one-quarter of which, say $50,000, is held by the stockholders in the form of certificates of indebtedness. The directors say to the stockholders, the corporation owes you this amount, and we must borrow the money and pay you. The stockholders answer, these certificates we hold answer our purpose as money; if you borrow the money to pay us, you will have to assess us to pay the interest on the loan; besides all this, our relations to each other have been adjusted on those certificates; these relations will be disturbed and confused if they are retired; if they should be retired, we know we shall have to pay the interest on the loans which absorb them, and that 10 per cent. of our number will then furnish us certificates of their credit, which we shall be compelled to use as money precisely as the certificates we now use. Then the directors would answer their parrot-talk, we the corporation owe you, the stockholders, and as a point of honor we must assess you to pay the interest on what we shall borrow to pay you.

Some one will discover a fallacy in this illustration, because the stockholders do not hold these certificates in the exact proportion to their stock. To this the answer is that, among the people who are the stockholders in this great corporation, the American Union, there is not one who holds a green-backed certificate of indebtedness who cannot get for it all that it cost him in any of the exchanges of business, in the purchase of commodities, payment of debts, or by loan at interest. That portion of the question resolves itself to this: some form of credit will be used as money. At present the people are using their own credit for that purpose. Shall they continue to do that, or borrow the money to pay themselves, and then use the credit of a part, organized into banks, in the place of the whole, and give the banks the advantage to be derived from such use in place of retaining it for the whole? Shall it be national credit or bank credit? "That is the question." Let me not be misunderstood. I think it the true policy of the country to bring every form of currency used as money to the same standard of value; and that standard ought to be the gold standard, because that is the one recognized by the commercial world, and I believe it will be so recognized, whatever our legislation may be; but I am convinced that can be accomplished more easily with national notes than bank-notes.

I confess I fail to perceive the important consequences which were attributed by the Senator from Nevada to the omission to provide for the coinage of the silver dollar in 1873. If he be right, the Congress of the United States, like Atlas, bears the world on its shoulders.

I believe I have a high appreciation of the responsibilities of public office, but I have always consoled myself with the reflection that the mighty stream of human life and activity would flow on in its great channel despite any accidental mistake of ours.

Why, sir, the whole silver coinage of the United States mints from 1821 to 1873 was less than $140,000,000. For more than twenty years the silver dollar had not been in use in the United States and was not known outside the collections of curious coins. To say that the value of silver and the monetary market throughout the world and the conditions of all values and all contracts was disturbed by an omission to provide for doing that which we had long ceased to do, may be true to that faculty, the imagination, which can construct the known out of the unknown, but is at least doubtful to the understanding, which can only reason upon facts. And, sir, if we had authorized its coinage from that day to the first day of this month, the only use we could have put it to would have been to receive it for customs and pay on our funded debt. Of this I shall speak hereafter.

The Senator's theory, if I correctly understand, is that embraced by the amendments of the Senator from Missouri, which would result in the use of silver alike in place of greenbacks in general business, and of gold in payment of the principal and interest of the funded debt. The plan is not without its advantages. One is it would continue existing contracts substantially upon the same basis on which they were formed. This, however, would be destroyed if the hypothesis of the Senator from Nevada be correct that the value of silver would be enhanced by the new use created for it. Granting it, however, for the moment to the full, what is the advantage in this particular of exchanging one system for another at a large expense, simply for maintaining relations which will be equally maintained under the present system? Is it alleged that the advantage will accrue in that silver will appreciate to the gold value? National notes can be made to do so with far more ease and certainty. Is it argued that we shall get the benefit of the double standard? The true philosophy of the double standard is that the two metals should start with a common unit of value, that their variations might mutually correct each other.

To start with one thirteen degrees below the other is simply to adopt the lower standard and to abandon the only benefit—mutual corrections—which is claimed for the double standard. It is not the "double standard" in any proper sense where all offices of both must from the nature of things be performed by one.

Is it argued that with silver currency we shall escape the bug-bear of inflation that haunts the timid mind? Silver currency cannot be inflated, because it costs labor to get silver. Costs whom and how much? The man who does get it; a dollar in service to get as much as will pass for a dollar. So long as it costs a dollar in service to get a national note for a dollar, there is no more danger of inflation in one system than the other. This much for the substitution of silver for national notes as currency in the general business of the country on the basis of value proposed in the bill.

Let us examine for a few moments the theory of substituting silver for gold in the payment of the principal and interest of the funded debt. If we have a right to do this, it is purely technical. At the time when we agreed by law to pay principal and interest in coin gold was cheaper than the silver which it is now proposed to pay, and that was the reason of our election to pay in gold. At that time the silver dollar which we now propose to pay had no existence in fact; it was only a legal possibility, a very "barren ideality," for it had passed out of memory and did not enter into the imagination; it was as obsolete then in fact as it is now in law. The revenues which were set apart for the payment of this debt were collected in gold, for there was no silver with which to pay them, and no one contemplated there would be any. The silver dollar was not so much eliminated from the law as it dropped out of it. What shall we gain now by availing ourselves of a technical legal right to pay in silver that which we elected to pay in gold when it was our interest to do so, and which election has determined the market value of our bonds at home and abroad, the price at which they are bought and sold?

We shall scale down our funded debt 13 per cent., say $200,000,000. But if the argument be correct that the use of silver for all purposes of money will bring its value on the basis of the proposed coinage to that of gold, then shall we take nothing by our device, for Banquo we shall have filed our mind.

What shall we lose? We shall lose the high estimation of public opinion, which is the world's conscience. We shall lose that fine sense of honor which is the soul of credit, and which it is even more profitable to the debtor to observe than to the creditor to exact. In the distinction between a moral obligation and a legal right we shall place ourselves upon the lower plane.

A nation that owes vast sums, and whose policy it is to use its credit at the lowest rate of interest, cannot afford even to seem to seek a temporary advantage by availing itself of a technical right.

By keeping upon the high plane of moral obligation, by maintaining our credit to a nice sense of honor in the forum of the conscience of the public opinion of mankind, we shall not only honor ourselves and our institutions, but we shall receive a temporal reward far exceeding any the tempter can offer. By so doing we shall be able to convert our funded debt into a security, (and there is a world of meaning in the word security; it does not mean insecurity,) into a security bearing an interest of 3 per cent. per annum. If we begin to palter in a double sense, and keep the word of promise to the ear only, we shall lose the opportunity to save quadruple our questionable gains.

Something has been said of the Shylock spirit of the creditor which exacts the pound of flesh. The phrase is somewhat musty. It is to be remembered that the heroism of Antonio is shown in his willingness to submit to the penalty of his bond as he understood it as well as the rapacity of Shylock in exacting it; and it is only an evidence of a sad tendency in human nature that the rapacity is immortalized, the heroism is forgot. If Antonio had promised to pay ducats—elected to pay gold ducats when that was his rightful advantage, afterward sought to discharge the debt in silver when he found a profit therein, the world's verdict in the case of Shylock vs. Antonio would have been different; Portia's legal quibble as amicus curiæ would hardly have been justified, her divine appeal for mercy sadly out of place.

Sir, there is one rule of morals which can seldom mislead: in a doubtful question which involves your own interest, give the doubt against yourself. The nation which observes this rule will find its reward exceeding great in this world as certainly as the man who does will in the world to come.

I have reached certain conclusions which I shall state, not in their logical or natural order, but in that which is most convenient for my purpose:

First. That the funded debt of the Government should be paid in gold.

Second. That the "double standard" requires at the time of its adoption a common unit of value, and to avail ourselves of its supposed benefits we must increase the silver dollar.

Third. That all forms of currency in use at any given time ought to be equivalent in value.

Fourth. That gold by the common consent of the commercial world is the ultimate standard by which all values are measured.

Fifth. That some form of credit is now and always will qe used as money in every civilized commercial country.

Sixth. That with us we ought to use the national credit directly in the form of national notes and not lend it to the banks for that purpose, and that we can and ought as a matter of wise policy to make national notes as good as gold.

It is only the last proposition which I intend further to discuss, and I trust I shall be pardoned if in the hurry of preparation I sometimes use language and illustrations which I have used upon another occasion.

I believe our funded debt can be reduced to the lowest possible rate of interest and United States notes appreciated to the gold standard and maintained there by the use of an interconvertible bond the interest upon which is payable in gold.

I know the term "interconvertible bond" is wont to fright us from our propriety. To some it suggests the supernal, to others the infernal; to some it is a badge of repudiation, to others the harbingers of the millennium; to some it is a charm to exorcise every devil, to others a very devil which no exorcism can lay. To me it is a harmless instrument which cannot accomplish miracles, but does furnish the best practical solution of the currency question. There is no easy road out of the present depressed state of our business and industry. It is the necessary result of our history; it is one of the after-effects of the war and as inevitable as its bloody foot-prints. It is the mortgage left on our estate by the war. War is destruction—destruction of property as well as life. Imagine a million of men in this country idle for four years; how vast the loss to production. But a million of men, all their energies perverted for four years from production to destruction, when often the act of a moment can destroy the work of years, who shall estimate the difference or calculate the loss? But the business of the Northern States was never more prosperous than during the war. Why? The war, though it was the business of destruction, was still a business, giving employment to vast numbers of men and stimulating every industrial pursuit into the highest activity to supply the demand created by the war. The war was a great fire, into which every man was throwing his goods at an extravagant price, which the nation borrowed the money to pay. Reveling in the riches of the pay, we did not pause to reflect that we, the people, were the nation, and must pay the debt ourselves. Our riches were like fairy gold. We squandered our inheritance borrowed of the world and discounted our future at usurious interest. No man is so prodigal as the borrower who does not think of pay-day, none so poor as he when pay-day comes.

But our prosperity continued years after the close of the war. Yes, we seemed to be rich on the very waste of the war; the evidences of our own indebtedness were counted as riches. We, the nation, owed us, the people; the fairy gold had not vanished. There was one element of prosperity more real while it lasted, an active demand for labor to supply the vacuum created by the war. In the daze of the hour prices were factitious, extravagance the habit, credit inflated, and labor wasted in unprofitable enterprises.

But there is no such inexorable creditor as time, and pay-day has come. Seven hundred and fifty million dollars collected in taxes every year is a burden upon the industries of this people which no magic can conjure away. There are those who fancy we are suffering from overproduction; as if there could be too great a production of what is necessary to the sustenance, the comfort, and enjoyment of life, while vast numbers are in want. Overproduction means inability of consumers, and every one is a consumer. It is not too much capital at one end, but too little at the other. We complain that capital does not seek new enterprise. How can it, successfully, when taxation is higher than interest in many other countries. I am not of those who believe that relief can come from all this except through patience, labor, and economy. Through these I know it can, and there is no other way opened up.

What would a man or a corporation do when embarrassed by debt? One thing, certainly: reduce the interest to the lowest possible rate. A nation may use its credit with greater advantage than an individual or corporation. It is perpetual, and the markets of the world are open to it. What species of loan will command the lowest rate of interest? A long loan, on account of its permanence as an investment, and a loan on call, by reason of its convertibility at pleasure. The national bond which would unite these qualities in the highest degree would be perpetual, but convertible at the pleasure of the holder.

The English consol is a perpetual 3 per cent. worth 95 per cent. and practically as steady as gold. The difference between 3 and 5 per cent. on our national debt compounded for thirty-five years would pay it off. Visionary as it may appear, that is one effect which I believe can be accomplished by a bond perpetual in terms, interest payable in gold, and convertible at the pleasure of the holder into United States notes.

How can such a bond be put upon the market successfully? By making greenbacks and bank-notes now in circulation convertible into it, and when it advances to par in gold redeem with it the outstanding 6 per cents. But if it does not advance to par? All legislation is to some extent experimental, and this will cost nothing; our 5 per cent. loan was offered long before it was all taken.

The monetary system of a country, like all its institutions, is far more the result of its experience of the accidents and exigencies of its history than of any deliberate predetermined plan. Universal experience has demonstrated certain fundamental principles, but the methods of their application must vary with circumstances. No one in this country advocates the establishment of an institution like the Bank of England, however wise its adaptation may be to the wants and interests of the United Kingdom. The Bank of Amsterdam has subserved a most useful purpose, but no one proposes to copy it.

The great body of our circulating medium consists of greenbacks and bank-notes. In what respect is the latter superior to the former? I admit that our present system of free national banking is the best that we have ever had. Perhaps it is the best system of banks of issue that can be devised. It is incomparably better than that which made shinplasters, wildcat, red-dog, and blue-pup familiar and significant names for paper-money; when a bank-note caught astray over a State line was arrested as a trespasser; when a counterfeit-detector and bank-note list were as indispensable to every counting-house as a cash-book or diary; when exchange on New York could reach 10 per cent. premium in the Western States without an appreciable difference in the solvency of the banks; when a man going from Saint Louis to Boston would pass through as many systems of currency as States, and sometimes find a State system checkered with county lines like a schoolboy's atlas, and his "money of account" in the morning would be of no account in the evening. Our present system is infinitely better, because it is based upon better credit. There is absolute security for the ultimate redemption of national-bank notes. Redemption of what? The notes of the United States. It is not the credit of the banks which makes their notes good and gives them uniform value wherever they circulate, but the credit of the Government.

Now, in political economy as well as in mechanics, all unnecessary machinery is a loss of effective power. Friction is to be avoided as much in one case as in the other. Examine the practical working of our banking system and see if there be not some unnecessary machinery and waste of power.

The Government could only have two objects in issuing greenbacks: first, to obtain a loan without interest; second, to furnish a form of credit which should circulate as money.

A national bank is organized; it deposits a hundred thousand dollars in United States bonds and five thousand dollars in greenbacks in the United States Treasury, and receives $90,000 in bank-notes signed by the United States Treasurer, upon which it agrees to pay the United States 1 per cent. per annum. In plain English, what is this but the bank borrowing the credit of the Government for 1 per cent. per annum, and leaving security, with a fair margin, upon which security the Government pays the bank 5 or 6 per cent. per annum? That is, the bank pays the Government upon one form of its credit 1 per cent., and the Government pays the bank upon another form of its credit 5 or 6 per cent. in the same transaction—and that not for one year, but while the bank charter continues.

Now if the first object, a loan without interest, controls the Government in issuing the greenback, that is defeated by this operation to the extent of all bank circulation.

If the second, it is unnecessary, for the bank-note never can be better than the greenback in which it is payable.

You will observe I am speaking of the condition of things which exists, and not of what would be if the greenback were eliminated.

Now suppose, for any cause, the bank goes into liquidation. The Government sells the securities, and, after redeeming the bills of the bank in Government bills, (for which as yet there is no plan of redemption,) pays over the residue to the stockholders. All this circumlocution, from the first establishment of the bank to its liquidation, to get back to the United States note, which could have just as well been issued directly in the first instance.

If it be necessary, by all means let us put fifth wheels on our coaches, devise engines to drive engines, invent a grate to warm the fire, and grease water that it may run down hill!

It is constantly said that the Government ought not to engage in the business of banking. It is engaged in the "business of banking," and it undertakes to wind up banks and administer upon their assets in a manner as unprofitable as unnecessary. It maintains a redemption agency for bank bills at the expense of the Treasury. It receives deposits and issues certificates. It issues bank bills to banks, requires reports from banks, regulates the reserves of banks, examines the affairs of banks, and keeps that kind of surveillance over banks which bank officers and stockholders are supposed to. It does everything pertaining to banking which a bank might, could, would, or should do, except discount bills and sell exchange, which, in addition to receiving deposits, are the only things a bank should do, and which no one proposes the Government shall do.

The issuance of bills of credit to circulate as money is not a function of banking, but of government, and no bank or individual is permitted to exercise it under any wise policy except by the consent and delegation of government. That is evidenced by the case we exercise to guard the privilege. It is a privilege, and that is an odious part of it. True, it is a free privilege, but only free to those whose circumstances or ability enable them to avail themselves of it.

If the present system owes its confessed superiority to the fact (as it confessedly does) that it is based upon the Government credit, why not go one step further and use the Government credit directly in place of lending it at 1 per cent. (out of which the expenses of the Government's connection with banks must be deducted) and paying 5 or 6?

If one-quarter the thought and attention had been given to improving the national currency there has been to dovetailing into it the bank-note and maintaining and reconciling a system artificially complicated, the greenback would have been at par with gold long ago.

It seems to be apprehended on the one hand that without banks of issue there would be a deficiency of currency—that is, that it is necessary to pay some one to keep up a supply of currency—and, on the other, that but for the intervention of banks the Government would "inflate" the currency. Suppose the Government to-day could substitute greenbacks for the bank-notes in circulation the volume of currency would be the same, the quality no worse. Do you fear there would be a failure of the necessary machinery for the proper distribution of currency to meet the wants of the people and for the accommodation of business? Have the receiving of deposits, drawing exchange, and lending of money suddenly become so unprofitable or irksome a business that no one will engage in it without the added premium of a power to issue money?

Suppose the substitution made, and to-morrow the currency should be made convertible into a perpetual 3 per cent. gold bond, would not that improve the currency to the value of such a bond? Make the bond interconvertible with currency; will not that give it additional value, by making it the receptacle of the money of estates of decedents and bankrupts under administration and giving it a power of absorbing money temporarily idle but wanted "on call?" Is there an apprehension that its absorbing qualities would become so great that the currency of the country would rush into it and disappear from circulation? That could only happen when such a bond was worth a premium in gold; then the gold of the world would seek it as an investment, until our 6 per cent. bonds could be exchanged for threes, a result I could contemplate with very considerable philosophic composure, even if it were nearer than I anticipate; while the catastrophe of an entire disappearance of our currency would be effectually prevented by the option of the Government to redeem it in gold. When that period arrives men will take their gold to the United States Treasury and exchange it for Government notes on account of their superior convenience.

Very seriously, I do believe a 3 per cent. interconvertible gold bond would appreciate to par, carrying the greenback with it with reasonable rapidity and certainty; that it would eventually take up all our bonds; that, as such a security would for many purposes be more valuable at home than abroad, it would be held in larger proportions at home than our present bonds are—large enough to afford an ample basis for any expansion of currency, if any should become necessary.

Under such a system, if more currency were necessary, in place of the circumlocution of lending Government credit to banks, the capital which now organizes banks would take Government bonds to the Treasury, get notes for them, with the absolute certainty that when, for any cause, the notes came home, they would find the exact security left in pledge for them. Government promises under all circumstances would be fulfilled to the letter.

In place of accumulating gold in the Treasury to redeem, enhancing its value by a large sudden demand, creating an artificial stringency of money—the Treasury hoarding gold upon the one hand and the people hoarding currency upon the other to get the gold when the door of the Treasury is opened—we should redeem the United States notes with an instrument which would be a draft at sight upon the treasury of the world, an open sesame to the universal cash-box.

What an anomaly it is: a 4 per cent. forty-year bond is worth par in gold throughout the civilized world; a United States note is worth 13 per cent. less than gold at home. This anomaly, in my judgment, is owing to our system of banks of issue.

It is urged with plausibility that the interconvertible system would enable operators "for a corner" to retire large amounts of currency from circulation and create an artificial dearth. The objection is more seeming than real. Such operations seldom extend their effects beyond stock-gambling. The ease with which the vacuum could be filled under the interconvertible system would greatly prevent the attempt. Every day we should know the exact amount added to or withdrawn from circulation; and this publicity would make a corner almost impossible. We should have a signal-bureau to predict a financial storm with infallible accuracy. It would be more easy to create a stringency on the banking plan whenever we reach any system of specie payment by investing in British consols. But is the banking system so perfect that it can discover so small a flaw as this and call it fatal? Are bank-notes subject to no vicissitudes?

While human nature continues as it is, with its thirst for sudden riches, its spirit of speculation, its moral epidemics, its periods of elation and depression, we shall be subject to financial crises at the meeting of ingoing and outgoing tides. Even bank officers are not steel against human emotions or proof against moral epidemics, the excitements of hope and despondency of fear. When revulsions come, as come they will, what can banks do to mitigate them? The danger to banks is from all sides. Their depositors will be clamorous for pay, their note-holders for gold, their debtors never so little able to assist them. They must contract from every quarter, add calamity to misfortune, and redouble the ruin which their notes redeemable in gold have made them powerless to withstand. In no American system of banking we have ever had or shall have can any bank in the most prosperous times redeem its obligations except by going into liquidation. Albert Gallatin truly said:

> The bank-note is a direct promise to pay on the part of the maker, with an implied promise never to ask payment on the part of the receiver.

The interconvertible system has been called inflation. Nothing can be further from the truth. Under it no one can put a dollar in circulation without depositing security for a dollar. In that it resembles and has all the advantages of the national-bank system. Under the national-bank system a bank desiring more currency deposits United States bonds in the Treasury, gets currency, and draws interest on the bonds deposited; under the interconvertible system, whoever wants more currency must deposit bonds just as the banker now does, but, unlike the banker, he would draw no interest. Whatever defects are chargeable to the latter system, inflation is not one of them. But, under the banking system, whatever profit there is on circulation is an inducement to inflation; to an unwise expansion of credit. From the very nature of the system of banks of issue expansion and contraction are periodical and ruinous. Banks only issue currency for the sake of the profit on circulation; they will inflate it whenever it can be done with profit, and must contract whenever their safety is menaced. They contribute alike to the excitements of speculative periods and to the depressions which follow.

Dean Swift by his Draper letters prevented the circulation in Ireland of a copper coin authorized by act of Parliament and certified by Sir Isaac Newton to be of the weight and fineness required by law, because the privilege of making it had been granted to a private party. The idea of farming out to banks the privilege of supplying the people with currency is an absurdity whose enormity is only concealed by custom. It is reconciled to the habits of men, not to their convictions.

There are many who advocate the funding of a fixed amount of greenbacks per month, until by a reduction of their volume they should be appreciated to gold. That volume would vary with the necessities of business; it would vary with the seasons from day to day, be influenced by the "moving of the crops," and all the vicissitudes of business. It would at all times be controlled by the banks who would share with the Government the privilege of issuing currency. It is a mechanical method of feeling the way up to the specie point by a series of experiments instead of rising there through natural causes. In what respect is it superior to the interconvertible plan with a bond payable in gold? The bond it offers bears a higher rate of interest. It would compel the Treasury to keep a large gold reserve, and enable the banks gradually (and I suppose this to be the merit of the plan in the minds of its advocates) to convert United States notes into gold and monopolize the whole field of circulation.

One thing is certain, under any system either the greenback or the bank-note will disappear from our circulation. No arbitrary fixing of the amount of greenbacks will or ought to keep them in circulation as mere tenders to bank-notes. We shall eventually have one system or the other. If we have the banking system, there will be no real resumption, no holding of gold as a reserve which gives an absolute assurance of payment on presentation—the credit of the bank-note will still depend upon the credit of the Government behind it. There will be a great many banks of issue located at points distant from business centers, and not of the most convenient access. The profit on circulation given to the banks will be a premium offered for inflation, and a temptation to it, which even the superior human nature of the average bank director will not always resist.

Again, it is urged that under the interconvertible system the Government will become a borrower of the idle capital of the country. Why, sir, the Government is a borrower now to the amount of more than $2,000,000,000, and it can certainly be no disadvantage to transfer any portion of this loan from the idle capital of Europe to that of this country and from a higher to a lower rate of interest. But it is a strange misuse of terms to call the conversion of the greenback, which is one form of Government obligation, into a bond which is another form of obligation, borrowing. That ought to be the right of the holder of the greenback if the Government does not redeem in gold. Equally strange is it to call that a loan by the Government if the holder of the United States bond converts an obligation which bears interest to one which does not. The whole theory of the plan is to organize the credit of the Government so that the interest paid shall be reduced to the lowest possible amount; that a creditor of the Government shall at all times have the option of taking a bond which bears interest, or notes without interest that will circulate as money; and that the bond and note alike shall appreciate to par with gold with as much rapidity as is equitable to existing contracts; and that we shall have one currency, good for every purpose, bearing one device known of all men; not representing a privilege, but the credit of the nation; not regulated in bank parlors, but by the necessities of the time; not an idle promise to pay if you do not want payment and a broken one if you do, but convertible at all times into an instrument which is a draft at sight upon the treasury of the world.

The Senator from Ohio in his speech advocating the silver bill eloquently reminded us that he proposed to re-introduce the dollar of the Revolution, and invoked upon it the blessing of sacred memories. I was not aware before that any silver dollars were coined by the United States in the revolutionary period of our history.

Sir, we have currency that is consecrated by memories more recent and not less glorious. We can preserve it as a memento of a heroic time, make it the symbol of unbroken faith and the pledge of a fraternal reunion, whose consummation is alone worth the precious blood that it has cost.

Much as I hope for the whole good that can be accomplished by this system, I do not imagine that if adopted it will at once start the laggard wheels of industry and make the waste places glad, but I do believe it will inspire hope, courage, and confidence, and that its simplicity and justice will commend it to the reason and conscience of the American people.

Mr. President, there is one monarch of the world to-day whose throne is above dominions and powers and principalities, whose rule is supreme over law, edict, and decree. That monarch is debt. It is the annual tribute he levies upon the industry of this country I am anxious to reduce.

Mr. SHERMAN Mr. President, I wish very briefly to call the attention of the Senate from all the various topics that have been discussed since this bill was introduced to the consideration of a very small measure intended to meet a temporary necessity; and which has given rise to a very extraordinary debate.

This bill proposes to restore the old silver dollar and with it and the subsidiary coins of the United States to redeem the United States notes and fractional currency. The dollar to be restored is the same dollar that had existed from 1792 to 1873; and the subsidiary coins to be issued are the same in form and value as have been issued since 1853. I have already stated in my remarks, made on the 11th of April last, the history of these silver coins and the relation of silver and gold to each other, not only in the United States, but in the countries with which we have the most extensive commercial relations. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] has also, in more detail and with complete fullness of illustration and authority, presented the important questions of the double standard, with the reasons why, in the United States especially, silver and gold must both be standards of value. I will therefore not repeat those arguments, but confine myself to the two main propositions contained in this bill, and then show, if I can, that it is not wise public policy to adopt the full silver standard proposed by the Senators from Nevada and Missouri, nor to go further than is proposed by the Committee on Finance.

The two main question are:

First. Shall silver coin be exchanged for United States notes as well as for fractional currency? And,

Second. Is it wise to recoin the old silver dollar with a view to exchange it for United States notes?

The bill as reported embodies both propositions. It is purely a voluntary process. No one need surrender his notes for coin unless he wishes to do so. We do not take advantage of a public creditor to force upon him silver coin, for we have given him the assurance of positive law that we will on the 1st day of January, 1879, pay all notes or demands against the United States in coin. We cannot, or rather public sentiment will not, allow us to pay in gold coin sooner. By this bill we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to the extent of the sinking fund to pay silver coin to the holder of our notes in exchange for them if he demands it. In spite of all that has been said about the depreciation of silver, and of our coin being worth less than United States notes, we know there is an eager demand for silver coin. The long lines of people awaiting their turn at the doors of your custom-houses show an anxious desire to surrender your promises for bright, shining coin. The instinct of the people, more wise than the calculations of the broker, assures them that hard money, real money, the result of and the representative of labor, is more desirable than a promise to pay money, and especially a promise that may be broken, changed, evaded, or postponed.

By the law as it stands only fractional currency, one kind of paper money, is redeemable in silver coin. United States notes although based upon the same promise and of the same or more intrinsic value than fractional currency, because a legal tender for all sums, are not redeemable in silver coin. Therefore fractional currency is this day more valuable than United States notes. Why? Because they can at will be converted into silver coin, and United States notes cannot be. The first effect of the issue of silver coin is to advance the value of fractional currency. In like manner this bill if it passes will advance the value of United States notes. It will be resumption of specie payments in silver. It will tie our promises to pay to the solid basis of a metal which has always been a standard of value, is now, and ever will be, and which can only vary in a comparatively slight degree from the more precious metal which is now and ever will be the highest standard of value.

Now, sir, it is admitted that we are able to pay a portion of our indebtedness. Indeed, a specific fund has been set aside by a law of the highest sanction to pay 1 per cent. of our entire debt, together with the accumulation of interest on the fund created by this appropriation, called the sinking fund, and this annual sum to be taken from our customs duties is to be applied to the payment of our debt. What portion of our debt ought to be annually paid is purely a question of public policy and interest. We have heretofore paid our bonded debt; but this debt is now so valuable that it is worth 18 per cent. more than United States notes and 5 per cent. more than gold. It is therefore manifestly our interest to apply this fund to the payment of United States notes, and this we can now do not only with the assent but upon the demand of the holders of our notes. Why upon this demand? Upon what ground of honor or interest can we refuse to pay this note now due while we are using large sums to pay bonds not due. They pay a large premium for our bonds worth more than gold, while we refuse to pay our notes now due and daily quoted at a depreciation of 12 to 14 per cent. Whatever other reasons are given for this anomaly we cannot pretend that we are not able to pay these notes while we are paying out thirty millions a year in gold to buy bonds not due.

Nor can we refuse to pay silver coin for our notes because it is depreciated compared with gold. That is a question for every holder of our notes. When he demands silver it is idle, yes, it is dishonorable, for you to say, "O, we will not pay you silver, because it is not worth as much as our notes. Wait until 1879 and we will pay you gold." Every market-woman in the land knows that the reason for your refusal is false. She may well say she will not trust to your promise to pay gold three years hence when you will not pay silver now when you can. All objections to this bill based upon the pretension that payment in silver is unjust to the note-holder are the merest sham, unless you are now prepared to pay him in gold. He is the best judge of what he will take in payment, and he wants and demands the silver now. And this is a sufficient answer to all arguments about the note-holder. When you redeem the note you can do with it what you please. You may burn it, or replace it, or re-issue it, or whatever else you have the power to do with it. But the men who holds it now has your promise to pay; and if you refuse to pay him gold it is for him to say whether or no he will take silver. Will you give him the option? If this was to be decided by considerations of public honor or public faith, no one would question how it would be decided. But I now propose to discuss it upon the basis of interest, upon the narrowest basis of commercial traffic; and by this sordid view, as well as by the more exalted one of public honor and public faith, it is manifest that it is for the interest of the United States now to redeem with silver coin such portion of the notes of the United States as the holders thereof may choose to exchange for such coin.

And, first, it is the cheapest mode in which we can pay our notes. One dollar of the subsidiary silver coin of the United States contains 385.8 grains of standard silver, worth to-day about 84 in gold or 95 in United States notes. It needs no logic to show that the United States makes money by the exchange of this dollar for a United States note; and yet no injury is done to the holder, for the exclusive power of the United States to coin money has imparted to the silver in the coined dollar additional value which makes the holder eager to accept it for his promise dollar. The silver in the dollar provided for in this bill is now of the market value of the United States notes, but it is of intrinsic value, and even though the United States notes may rise in value the silver dollar will keep pace with it. The Government pays its debt and yet replaces its note with a real dollar which takes the place of the paper dollar in circulation and does not have to be paid when resumption comes.

Not only is payment in silver coin the cheapest mode of paying our notes, but it strengthens us for full resumption in gold. It not only lessens the amount of notes to be maintained at par with gold, but it scatters among the people a large amount of silver coin which, without reserve or aid from the Government, will, from its intrinsic value, maintain itself at par with gold. And this quality of silver coin does not depend upon its being a legal tender, but upon its intrinsic value and its indispensable use among all classes of people for change and for the payment of labor and family supplies. As I showed the other day, not less than $2.70 per inhabitant of silver coin of less intrinsic value than ours is maintained at par with gold by Great Britain, France, and Germany. The United States, before the war, maintained at par with gold more than fifty millions of the very silver coin this bill provides for. No one inquired how much this silver coin cost the United States, but they knew it passed everywhere and was as good anywhere as gold coin. So now, with our increased population and business, it is manifest that seventy-five millions or more of this silver coin could be maintained at par with gold after we reach the full gold standard, and this amount is about as much as could be issued under this bill. The effect of substituting this silver money for that amount of paper money is obvious in appreciating the purchasing power of the remaining mass of paper money. Who does not see that the reduction of the aggregate of paper money to three hundred millions strengthens us for the duty of maintaining it at par with gold?

Sir, silver resumption is better now than gold resumption, for silver money will now circulate with paper money; gold will not. Silver money in intrinsic value is so near that of paper money that it will freely circulate, while gold would at once be hoarded. Even if silver money was of the same intrinsic value as gold, it ought to be put freely into circulation before gold. It must always be the specie of the people, and gold is not. Silver resumption must preced gold resumption. We now but avail ourselves of the present depreciation of silver bullion to prepare the way for gold resumption. It appears almost as a providential dispensation to enable us to follow the path of safety and honor. If we did not avail ourselves of this opportunity we would be blind to every instinct of a statesman and a patriot.

Again, sir, there is a popular instinct which we may call the "instinct of hoarding," which impels the provident classes of every nation and tribe of men to hoard the precious metals as the safest form of wealth, either to gratify avarice or to prepare for immediate or surely approaching wants. This instinct is as well gratified by hoarding silver as gold. For this reason, and for this reason mainly, a larger amount of silver coin will be hoarded than of fractional currency. The currency is perishable; it is subject to loss by fire and water, and its very nature compels its active circulation. Silver coin can neither be burned by fire nor perish by water, and the common instinct of humanity will cause it to be held while the fractional currency will be paid out. But the silver is the people's resource, and will be paid out and circulated when the necessity for it arises. For these reasons we must provide for a much larger amount of silver coin than experience proves to be necessary for fractional currency.

Again, sir, this bill will relieve us from a possibility of a dearth of change by issuing silver coin in exchange for United States notes. It is manifest that, by limiting this exchange to fractional currency, we have given an artificial value to fractional currency. The hoarding of this currency to get silver coin may create a serious want of small change. It is this want that the House of Representatives has attempted to guard against by a bill pending in that House. This will at once be obviated by this bill by placing both notes and currency on an equal footing with silver coin and lifting all gradually to the gold standard. The object of the law now in force is to substitute silver coin for fractional currency. If this can only be done by a direct exchange one or the other will be demonetized or held for a premium during the process, but if silver coin can at will be had for either fractional currency or greenbacks, the process can easily be effected. Things that are equal to the same are equal to each other. The difficulty of a direct exchange of commodities first caused the use of money. While we have paper money we can only circulate that of the lowest market value. Even a temporary demand for fractional currency causes it to be hoarded. Brokers all over the country are offering a premium for fractional currency in order to get silver coin. Even in this city, where fractional currency was most abundant, it is advertised for at a premium. Besides, we must provide more silver money than fractional currency for the reasons already stated; and therefore we must exchange it for United States notes as well as for fractional currency.

And, sir, the substitution of silver coin for United States notes meets and allays the fear of "contraction" that has been the direful cause of our long delay in approaching the specie standard. Reason about it as you will, you cannot persuade the people to endure for a time the process of contraction even to secure the acknowledged good of a specie standard. How often do we hear people say they are for specie payments, but not through contraction? They are in favor of getting well, but do not like the medicine. They are in favor of the Maine liquor law, but are opposed to its execution. They want to get well by natural processes. Well, now, the silver opportunity offers; silver can be substituted for paper without contraction. Both will circulate together, because their market value is near each other, and we have the silver bullion and the sinking fund amply sufficient to sustain the process of exchange. By giving a market for silver we advance a domestic product, and by reducing the amount of paper money we approach and prepare for full resumption. The silver will circulate with the paper. To the extent that it is hoarded or exported there may be some contraction, but it will not be hoarded or exported largely when issued in sufficient quantities to meet the demand for it, and this bill provides for either hoarding or exporting, by authorizing the issue of silver coin in exchange for silver bullion. If, then, there is a demand for silver coin greater than the surplus fund at our disposal, it can be had for the silver bullion of private persons, which can be promptly converted into coin.

The bill reported by the Committee on Finance thus provides for an immediate resumption of specie payments in silver coin, and thus completes the first and most difficult step of the problem. It neither disturbs nor deranges business, or stirs up the phantom of contraction. It is in exact accordance with existing law, and leaves the silver coin, as now, a subsidiary coin, a legal tender only for limited amounts.

The next question presented by this bill is, shall we return to our silver coinage the old silver dollar. And here I am met by the objections of the Senator from Vermont, but his objections are rather to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Missouri than to the report of the committee. The committee propose the silver dollar not as a legal tender for gold contracts, but only as a tender for currency contracts not exceeding $20 in any one payment. I would prefer to leave the silver dollar stand upon its intrinsic value as a legal tender the same as the smaller coin; but there is no injustice in enlarging the limit to $20, and but for the reasons I will state hereafter there is no injustice in making it a legal tender for all currency contracts. The silver dollar has that intrinsic value which in all periods of our history has made it a favorite coin not only for domestic uses but for exportation. It furnishes silver bullion in a shape and form more convenient for handling than any other form of coin. I fell into a common error in the debate a few days since in saying that this dollar had not been issued since 1853. Official reports show that it was issued in considerable quantities until it was demonetized by the coinage act of 1873. From 1870 to 1873 there was issued in silver dollars by the United States $3,336,348 at par with gold, and when specie payments were suspended and silver circulated only in the Pacific States and Territories; and since the trade-dollar was substituted for the old silver dollar there has been issued up to April 30, 1876, of trade-dollars the large sum of $14,912,350. These are mainly for export, but many were and are held for circulation in this country. When the old silver dollars are issued at par with United States notes, a large amount of them will be taken as a reserve by the people to meet future needs, with or without a legal-tender quality. As their issue is not peremptory, and the aggregate cannot exceed the surplus revenue or sinking fund, there is no danger of an overissue, while their existence among the people will be the best reserve when gold alone becomes the full standard of value.

Every argument already mentioned in favor of subsidiary silver coin is equally potent in favor of the silver dollar. It will be eagerly taken in payment of United States notes. It is purely a voluntary exchange. It is the cheapest mode in which we can redeem United States notes. It is specie resumption in the old time-honored standard of silver dollars of full weight and fineness. It will accustom our people to distinguish between the real dollar that pays where it goes and a paper dollar which only promises to pay. It will prepare the way for full resumption in gold. To the extent proposed by the committee, and to be used as a purely voluntary approach to a full specie standard, it is open to no objection or criticism, and should be assented to by gentlemen who have differed with each other on the present resumption law or on the merits and dangers of contraction and expansion. Why is it, therefore, that we cannot pass this bill without introducing controverted propositions which, if they do nothing else, will delay and endanger this bill? This bill as reported would by this time have been the law of the land but for these amendments; and as we cannot act upon these amendments without a long debate—now a sufficient cause to defeat almost any bill—it is in the power of any Senator under our rules to defeat legislation by urging controverted amendments. It is sufficient now to justify voting against these amendments to say that they endanger even by delay the passage of this bill.

I must appeal to the good sense of the Senators from Missouri and Nevada not to embarrass this bill, the purpose of which they approve, by urging amendments that raise new difficulties of an opposite character likely to defeat its passage; or, if adopted, will demonetize gold not only in private transactions, but in the payment of customs duties and the public debt. They raise the most difficult questions of political economy and the most delicate questions affecting the public credit, and at a time when above all others we ought not to attempt to decide them. At this time, when we cannot pay our debt in gold or silver, and when the relations between gold and silver are unnaturally affected by the recent movements in Europe, and when it is impossible to fix their precise relations to each other, it is exceedingly inopportune to consider or decide any radical change in the existing law. Ever since 1853 silver coin has been practically a legal tender only for $5, and yet it has been maintained in very large sums at par with gold. Why disturb this law? Ever since the present debt of the United States was contracted we have religiously paid its interest in gold coin. To enable us to do so, we have collected our revenues in gold coin, and we have ample means to pay the interest. To now claim, on any pretense whatever, the right to pay this interest in silver coin, when the whole amount of silver coin that could be issued in three years would not pay the interest for a single year, would create a revolution in our public credit without any benefit whatever. The serious effect of such a proposition upon our national character or credit cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

Again, sir, if you undertake to pay your interest with silver coin, you must pay the whole of it with such coin. You cannot discriminate. You cannot pay the large holders of your securities with gold and the small holders with silver. The great body of your interest is paid to banks and bankers, even when the bonds are the property of private individuals. You have gold to pay with, but you have no coined silver and cannot have enough in three years; and the same objection applies to customs duties. For small sums, and as change, the duties may be received in silver; but the supply of such coin is not and cannot be sufficient for some years to pay the duties collected. The only effect of such a proposition is to give an artificial value to silver bullion and silver coin in order to pay duties; and the immediate effect would be to demonetize both gold and silver coin and segregate it from our current money as gold is now segregated for the purpose of paying duties. It is manifest, therefore, that if we mean to collect our customs duties and pay our interest in silver coin, we must postpone the operation of such a law until we have such coin in sufficient quantities to conduct the business, and by no possibility could this be done in less than four years. The amendment, then, as it is proposed, would have no effect whatever, except to take from the people the silver coin they now have and hope to receive and cause it to be held like gold in New York to pay duties. The Government would not and could not pay it out for fractional currency and United States notes when it would be at once bought up by brokers for its peculiar property in paying customs duties. This objection is clearly fatal to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri for years at least; but there are other reasons why such a proposition ought not to be entertained.

The public debt was contracted and the interest to be paid was under the universal understanding that the coin stipulated for was gold coin. At that time all the silver in circulation was limited in its legal-tender quality to $5 in any one payment. And although by the act of 1853 the old silver dollar was not demonetized in terms, it was not issued, and no human being contemplated the payment of principal or interest of the debt in silver coin. In fact, during the whole period from the contraction of the debt up to and after the year 1873, when the silver dollar was demonetized, it was worth more than the gold dollar. No one foresaw or had reason to suppose that it would be less valuable than gold. Its great depreciation grows mainly, if not exclusively, from the action of foreign governments in dealing with their coin. To now make the silver dollar a legal tender in payment of the interest of our debt would not only be impracticable, as I have already shown, but would be universally regarded as a violation of good faith, and would destroy the confidence with which the commercial world now regard our public securities. The silver dollar was, it is true, a legal tender until 1873 and in strict law might be restored to its position then as a standard of value without a violation of the legal contract between the United States and the bondholder; but, sir, the effect of such a measure upon the value of our public securities would be far more injurious to us as a nation than the difference between the payment of the interest on our public debt for two or three years in silver or in gold. For over forty years, since 1834, the silver dollar, though in law a money of account, was in fact demonetized, because it was more valuable than the gold dollar. It was for that reason alone the silver dollar was dropped from our coinage system. This is clearly stated in a report to the Senate of Mr. Knox, Comptroller of the Currency, dated April 25, 1870.

I read from his report, as follows:

> The coinage of the silver-dollar piece, the history of which is here given, is discontinued in the proposed bill. It is by law the dollar unit, and assuming the value of gold to be fifteen and one-half times that of silver, being about the mean ratio for the past six years, is worth in gold a premium of about 3 per cent., (its value being $1 03.12) and intrinsically more than 7 per cent. premium in our other silver coins, its value thus being $1 07.42. The present laws consequently authorize both a gold-dollar unit and a silver-dollar unit, differing from each other in intrinsic value. The present gold-dollar piece is made the dollar unit in the proposed bill, and the silver-dollar piece is discontinued. If, however, such a coin is authorized, it should be issued only as a commercial dollar, not as a standard unit of account, and of the exact value of the Mexican dollar,* which is the favorite for circulation in China and Japan and other oriental countries.

This report was the beginning of the voluminous documents which led to the revision of the mint laws of 1873. The proposed act was subjected to the greatest scrutiny. I have here a document of one hundred pages containing suggestions and criticisms of experts, several of whom suggest a substitution of the Mexican pillar-dollar or a trade-dollar for the old dollar, and one only, Mr. Patterson, of Philadelphia, objected to demonetizing the silver dollar, and that for the reason that though "too valuable to be used as a circulating medium, yet it could be used for cabinets, or perhaps to supply some occasional or local demand." (Executive Document No. 307, page 38.) No one was wise enough to foresee or suggest that the time would soon come when the old silver dollar would be less valuable than gold.

The great revolution in the precious metals has occurred since, and now the practical question is, Shall we avail ourselves of the extraordinary fall in silver to make the old silver dollar a full legal tender, and thus to reduce the market value of our bonds, which we are not bound to pay, which are not due, and which we have not the ability to pay; or shall we improve this opportunity offered us by an unforeseen event to redeem our depreciated notes without loss, and with the free and voluntary consent of the holder of them? Sir, this is the choice presented us. I say that not only public honor but public policy, our interest in the narrowest sense as well as in the broadest sense of that word, points to the redemption of United States notes.

To the extent that any of our creditors choose to take our silver coin we are at liberty to offer it, but a compulsory payment in silver coin is a very different proposition. Any attempt for us to enforce it would fail. We have not and cannot have the silver coin to pay it. The attempt would only bring upon us the discarded silver coin of other countries to be recoined into our coin with a view to pay it to the United States in payment of customs duties, thus reducing the intrinsic value of our customs revenue. Gold being rejected by us would be at once demonetized and the silver standard alone prevail. I therefore reject as inadmissible the amendment proposed to make silver coin a legal tender for customs duties or interest of the public debt, and regret exceedingly that it has been proposed.

As to making the silver dollar a full legal tender for contracts between private individuals, very different considerations arise. All debts contracted prior to 1873 were payable by the law then in force either in gold or silver dollars or in United States notes. If contracts were specifically payable in gold coin they can be enforced in gold coin, whatever the general legal tender may be. The terms of the contract between individuals must be the law between the parties, and the general law only applies to contracts when the specific mode of payment is not stipulated for. If a contract made before 1873 was stipulated to be paid in coin, it could undoubtedly be paid in silver as well as gold coin. At that time and for near forty years previously it would not be tendered in silver dollars because silver dollars were worth more in the market than gold; but the legal option to tender silver coin existed until 1873 and until the revised code was adopted which excluded the old dollar from among the silver coins of the United States.

It is thus apparent that all contracts payable in coin prior to 1873 were impliedly payable in gold coin, and all coin contracts made since 1873 could only be paid in gold coin. None other were provided by law, and, when coined, trade-dollars were only a legal tender like the subsidiary coins for $5. I am not aware that any considerable amount of such contracts exist; but when they exist they ought to be left to the precise law in force when made or payable. The great body of the contracts now existing in this country are either currency contracts or contracts specifically payable in gold coin. The latter cannot be and ought not to be changed by law. Those payable in coin can be and ought to be payable in the coin made a legal tender when the contract was made or was payable and ought not to be affected by subsequent law. Such contracts ought to be left to the agreement of the parties or the action of the courts. Our laws ought only to have effect upon the future and not upon the past. Congress can coin money and regulate the value thereof, but this great power ought not to be made the pretext for impairing the obligation of existing contracts. It is no answer to say it was done when our present legal-tender act was passed. The condition of the country then authorized, yea, demanded, the most extreme measures, even to the confiscation of debts and property in the form of taxes. We know with what doubt and hesitation and under what circumstances the Supreme Court finally sanctioned the constitutionality of the legal-tender act as it affected pre-existing contracts. No one believes it would sanction the exercise of such a power except as a measure of war, when Congress is invested by the Constitution with extraordinary powers. As one of those who in this Senate asserted and voted for the legal-tender act, I now say that I did it only under the shadow of a supreme necessity involving the national life, and that it ought not to be made the precedent for a retroactive legal-tender law passed in a time of profound peace to change or affect existing contracts. Our power should deal with the future; and in passing laws for future contracts we are not embarrassed by questions of public faith or private obligations, but by public policy.

*Assuming the value of gold to be fifteen and one-half times that of silver, the French five-franc piece is worth about ninety-six and one-half cents, (96.4784,) the standard Mexican dollar $1 04.90, our silver-dollar piece $1 03.12, and two of our half dollar pieces ninety-six cents.

Is it wise at this time as a question of public policy to attempt by law to fix the precise relation of gold and silver to each other, and to make both a legal tender for all sums? Or is it best to adhere for the present to the policy of a gold unit, with subsidiary silver coins limited in amount of issue, or of legal-tender, or of both?

These two opposing policies have been debated here, but far more extensively in every European country, and especially in the writings of political economists. But wherever debated, the action of modern governments has in all the great commercial nations settled down upon a composite policy, a coinage compounded of gold as a unit, and silver coins of somewhat less intrinsic value than gold, but kept at par with gold either by a limit of the amount issued, or by a limit of its legal-tender quality, or by both. This policy was adopted by Great Britain in 1815, by the United States in 1853, by the Latin nations in 1865, and by Germany in 1873. This policy is neither monometallic nor bimetallic. The first demands a single standard of gold and demonetizes silver; the other makes both metals a legal tender for all sums. The objection to the monometallic system is that it enormously adds to the value of gold by making it alone the metal in which all debts must be paid. The objection to the bimetallic system is that from the nature of things it is impossible to fix the true relation of silver and gold to each other, and when either advances in value a single hair, it becomes demonetized and flees the country. These primary reasons have led to the composite system, which combines the two metals, gold for large transactions and silver for small, the silver purposely reduced in value, but kept at par with gold by limit in amount or otherwise. Now, sir, it is perfectly obvious that if we could in some way prevent gold and silver from fluctuating in their relations to each other the double standard is the best, as giving the largest store of the precious metals to draw upon, and it is now proposed by international treaties to bring this about. In the absence of such treaties it is far wiser for us to stand by the composite system in force in the United States since 1853, and such is the basis of the report of the Committee on Finance. We propose, as now, to leave the ultimate unit of gold aided with subsidiary silver coin, including the silver dollar, and to limit the legal-tender quality of the silver coin and the amount to be issued to the amount of the sinking fund; while the amendments proposed adopt the bimetallic system, with all its uncertainties, at a time when it has been rejected or is being rejected by all commercial nations, and especially at a time when the difference between silver and gold is greater than it has been for two hundred years. The proposition of the committee will be amply supplied by our domestic production of silver and the sinking fund; the amendments offered will bring to us for a market the rejected silver of Germany and Europe, and demonetize gold not only between individuals, but in the custom-house and with the public creditors.

The time for this proposed radical change of our coinage is a truly unfortunate one. The wide margin between gold and silver is now 10 per cent. more that the rate fixed by law of 16 to 1. Nothing is clearer than that under the bimetallic system the legal relation between the two metals should be as nearly as practicable the market relation. That is the theory of the system. The first step in adopting the new system should be to adopt the relations of 17¼ in silver to 1 of gold. But this would defeat the primary object of making the present depreciation of silver the means of a voluntary resumption of the specie standard. By the composite system this is easily done, and can be heartily accepted by all classes without contraction or expansion of our currency.

Sir, without going further into this argument, already too much protracted, I appeal to Senators charged with high duties at a critical period of our financial history not to press upon us extreme opinions, but to hold fast to the progress we have made, and let us seize the opportunity now offered us to make easy and straight the path now opened for a specie standard, when gold and silver and notes, all alike of equal value, will circulate side by side and revive again the flagging industry and enterprise of our people. To the one side I say that if this bill does not give you all the silver you want, I answer that in three years it will give you all that will circulate at par with gold; and to the other side I say that if this bill does not promise resumption in gold, it does provide for resumption in silver, which the present law does not, and prepares the way for resumption in gold by laying a foundation of silver coin, without which gold coin will never circulate and never has circulated in any country of the world. Let us lay the foundation first and the superstructure will come in due time. Both metals are indispensable, but silver first. It is the granite rock of the money superstructure. Let us lay well this foundation, and in due time the golden dome will crown our work, and United States notes, redeemable in gold and silver at the choice and demand of the holder, will be the winged Mercury to do the business and promote the exchange of the products of human industry. Though the work is a great one and the difficulties in the way greater than Bunyan's pilgrim encountered, I will not surrender my hope to see it accomplished.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, this subject has been discussed at some length already to-day. It is a very important subject, and, as stated by all the Senators who have spoken, perhaps it is the most important which will be presented to Congress during the present session. I view it myself as a subject of great importance. I am very unwell, and have been for a couple of days, and therefore ask that the subject be postponed to a future day, fixing the hour and making it a special order for that time.

I am perfectly in accord with the honorable Senator from Ohio as to the importance of passing some bill on this subject. I agree with him entirely as to the reasons which he has given for passing a bill so as to avoid the scarcity of small coin which will inevitably take place between this time and next fall. I am of the opinion that silver can be made a legal tender for all debts. It is my purpose at the proper time to give my views upon that subject. I am not able to do so to-day, and therefore I ask that the subject be postponed to a future time.

Before I make that motion, I think it proper that I should state, so that the fact may go to the country, that it is my intention to offer an amendment to the amendment heretofore offered by myself, if that be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that according to the ordinary usage the amendment reported from the committee as section 2, should be acted upon before other amendments are offered. The Senator has no objection, I suppose, to letting that amendment be adopted, and then the whole text of the bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. BOGY. I have no objection to that course. I will, however, make a statement as a matter of information, and I desire that the fact should go to the country. The amendment heretofore proposed by me has been very much misunderstood and very severely criticised. I proposed that the duties on imports should be payable in silver or gold at the option of the importer. I stated the reason of my motion at the time I offered it, that I believed it to be the law; that is, the law providing for the payment of duties upon imports used the word "coin," and I contended then, as I contend now, that "coin" at that time, in accordance with the law of that date, was composed of the two metals, gold and silver; and I argued that it was competent to pay the duties with silver.

I furthermore said that if a tender was made by an importer of silver for duties upon importations, that tender would be good, and in my estimation it would be sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. Nevertheless, for reasons which I intend to give at a future day, if I am able to secure the postponement of the further discussion of this subject, I think it would be better to limit it so that the duties upon imports may be paid in silver to the extent of one-half. Conceding the principle which I advanced a while ago that it is the right of the importer to pay all in silver, yet for reasons which I will not give at this moment, but which I intend to give, I would limit that right to one-half. That is one of the amendments which I design to propose to my amendment.

Another amendment which it is my intention to propose is as to the relation between gold and silver. My amendment proposes 15½ of silver to 1 of gold. At the time I proposed the amendment I explained at some length the reason of the amendment, stating that it did not meet my own approbation, but that, as that was the relation all over Europe, I thought it better to present the proposition in that way, so that it should be discussed on that basis, believing that a different relation should exist in this country. Therefore I shall at the proper time move that the relative value as between silver and gold shall be 16 of silver to 1 of gold.

These are the two amendments which I intend to propose to the amendment offered by myself. I state these facts so that they may go before the country for what they are worth. But as it is my desire to speak at some length on this subject, which is a subject of great importance, I ask that further discussion be postponed to a day certain. My friend from Nevada, [Mr. JONES,] who may be absent from the city, and I myself, perhaps, could not be present to-morrow, proposes that it be postponed until next Tuesday week, and be made the special order at one o'clock on that day. If that will meet the approbation of Senators, I will make that motion.

Mr. ALLISON. With the understanding, of course, that it shall not interfere with regular appropriation bills?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only say that if that is done, I shall consider it substantially a defeat of the bill at this stage of the session.

Mr. BOGY. I would rather not have that understanding. It is very well known now that we shall be here a good while, and I think we shall have no trouble as far as the Senate is concerned with the appropriation bills, and the discussion of this bill will not be very lengthy. One day more will dispose of this subject. In view of its great importance, I think we ought to be allowed to have that one day. I therefore move that the bill be postponed until Tuesday week next and be made the special order at one o'clock on that day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the pending bill be made the special order for the 20th of this month at one o'clock p. m.

Mr. ALLISON. Subject to appropriation bills. I move to amend it in that way because I certainly cannot consent that this bill shall take the place of the regular appropriation bills. If it does, I am sure we shall not get through with the appropriation bills before the 6th of July.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This motion requires a two-thirds vote; and the proposed amendment to it is not in order. The question will be taken on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I shall be compelled to vote against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, to make the bill a special order for Tuesday, the 20th day of this month.

Mr. BOGY. To avoid any trouble or disappointment in this matter I would rather accept the amendment of my friend from Iowa, and let it be understood that this subject shall come up immediately after the appropriation bills. I have no disposition to postpone action on the appropriation bills. I thought they would be disposed of in a very short time so far as the Senate is concerned; but I will accept the suggestion of my friend from Iowa, provided I can get his support.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to this bill being made a special order, subject to the appropriation bills.

Mr. BOGY. Immediately after them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the Chair will put the question in that form, that the bill be made the special order for Tuesday, the 20th instant, at one o'clock p. m., subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better be put in such a form that there will be no controversy about it, by saying "subject to the then pending appropriation bill," so that it shall not be left to the end of all the appropriation bills. It must be passed in time for the other House to act.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose an appropriation bill should be ready? But I see the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in his seat now. I only interposed because he was not present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall insist on this matter being disposed of the next time it is brought up, even if we have to have a night session. I hope there will be an understanding that one day shall finish it.

Mr. BOGY. My speech will not be long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to make this bill the special order for the 20th of June, subject to any then pending appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to by a two-thirds vote.

WARREN MITCHELL.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the 22d of March a report was made from the Committee on Claims upon the petition of Warren Mitchell, of Louisville, Kentucky, praying to have refunded to him the proceeds of certain cotton belonging to him seized and sold by the Government of the United States and covered into the Treasury. On the 30th, I believe, an order was made recommitting it to the Committee on Claims, as was supposed. It seems that it dropped out of the Journal; no such order appears in the Journal. In order that the record may be all straight and the matter get before the committee, I move that the order of the Senate concurring in the adverse report of the committee on that claim be reconsidered and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa to reconsider the action of the Senate concurring in the adverse report and recommitting the case to the Committee on Claims? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

B. F. WEST & CO.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to proceed to the consideration of a little bill, House bill No. 40.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 40) to re-imburse B. F. West & Co., of Martin's Ferry, Ohio, for internal-revenue stamps stolen from Cambridge (Ohio) post-office, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to B. F. West & Co., of Martin's Ferry, Ohio, of $357, to re-imburse them for revenue-stamps purchased by them of the collector of internal revenue of the sixteenth district of Ohio, on the 4th of May, 1871, and stolen from the post-office at Cambridge, Ohio, on that night.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAURA M. KNOWLTON.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senate pass a little pension bill. It is a Senate bill which ought to go to the House to secure action there; and I am sure there will be no objection to it. I move to take up Senate bill No. 816.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 816) granting a pension to Laura M. Knowlton was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment, which was really agreed to by the committee:

Said pension to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

I think that is the effect of it now; but it may not possibly be so construed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TESTS OF METALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit the report of the board appointed to test iron, steel, and other metals in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

This board is to determine by actual tests the strength and value of all metals, and to prepare tables which will exhibit their strength and value for all constructions.

The accompanying memorials and resolutions of scientific associations, colleges, and schools strongly advocate the continuation of this board, which is national in its character and general in its investigations.

The board asks for an appropriation of $50,000 for the ensuing year, and that any unexpended balances remaining on hand on the 30th June, 1876, may be re-appropriated.

This recommendation is submitted for favorable action in the belief that the labors of the board will, in the benefits accruing to important industrial interests, more than repay to the country at large any money that may be so expended.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 7, 1876.

The message was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

A bill (H. R. No. 2575) to amend sections 3893 and 3894 of the Revised Statutes, providing a penalty for mailing obscene books and other matters therein contained, and prohibiting lottery circulars passing through the mails; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads.

The bill (H. R. No. 3670) authorizing the Nebraska City Bridge Company to construct a ponton railway bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City, in Otoe County, Nebraska, was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

A. K. EATON AND J. D. JENKINS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move for the present consideration of House bill No. 2829.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2829) for the relief of Ariel K. Eaton and James D. Jenkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Ariel K Eaton, of Osage, Iowa, late receiver of the United States land office at Decorah and Osage, Iowa, $3,600, on account of money paid out and expended by him as such receiver for clerks in his office during the time he was the incumbent thereof; and for paying to James D. Jenkins, of Osage, Iowa, late register of the United States land office at Decorah and Osage, Iowa, $3,600, on account of money paid out and expended by him as such register for clerks in his office during the time he was the incumbent thereof.

Mr. INGALLS. This bill presents an innovation on the usual method of conducting business by the Department of the Interior in regard to the administration of its public-land business; and before voting for the bill I should like to have some explanation why it is necessary to make an allowance for clerk hire when the sum prescribed is fixed by law and is usually derived from the funds paid to the office.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read, and that will explain the whole case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a House report.

Mr. COCKRELL. The House report was adopted by our committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to my friend from Kansas that I can make a statement which will obviate the necessity of reading the report.

Mr. INGALLS. I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. WRIGHT. The necessity of this appropriation arises in this way: This extra clerk hire was incurred at a time when there was an unprecedented rush, especially in our State, making entries by military land warrants.

Mr. INGALLS. When?

Mr. WRIGHT. The year I do not remember.

Mr. ALLISON. Eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, it was 1856. The rush that was then made was unprecedented. It was then understood that the fees arising from entries by military land warrants went into the hands of the land officers, and they did receive an amount of fees, $30,000 or $40,000, all of which was paid into the Treasury of the United States under a decision subsequently made. At the time they employed clerks upon the supposition that they were entitled to the entire sum they received from the entries by military land warrants, and they were compelled to do it over and above what they could possibly afford to do under their salaries. Subsequently it was determined by the Department that they were compelled to pay this money into the Treasury, and they did pay it in, and this bill is to compensate them because of the extraordinary amount they were compelled to pay by reason of the immense rush there was in the entry of land warrants, for which there are several precedents in the legislation of Congress in reference to similar cases heretofore.

Mr. INGALLS. I must still say that this claim wears a very suspicious aspect. It has been depending since 1856, now twenty years, and I believe that this act will be found to have no precedent in the legislation of this country. The uniform custom is that, no matter how large may be the receipts or however much in excess of the maximum the fees of the office may be, the registers and receivers shall receive a stated compensation, out of which they shall pay clerk hire in their respective offices; and to allow this bill to pass at this time under these circumstances, in my judgment, would make an immediate demand upon the Treasury by the register and receiver of every land office in this country, because there is not one, certainly not one in my State, I presume not one in the State of Nebraska, where they have not been subjected to extraordinary labor and to the employment of an extra amount of clerk hire by the incursion of settlers and immigrants and purchasers upon the public lands. I hope that this bill will not be urged upon the consideration of the Senate, because it establishes, in my opinion, a precedent that is as vicious in theory as it will be pernicious in practice.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only wish to say one word. I regret very much that my friend from Kansas, after this bill has passed the House and passed the scrutiny of a committee in that body, and has passed also the scrutiny of the Committee on Claims of the Senate, where it had the concurrence of every member of the committee, should have thought it necessary to state that he regarded it as vicious. We are not in the habit of passing claims in that way. I did believe and still believe this to be a fair and honest claim.

The Senator also suggests that he does not believe any precedent can be found for this. The report itself and the record show that there has been more than one precedent, perhaps half a dozen almost, for this very legislation. I said when I was up before that there were precedents for this legislation. I did not say so without having examined them and without knowing that it was so; and therefore I regret very much that my friend should have esteemed this bill and styled it fishy, and that he did not think there were precedents for it. There are precedents for it.

Then, so far as the time is concerned, these persons have been knocking at the door of Congress and have never been able to get any relief. This is the third or fourth Congress they have been here, and before that they were endeavoring to have the matter settled before the Department.

I have no particular anxiety to press the bill; but these men have been delayed so long, and they have been so literally broken up from the fact that they took these fees believing they had a right to them under a former decision of the Department and were afterward required to pay and did pay them at the sacrifice of almost everything they had on earth, and have now been for years knocking at the door of Congress to be re-imbursed.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator withdraw that in order that we may have a few minutes' executive session?

Mr. CLAYTON. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 8, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. A. F. STEELE, of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BLAND. I rise for the purpose of correcting the Journal. I understand that the motion which I made to reconsider the vote granting leave for the withdrawal of papers accompanying House bill No. 1723 for the relief of Johanna May Page, is ascribed to Mr. HENDEE, when it was made by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction of the Journal will be made.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. HOUSE. I desire to state that Mr. Spencer, from the fifth congressional district of Louisiana, is present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. WILLIAM B. SPENCER appeared and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 11, 1868.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to lay before the House one or two executive communications, and he will state that the communication from the Indian Department came to the House several days ago and was mislaid, having been placed with other papers in a similar envelope.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a suggestion from the Indian Bureau relative to the Indian appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CLAIMS FOR INDEMNITY FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the claims of sundry persons for indemnity for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3671) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," and other acts in relation to the railroad companies therein mentioned, was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LORD. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business relating to the Geneva award. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] for a motion.

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN COLORADO AND NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a letter and accompanying report from the Secretary of War, relating to lines of communication between Southern Colorado and Northern New Mexico; which were ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

DISPOSITION OF SECRET-SERVICE FUND.

Mr. LORD. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAULFIELD.]

Mr. CAULFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be authorized to print the testimony taken by said committee in reference to the disposition of the secret-service fund.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the consideration of the Geneva award bill has such priority as to preclude the morning hour? If not, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BLACKBURN.) The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that, in his judgment, it is within the discretion of the House, if it so desires, to defer the morning hour.

Mr. LORD. I understood that I was recognized, and I made my motion. I am at least entitled to have the question put whether the morning hour shall not be excluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is entitled to take the sense of the House upon the exclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. REAGAN. In relation to the motion of the gentleman from New York and the opinion which appears to be indicated by the Chair, I wish to say that while I have no objection to taking up the bill in relation to the Geneva award, and do not wish to throw any obstacle in its way, yet if the gentleman from New York can have the House by a majority vote to take up that bill when the question of order is made that the morning hour is entitled to precedence, it enables this House to suspend the rules by a majority vote. I merely mention this point, not that I feel any interest in the present question, but only because, as I understand, the rules of the House cannot be overridden except by a two-thirds vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will remember that the permanent Speaker of the House has over and over again decided that it was competent to do away with the morning hour whenever the pleasure of the House should be so indicated. The present occupant of the Chair is indisposed to overturn a ruling so well settled.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to question the decision of the Speaker of the House; but it is a little singular that a majority of the House should be able to set aside the rules of the House.

Mr. LORD. I desire to call attention to Rule 56 in relation to the unfinished business. It will be found on page 255 of the Digest. I ask that the rule be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment shall be resumed as soon as the Journal of the next day is read, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of; and if, from any cause, other business shall intervene, it shall be resumed as soon as such other business is disposed of. And the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The regular order is the unfinished business pending in the last morning hour, which was upon the passage of a post-route bill.

Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is the fact.

Mr. LORD. On account of the pressure of this bill and others, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. In reply to that I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The regular order would be the consideration of the unfinished business in the morning hour, the bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. LORD. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is equivalent to raising the question of consideration.

Mr. REAGAN. Can a majority of the House suspend a rule and do away with the morning hour?

Mr. O'BRIEN. We have a hundred precedents for that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is often done on appropriation bills, &c., on other days than Mondays.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the morning-hour business coming over from yesterday, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] moves to dispense with the morning hour, which raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOAR. The morning hour being required under the rules, it cannot be dispensed with on any other day but Monday, except by unanimous consent. I respectfully ask leave to say a word or two on this question, which is one of the most important and involves the right of all the committees of this House, except perhaps two or three of them. I understood the honorable gentleman who just now occupied the chair [Mr. BLACKBURN] to state that the permanent Speaker of the House had ruled over and over again that the morning hour might be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has been done.

Mr. HOAR. No such ruling has taken place when I was present. My impression is that an examination of the rulings of the Speaker would show that they were simply that the morning hour could be dispensed with by unanimous consent; because to set aside this rule by a majority vote is to destroy the right of every committee of this House to have its two morning hours for the consideration of its business, and to put the business of the House under the control of those committees having the right to report at any time, which would be destructive of the equality of members upon this floor. If there has been any such precedent established this session, it must have been without being noticed, for it would overturn the universal practice of this House ever since its rules were established, and would be a most dangerous precedent.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] if he intends to say that it has not been the practice of the House to take up unfinished business as the regular order, to the exclusion of the morning hour, until that unfinished business was disposed of?

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly the unfinished business comes up before the morning hour; that is, when business has once been entertained by the House and comes over in regular order, that unfinished business is taken up and completed before the morning hour begins. That is not the proposition here. If the Geneva award bill be the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, then it will come up under the rule, as I hope it will. I do not want to interfere with it in the least. But what I remonstrate against is the principle that when there is no unfinished business a majority vote can set aside the morning hour.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman there.

Mr. LORD. The Geneva award bill is the unfinished business upon which the House adjourned last night, and is strictly within the rule as construed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as unfinished business coming up before the morning hour.

Mr. REAGAN. It is not the unfinished business of the morning hour.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The Geneva award bill was made a special order to the exclusion of all other orders, and even of motions to suspend the rules, until disposed of; hence I take it to be the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whatever might be the opinion of the Chair, he can only decide the question according to the practice which has prevailed in the House, and according to what has been frequently done this session, that is, where there is a collision of this kind, as to which business shall take precedence, the Chair has uniformly submitted the question to the House. In regard to matters of this very nature, such as dispensing with the morning hour, that has been done over and over again. There is no doubt of the fact that in the morning hour the unfinished business is the bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and that would seem at first sight to be the very first business to be attended to this morning under the rule which gives unfinished business the precedence, because of the necessity of securing a continuity of business and of procedure in the House. The rule provides:

The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment shall be resumed as soon as the Journal of the next day is read, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of.

Another rule limits this, so that the unfinished business pertaining to that particular occasion or time shall come up as unfinished business. The Chair, therefore, will submit to the House, for the majority to determine, the question whether or not they will proceed now to the consideration of the unfinished business of the morning hour of yesterday or the Geneva award bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to make one statement, or rather inquiry, in reference to the ruling of the Chair, and its bearing also upon the merits of the question. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads desire to have a bill considered which I think can be considered and passed within an hour; a bill that will save many hundred thousands of dollars to the Government in the letting of contracts. Under the ruling of the Chair I put it to the House whether we should not have this morning instead of being crowded out by the wrangling of private individuals as to who shall have a few millions of the Geneva award.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is this: Will the House now proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business of the morning hour of yesterday?

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour now begins at twenty-five minutes to one o'clock, and the first thing in order is the unfinished business of the morning hour yesterday, a bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-routes.

Mr. LORD. I will move that the Geneva award be taken up at the expiration of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the end of the morning hour for that purpose.

Mr. BRADLEY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me for a single moment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The bill is under the charge of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CROUNSE. I move an amendment to the bill to strike out line 557, page 24, "from Kearney, Nebraska, to Custer City in the Black Hills," because it has already been provided for in the other bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. KEHR. I ask unanimous consent to print as part of the debates some remarks on the bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

There was no objection, and leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

MAIL CONTRACTS.

Mr. LUTTRELL, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2684) to amend sections 246 and 251 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872, as amended by the twelfth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and moved it be put on its passage.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That sections 246 and 251 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872, as amended by the twelfth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 246. That before the bond of a bidder provided for in the aforesaid section is approved there shall be indorsed thereon the oaths of the sureties therein, taken before an officer qualified to administer oaths, that they are owners of real estate worth in the aggregate a sum double the amount of said bond over and above all debts due and owing by them and all judgments, mortgages, and executions against them, after allowing all exemptions of every character whatever. Accompanying said bond, and as a part thereof, there shall be a series of interrogatories in print or writing, to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General and answered by the sureties under oath, showing the amount of real estate owned by them, a brief description thereof and its probable value, where it is situated; in what county and State the record evidence of their title exists; the character of the incumbrance thereon, whether by mortgage or judgment, and a reference to the State, county, and office in which the record evidence of such incumbrance exists; what exemptions under the provisions of State laws or otherwise can be claimed in favor of the sureties against said real estate; and if the sureties shall knowingly and willfully make false answers thereto they shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction thereof, be punished as is provided by law for commission of the crime of perjury.

"SEC. 251. That after any regular bidder whose bid has been accepted shall fail to enter into contract for the transportation of the mails according to his proposal, or, having entered into contract, shall fail to commence the performance of the service stipulated in his or their contract as therein provided, the Postmaster-General shall proceed to contract with the next lowest bidder for the same service who will enter into a contract for the performance thereof, unless the Postmaster-General shall consider such bid too high, in which case he shall re-advertise such service. And if any bidder whose bid has been accepted, and who has entered into a contract to perform the service according to his proposal, and in pursuance of his contract has entered upon the performance of the service, to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General, shall subsequently fail or refuse to perform the service according to his contract, the Postmaster-General shall proceed to contract with the next lowest bidder for such service, under the advertisement thereof, (unless the Postmaster-General shall consider such bid too high,) who will enter into contract and give bond, with surefies, to be approved by the Postmaster-General, for the faithful performance thereof, in the same penalty and with the same terms and conditions thereto annexed as were stated and contained in the bond which accompanied his bid; and in case said next lowest bidder shall decline to enter into contract for the performance of such service, then the Postmaster-General may award the service to, and enter into contract with, any person, whether a bidder on said route or not, who will enter into contract to perform the service and execute a bond of like tenor and effect as that required of bidders, in a penalty to be prescribed and with sureties to be approved by the Postmaster-General, for the performance of the service contracted to be performed at a price not exceeding that named in the bid of the said next lowest bidder; and if no contract can be secured at the price named in said next lowest bid, then the Postmaster-General shall proceed to secure a contract, at a price not considered too high, with any person who will execute such contract in accordance with the law applicable thereto, giving, in all cases, the preference to the regular bidders on the list whose bids do not exceed the price at which others will contract therefor; and if no satisfactory contract can be thus secured, the route shall be re-advertised. Whenever an accepted bidder shall fail to enter into contract, or a contractor on any mail-route shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, or when a new route shall be established or new service required, or when, from any other cause, there shall not be a contractor legally bound or required to perform such service, the Postmaster-General may make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route, without advertisement, for such period as may be necessary, not in any case exceeding six months, until the service shall have commenced under a contract made according to law: Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not employ temporary service on any route at a higher price than that paid to the contractor who shall have performed the service during the last preceding contract term. And in all cases of regular contracts hereafter made, the contract may, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, be continued in force beyond its express terms, for a period not exceeding six months, until a new contract with the same or other contractors shall be made by the Postmaster-General."

Mr. LUTTRELL. I am directed by the committee to move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that section 3954 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"Any person or persons bidding for the transportation of the mails upon any route which may be advertised to be let, and receiving an award of the contract for such service, who shall wrongfully refuse or fail to enter into contract with the Postmaster-General in due form to perform the service described in his or their bid or proposal, or, having entered into such contract, shall wrongfully refuse or fail to perform such service, shall for any such failure or refusal be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 and by imprisonment for not more than twelve months.

And the failure or refusal of any such person or persons to enter into such contract in due form, or, having entered into such contract, the failure or refusal to perform such service, shall be prima facie evidence in all actions or prosecutions arising under this section that such failure or refusal was wrongful."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I am directed by the committee to move, on line 27, beginning at the words "the character," to strike out to line 36, inclusive, and insert as follows.

The Clerk read as follows:

And if any surety shall knowingly and willfully swear falsely to any statement made under the provisions of this section, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction thereof, be punished as is provided by law for commission of the crime of perjury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it has been amended has been prepared by the committee and the Post-Office Department. It has been fully approved by the Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. It is intended to break up the system of "straw bids." The committee believes, if the bill be passed as it is, that system will be entirely broken up and thereby hundreds of thousands of dollars saved to the tax-payers of the country.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand my colleague to say this bill was prepared at the Post-Office Department?

Mr. LUTTRELL. In answer to my colleague, I will say that the Post-Office Department and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads prepared this bill with great care. They have united on every provision of it and there is no difference of opinion in regard to any one of them. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LUTTRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL moved to amend the title of the bill by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SLEMONS, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1741) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

OATHS FOR GRAND AND PETIT JURORS.

Mr. KNOTT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1442) to repeal section 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to provide an oath for grand and petit jurors in the courts of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides for an oath to be administered to jurors in the courts of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the following oath, and no other, shall be administered to, and taken by, grand jurors in United States courts, to wit: "You, A B, do solemnly swear that you will support the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Congress made in pursuance thereof; that you will keep secret the proceedings of the grand jury of which you are a member; that you will diligently inquire and examine into all matters given you in charge by the court and into all matters brought before you; that you will present no one from hatred or malice, nor will you fail to present any one from fear, favor, or affection; but that you will present all matters according to law and the testimony and according to the best of your understanding and belief: so help you God."

SEC. 3. That petit jurors in the courts of the United States shall take the following oath, and no other, to wit: "You, A B, do solemnly swear that you will support the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof; that you will well and truly try and a true deliverance make in the cause wherein the United States is plaintiff (or if it be a civil cause insert the name of the plaintiff in lieu of the words United States) and C D is defendant, according to the law and the evidence, to the best of your knowledge and understanding: so help you God."

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out sections 2 and 3 of the bill, and insert the following:

SEC. 2. That the following oath, and no other, shall be administered to, and taken by, grand jurors in the courts of the United States, to wit: "You do solemnly swear that saving yourselves you will diligent inquiry and true presentment make of all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors and other breaches of the penal laws of the United States within the jurisdiction of this court of which you have or may obtain knowledge, or which may be given you in charge by the court, or otherwise legally brought to your notice; that you will keep secret the proceedings of this grand jury; that you will present no one through malice, hatred, or ill will, or for reward or hope of reward, nor fail to present any one through fear, favor, or affection; and that in all respects you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of grand jurors according to law to the best of your understanding and belief: so help you God."

SEC. 3. That the following oath, and no other, shall be administered to petit jurors on the trial of causes in the courts of the United States, to wit: "That you and each of you do solemnly swear that you will well and truly try the issue joined in the cause now pending, wherein —— is plaintiff, and —— is defendant, and a true verdict render according to the law and the evidence: so help you God."

Mr. KASSON. I ask for the reading of the section of the Revised Statutes which this bill proposes to repeal.

The Clerk read section 821 of the Revised Statutes, as follows.

SEC. 821. At every term of any court of the United States the district attorney, or other person acting on behalf of the United States in said court, may move, and the court in their discretion may require, the clerk to tender to every person summoned to serve as a grand or petit juror, or veniremen, or talesman in said court the following oath or affirmation, namely: "You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that you will support the Constitution of the United States of America; that you have not, without duress and constraint, taken up arms or joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States; that you have not adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort; that you have not, directly or indirectly, given any assistance in money, or any other thing, to any person or persons whom you knew, or had good ground to believe, to have joined, or to be about to join, said insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States; and that you have not counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion against, or to resist with force of arms the laws of, the United States." Any person declining to take said oath shall be discharged by the court from serving on the grand or petit jury or venire to which he may have been summoned.

Mr. KNOTT. I call the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman not be good enough to give a brief explanation of the change effected by the bill? It was almost impossible to hear the bill read in the confusion.

Mr. KNOTT. The only change that the bill makes in the existing law is this: It repeals a provision of law enacted in 1862, during the rebellion, providing for the administering of what is commonly known as the iron-clad oath to jurors, grand and petit, at the discretion of the district attorney; and provides that the same oath shall be taken in the United States courts, by petit and grand jurors, as is taken by jurors in civil cases in the State courts; namely, the old common-law oath. That is the only change made. The bill substitutes the oath with which lawyers have been familiar, and which has always been found, at least in times of peace, abundantly sufficient to answer the ends of justice.

Mr. KASSON. Does the new oath proposed include an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States; or is that left out of the new oath?

Mr. KNOTT. That is left out. That clause of the oath never existed anterior to this iron-clad oath. At the time that law was passed during the rebellion, there was a necessity for that oath. But the necessity no longer exists in time of peace.

Mr. KASSON. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky as to the propriety now of changing that oath. But I do not quite agree with him as to the propriety of removing that branch of it which calls for an oath to support the Constitution of the United States in the future. I would be very glad if the gentleman would allow an amendment to the proposed oath by adding that. I think that ought to go in, in view of the amendments to the Constitution, and in view of the troubles that may arise in regard to, or the rights arising under, those amendments. If the gentleman will allow me I will offer that amendment in the language of the present oath, "You do solemnly swear that you will support the Constitution of the United States of America," followed by what it is proposed.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not yield for that amendment. I do not know how it may be in the courts of Iowa, but I suppose that no citizen of Iowa summoned as a juror, either in a State or a Federal court, is required to take that oath. Nor is it necessary. It never was considered necessary anterior to the enactment of the law of 1862.

Mr. KASSON. If my honorable friend will allow me, I will say that the reason for this is not theoretical. There are certain new amendments to the Constitution, under which certain private rights have been created that did not exist before the war; and in view of the peculiar character of these private rights I think it just and even necessary that that oath should be required in the courts of the United States.

Mr. KNOTT. So far as that is concerned I will remark that the gentleman is a very fine lawyer, and he must know that whatever the provision of the Constitution or the laws may be the juror is not the judge of the law at all; he must decide according to the law as given to him by the court; the court is the judge of the law and the juror's oath binds him to render a verdict according to the law.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am in favor of the incorporation of this provision as an amendment, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] and I would call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] and of the House to the fact that in the State courts of Maryland—I do not know how it may be in other States—the jurors in criminal cases are judges of the law and the fact.

The provision to support the Constitution may not exist in the oath taken in the State courts, but in the United States courts both the petit and grand jurors should be sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, as proceedings there pertain particularly to the laws of the United States. It would be well, therefore, that the provision suggested by the gentleman from Iowa should be incorporated as an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the statement which he last made was quite correct? I understood him to state that what is known as the iron-clad oath, which I think everybody will agree to dispense with, and which I understand the gentleman from Iowa to agree to dispense with, is abolished by this provision, but in section 822 of the Revised Statutes of the United States there is this provision:

> No person shall be a grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, upon any inquiry, hearing or trial of any suit, proceeding, or prosecution based upon or arising under the provisions of title "civil rights" and of title "crimes," for enforcing the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, who is, in the judgment of the court, in complicity with any combination or conspiracy in said titles set forth; and every grand and petit juror shall, before entering upon any such inquiry, hearing, or trial, take and subscribe an oath, in open court, that he has never, directly or indirectly, counseled, advised, or voluntarily aided any such combination or conspiracy.

Now, does not this bill repeal that also?

Mr. KNOTT. I think it does in a measure, though my attention has not been called to that question.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the gentleman will allow this bill to be printed before further action is taken on it.

Mr. KNOTT. I will yield for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. I move, then, to insert after the word "swear" the words "that you will support the Constitution of the United States and."

Mr. KNOTT. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he has included in his amendment the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to save the provision of the law in reference to the civil-rights bill and the fourteenth amendment?

Mr. KNOTT. I have not.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, I am sure the gentleman would not like to have the House act under a misapprehension. I understood that to have been corrected, and I hope he will allow it to be corrected now.

Mr. KNOTT. I have not yielded for any such amendment nor do I propose to do so.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Kasson amendment does not save section 822 of the Revised Statutes from repeal. I ask the gentleman to permit the previous question to be reconsidered so as to allow an amendment to be offered.

Mr. KNOTT. No, sir; I cannot yield.

The question was taken on Mr. KASSON's amendment to the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask the gentleman to allow me to offer an amendment providing that this bill shall not repeal section 822 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. KNOTT. No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to vote down the bill.

Mr. KNOTT. Very well, let the House do it if they want to.

The question was put on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, there being on a division—ayes 123, noes 83.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill; if the gentleman will allow the amendment I have suggested to be offered I will withdraw that call.

Mr. KNOTT. I will not yield. If the gentleman wants to retard business in this way, let him do it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do want to retard business that neglects so important a provision as that.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, in order to give time to have it engrossed, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and the affirmative having voted, the Speaker pro tempore announced that a sufficient number had risen to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to address the House on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CLYMER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor, as the previous question has not been called upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe that any considerable number of members upon this side of the House——

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The point of order is that the motion to reconsider was put to the House and decided in the affirmative, and was so announced from the Speaker's chair; and it is now too late to rise to debate a question which has already been determined and the decision upon it announced by the Speaker.

Mr. KNOTT. The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The Chair had already announced that the motion to reconsider was agreed to before the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] rose to debate that motion.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand it, the previous question was ordered upon the motion that the bill be ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and that motion prevailed; thereupon the previous question was exhausted. Then the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, but he did not move to lay that motion to reconsider upon the table. It is to the motion to reconsider, which is now pending, that I desire to address myself. Upon the question of ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion to reconsider, the affirmative vote was taken, but the negative vote was not called for. A member arising and addressing the Chair under this circumstance is entitled to the floor. Even had there been a vote upon the motion to reconsider, the call for the yeas and nays upon that motion wipes out the previous ascertainment of the vote.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Not only was the affirmative vote taken and the negative vote also, but——

Mr. HOAR. I have not got through yet, if the gentleman will wait a moment. On page 171 of the Manual is this:

> When a vote under the operation of the previous question is reconsidered, the question is then divested of the previous question and open to debate and amendment.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is no doubt about that; but this case does not come within that rule. The motion to reconsider was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] the affirmative vote was taken, the negative vote taken——

Many MEMBERS. "No," "no."

Mr. O'BRIEN. And the Speaker decided that the motion to reconsider had prevailed; whereupon the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] rose in his place and claimed the floor, with the privilege of debating the question. Now while I do not object to any discussion and do not object to hearing the gentleman from Massachusetts, except in the interest of the proper proceedings of the House, I claim that my point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOAR. I was quite sure the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] did not understand the facts. The Chair has not decided that the motion to reconsider has prevailed; there has been no such announcement by the Chair; the negative vote has not been called for.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is only a question of recollection; the record will state the fact.

Mr. HOAR. Even if it had been, the call for the yeas and nays wipes out all previous voting upon the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course the previous question did not operate upon the motion to reconsider; it was exhausted previous to the motion to reconsider. The motion to reconsider was in order, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] made the motion, but did not call the previous question upon it. The yeas and nays, however, were ordered upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOAR. The yeas and nays were called for, and the affirmative vote was taken upon ordering them, but the negative vote was not taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The negative vote was not insisted upon. The yeas and nays were called for——

Mr. GARFIELD. But not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The affirmative vote on ordering the yeas and nays was taken. Any gentleman had the right to call for the vote upon the other side, but that was not done. In the opinion of the Chair, the previous question not operating upon the motion to reconsider and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] claiming the floor upon that motion, he is entitled to speak upon it.

Mr. HOAR. It is often the case, Mr. Speaker, that, in preparing one of these general laws which affect the practice in all criminal and all civil cases, the most learned and most careful committee will sometimes overlook some special view or some special case, and not provide for it in the bill which they prepare.

Now this bill proposes to repeal what is called the iron-clad oath, and we all agree that it is a good thing to repeal that iron-clad oath. The bill goes on then to enact that no other oath whatsoever shall be required, except the simple oath to perform the general duty of a juryman.

Now section 822 of the Revised Statutes provides that wherever there is a criminal trial for any conspiracy to avoid or overthrow the laws of the United States set forth either under the title civil rights or the title crimes, before entering upon that special inquiry an oath shall be administered to the grand or petit juror that he is not a partner or a partaker in any such conspiracy. It is that oath which this bill——

Mr. KNOTT. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to finish my statement. It is that oath also that is done away with by this bill. The result of passing this bill will be that a member of the whisky-ring in the city of Milwaukee, the city of Saint Louis, the city of Chicago, or in any of the other places where, according to public fame, combinations to defraud the revenue have existed, may sit upon a jury, and there is no mode whatever known to the law by which that man can be banished from that jury.

Mr. KNOTT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question now?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, with great pleasure.

Mr. KNOTT. In impaneling a jury would it not be perfectly competent for the judge to propound the question to a juryman whether or not he had belonged to such an organization?

Mr. HOAR. Not upon oath; that is the very thing which this bill cuts up; every protection of that kind this bill cuts up by the roots. At common law the judge, upon the voir dire, might propound that question to a juryman on oath; but this bill proposes to enact that no other oath whatever than the one set forth shall in any case be required to be taken by a juryman.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to another clause which enforces the view he has taken. There is in the proposed oath a clause that "saving yourself you will make true presentment," &c. So that the criminals referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts are saved by the provision of the oath, where one or more of them do sit on a jury, from making a finding as against any member of the jury.

Mr. HOAR. Now, is there a gentleman on either side of this House who is willing to stand up in the face of the American people and say that if anywhere a body of men are on trial for a conspiracy to overthrow the laws of the United States, whether a conspiracy against the civil-rights bill, or against the revenue, or against the purity of the mails, the judge shall not have the power of excluding from the jury the partners in the very conspiracy which is to be tried?

There is no indignity upon anybody in this oath. As my colleague on the committee has very well suggested to me by his question, it is no more than the judge of any State court would upon the voir dire require of a jury impaneled before him. If a jury is sitting in Mississippi or Tennessee or Virginia or any other State to inquire into a conspiracy for the obstruction of any law of that State, the judge has the right, at the suggestion of either party, to require a juryman to answer under oath upon the voir dire, "Are you in any degree connected with any conspiracy of this kind?" and to exclude him from the jury if he is.

Now, here is a bill in which by inadvertence—by inadvertence I have no doubt—the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has cut off that protection in all criminal cases; and he will be open—I do not mean to impute such a thing to him myself, but he will be open to the gravest suspicion that for the sake of protecting a particular class of conspirators he is willing to sweep away forever one of the principal protections of the purity and integrity of criminal trials.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to say one word.

Mr. HOAR. I yield to the gentleman for a few moments, but I do not surrender the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to say that under the laws of various States provisions are made to exclude from service on juries persons who have been convicted of certain infamous crimes or violations of the law. But these exclusions from jury service are always of persons convicted of crimes which seem to disqualify them. The idea of adopting expurgatory oaths is a new one in our American system of government and law. It is a new thing that by this mode of indirection we seek to make men testify to their own guilt as to violations of the law. This is, I submit, a course inconsistent with a proper judicial system, with proper judicial morality, and with that security guaranteed to every person that he shall not be compelled to testify against himself.

Mr. HOAR. Has not this been the rule in the State of Texas ever since it was a republic?

Mr. REAGAN. Never in Texas or in any other State of this Union has a man been required to testify to facts that would exclude or admit him upon a jury except as to cases where conviction had preceded the interrogatory.

Mr. HOAR. Why, Mr. Speaker, twenty years ago in my own State of Massachusetts, as those of my colleagues who are lawyers will doubtless remember, there was an association of temperance men organized to enforce what was called the "Maine law," a very strict law against the sale of liquor; and one of our higher courts set aside a verdict because the court below that tried the case against one of these liquor-sellers would not at the request of the defendant allow a question to be put to men summoned upon the jury whether they belonged to that association. The higher court held that the defendant was entitled to have that fact ascertained and to have such men rejected from the jury. That was the case of an association to enforce a criminal law. Now, if you can ask a juryman whether he belongs to an association to enforce the criminal law, can you not ask him whether he belongs to an association to obstruct a criminal law?

I do not wish to put my word against that of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] whom I much respect; but I say that I think he must be mistaken. I do not believe that in any community where law is administered by the process of a jury trial the method which this bill seeks to repeal is not pursued.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that there is a difference between putting such questions as show whether the juryman would be prejudiced or disqualified by some fact of that kind from sitting on the jury, and the establishment of a rule which violates the great fundamental principle underlying both our legislation and the writings of our elementary authorities, that all men are presumed innocent until their guilt is proved.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the gentleman see——

Mr. LORD. I believe the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. HOAR. Then I shall hold the floor to-morrow morning.

Mr. LORD. I now call up the unfinished business, the bill in regard to the distribution of the Geneva award; but I will yield for a moment to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] for a motion which will take no time.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Private Secretary.

CUSTOM-HOUSE BONDS.

Mr. TUCKER. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2135) relating to the execution of custom-house bonds, with the recommendation that it be concurred in. The bill passed the House in February last and the Senate on March 29 with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the question at this time, as it will not take but a moment.

There was no objection.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 5 and 6 the words "or for the use and benefit of;" so the bill will read:

That when any bond is required by law to be executed by any firm or partnership for the payment of duties upon goods, wares, or merchandise imported into the United States by such firm or partnership, the execution of such bond by any member of such firm or partnership, in the name of said firm or partnership, shall bind the other members or partners thereof in like manner and to the same extent as if such other members or partners had personally executed the same; and any action or suit may be instituted on such bond against all the members or partners of such firm, as if all of the members or partners had executed the same.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMISSION OF REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me.

Mr. LORD. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1800) for the relief of Kendrick & Avis; Kuner, Zisemann & Zott; Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri; and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio, and to move that they be concurred in.

The Clerk read the amendments of the Senate, as follows:

In line 4 after the word "remit," insert "so much of," and insert at the end of the bill the following:

As, in his opinion, justice and equity may require: Provided, He shall be satisfied that the parties named are entirely free from any intention to violate the internal-revenue laws in the manufacture of vinegar as aforesaid.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAPERS IN EXTRADITION CASES.

Mr. LORD. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] in order that he may move concurrence in some Senate amendments.

Mr. KNOTT. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2434) to correct an error in section 5271 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to move they be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "or copies thereof," and in line 12, after the word "escape," insert:

And copies of any such depositions, warrants, or other papers shall, if authenticated according to the law of such foreign country, be in like manner received as evidence.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FINANCE.

Mr. LORD. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] for the purpose of introducing a resolution for reference only.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I send up to be read a preamble and resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is the manifest duty of Congress to give a fixed and permanent value to all money it makes a legal tender in payment of honest debts; and whereas the American Congress is only the concentrated voice and power of the American people, between whom and their Government no special privileges can rightfully exist; and whereas by congressional legislation preference has been given to the bondholding creditors of the Government (in violation of that contract by which that debt was created) by promising to pay its principal and interest in gold, while the business of the country is transacted and honest private debts paid in legal-tender notes possessing less purchasing power than gold; by demonetizing silver, which was a legal tender when said debt was created; by permitting the issue of national-bank notes for which the people are annually taxed $20,000,000; by permitting national-bank notes to circulate as money without possessing any of its qualities, said notes being simply the evidence of the indebtedness of certain corporations, payable in legal-tender notes; by exhausting this country of gold by forcing Government bonds into the hands of foreign holders, to whom we have paid over $700,000,000 in interest during the past twelve years; by calling in and paying $400,000,000 of bonds in gold before they were due; by rendering everything else in the country valueless by measuring its value with a standard having no existence; by paralyzing industries, destroying credits, and bankrupting the people; by promising to redeem legal-tender notes at a stated time without one dollar in the Treasury for that purpose—all of which has been done without being petitioned for by the people and against their interest: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and are hereby, instructed to prepare and report to this House at its earliest convenience a bill or bills covering the following:

First. The immediate repeal of the act approved January 14, 1875, pledging the faith of the Government to redeem its outstanding legal-tender notes with gold January 1, 1879.

Second. Making legal-tender notes and silver coin bearing the stamp or impress of the United States with its value marked thereon a legal tender equal with gold of like stamped value in payment of all debts, public and private.

Third. The substitution of legal tender for national-bank notes and authorizing a system of free banking, without circulation.

Fourth. The repeal of the act of March 18, 1869, promising to pay the 5-20 bonds of the Government in coin, and providing for their payment in lawful money, according to the contract under which said bonds were issued.

Fifth. Authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue legal-tender notes to the par value of any bonds of the Government deposited as security for said notes upon the payment of the interest accruing on said bonds while so held together, with 1 per cent. to the Government by the owners of said bonds for the use of said notes, and authorizing and directing said Secretary to return said bonds to their rightful owners after proper notice has been given and the payment into the Treasury of a like sum in par value of legal-tender notes.

And be it further resolved, That it is the sense of this House that neither gold nor silver should longer be regarded as arbitrary standards of value in payment of debts or settlement of exchanges; that they are just as good, but no better than paper bearing the impress, and representing the entire wealth, intelligence, and labor of a great and free government like the United States, and for this reason Congress should give to each equal value in the payment of all debts.

Be it further resolved, That it is the duty of the Government to furnish a currency, with a fixed value, equal to the requirements of business and the demand of an intelligent people, and that no issue of gold, silver, or paper should be permitted to exceed that demand.

Mr. KASSON. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. LORD. Let it be referred.

Mr. KASSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is not before the House, objection having been made.

RAVAGES OF GRASSHOPPERS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill (H. R. No. 3573) to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874, and to move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Add the following:

And all the rights and privileges extended by this act to homestead and preemption settlers shall apply to and include the settlers under an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the western prairies," approved March 3, 1873, and the acts amendatory thereof.

Amend the title of the bill so it will read: "A bill to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874, and for other purposes."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill and amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INFRINGEMENTS OF PATENTS.

Mr. LYNDE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes, with amendments; which were recommitted, and ordered to be printed.

EVIDENCE IN PACIFIC RAILROAD INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. Yesterday I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to print the testimony taken before his committee was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman call up that motion to reconsider?

Mr. BLAINE. No, sir. I desire the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] for a moment. My object in entering the motion to reconsider was not to delay the printing of the testimony, but to include in the resolution that there be also printed the telegram from Josiah Caldwell and the proceedings before the committee. There were certain proceedings which took place before that committee yesterday very important to me that would not be included under the head of evidence strictly and technically because not under oath. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] will no doubt agree to the suggestion.

Mr. LORD. I did not yield for any debate or discussion. I merely yielded to the gentleman from Maine for a moment.

Mr. BLAINE. It will not take more than a moment.

Mr. HUNTON. I will detain the House but a minute. I desire to say that we have no sort of objection to publishing the dispatch to which allusion has been made for what it is worth and the proceedings of the committee yesterday morning.

Mr. BLAINE. Then just insert in the resolution "including the proceedings before the committee and the dispatch of Josiah Caldwell."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Virginia accedes to the proposition. Who is there to object?

Mr. SOUTHARD, (in his seat.) I object.

Mr. BLAINE. You must rise if you object.

Mr. SOUTHARD, (having risen.) I object.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Ohio objects. I do not delay the printing of the testimony.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I desire to say one word. I object to the publication of anything that purports to be evidence unless it is evidence before that committee. I make my objection for that reason.

Mr. BLAINE. You did not object to its being suppressed, but you object to its being published.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This was a request for unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. LORD. I yield now for a moment to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.]

Mr. HUNTON. The motion to reconsider has not been laid on the table. I make that motion now.

Mr. BLAINE. The motion to reconsider is not up.

Mr. HUNTON. I understood the gentleman to call it up.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not call it up. I asked for unanimous consent. If the motion is before the House, I am entitled to the floor upon it, and it is debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Maine to call up the motion to reconsider. The Chair put the question to him, and the gentleman said he did not call it up.

Mr. BLAINE. I would have something to say on it if it was called up.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Maine cannot call up his motion to reconsider for one purpose to the exclusion of another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman did not call up the motion to reconsider. The Chair put the question to the gentleman from Maine if he did so, and he said he did not.

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] will yield to me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the position of this matter. The gentleman from Maine was on the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from New York, to ask for unanimous consent only. He did not call up the motion to reconsider, for the Chair asked him that question and he said he did not.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] is now on the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD.]

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to say, if the gentleman from New York will permit me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BLAINE. Merely for one word of explanation.

Mr. EDEN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the reading of the title of the bill which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] desires to call up.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is a bill to give a gentleman from Maryland relief from political disabilities.

Mr. BLAINE. Let him have it.

W. H. JENIFER.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage the bill (S. No. 773) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry, United States Army.

The bill was read. It removes from W. H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry, United States Army, all political disabilities imposed upon him by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States by reason of participation in the rebellion.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof.)

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2134) making appropriations for fortifications and for other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2441) authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 803) to repeal the act granting a pension to Mary H. Bartlett, approved January 28, 1873;

A bill (S. No. 685) to place the name of Daniel H. Kelly upon the muster-roll of Company F, Second Tennessee Infantry;

A bill (S. No. 240) relating to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States; and

A bill (S. No. 166) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move that the legislative, &c., appropriation bill, which has just been returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF GENEVA AWARD.

The House, according to order, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. McCRARY. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Speaker, a few days since the able gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] in the course of his speech introduced as a part of his remarks and had read from the Clerk's desk a petition from underwriters in regard to this Geneva award bill. A gentleman who suffered very heavily from one of the privateers in the late civil war has sent to me a very brief petition, which will take about two minutes to read, and asks to have his petition read at the Clerk's desk and printed in the RECORD. He takes a somewhat different view of the subject from that taken by the underwriters, and the gentleman from Iowa has kindly yielded me five minutes' time to have that petition read and printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I only require time for that purpose.

The Clerk read the petition, as follows:

To the honorable House of Representatives:

The undersigned respectfully asks your favorable consideration of House bill No. 2685, it being in accord with the claims, the policy, and the record of this Government. It was never claimed by this Government that Great Britain destroyed the property of citizens of the United States. It was claimed that—

"The nation that recognized a power as a belligerent before it had built a vessel, and became itself the sole source of all the belligerent character it has ever possessed on the ocean, must be regarded as responsible for all the damage that has ensued from that cause;" that "indemnity, without reservation or compromise, should be made by the British government to those citizens of the United States who had suffered individual injury and damage by the vessels of war."

The policy of the Government has been "to secure, if possible, (for this damage,) the award of a sum in gross," to "be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded," while declaring that "the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government."

The record shows that such gross sum was obtained—was obtained in the name of the Government; that it was in full "satisfaction of all the claims," "all the damage that has ensued from that cause;" that claims of insurance companies against the United States have always been dismissed by both Congress and the Treasury Department on the ground that they were paid for the risk and could not ask the Government to hold them harmless.

The fault of England first caused millions of dollars in war premiums to flow into the treasuries of insurance companies; destructions afterward cause half as much to flow out for war losses.

Which most directly ensued from the fault of England, this inflow or the outflow averaging at least a year later?

E. W. METCALF,
Owner of Ship Delphine.

Mr. McCRARY resumed the floor.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TARBOX. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. McCRARY. I thought I had the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. TARBOX. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LORD. I desire to have the question presented to the House whether this question of privilege shall interfere with the business of the House. I desire to make the motion, as I admit that the House has control of the question, that the question of privilege be postponed until after the consideration of this bill for to-day.

I admit that a gentleman may rise to a question of personal privilege, but what I claim is that the House by a majority vote may control the matter, and therefore I desire that the question of privilege shall be postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that on matters of personal privilege it has been the uniform custom here to allow a gentleman to rise and state it, and, if it be necessary under the rules, the Chair can submit the matter to the House whether or not they will entertain it as a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LORD. I yielded to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman insists, the Chair will put the question to the House whether the gentleman from Massachusetts shall bring before the House the question of personal privilege. The rule on the subject is as follows:

And when a proposition is submitted which relates to the privileges of the House, it is his duty to entertain it, at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege.

Mr. TARBOX. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I quite comprehend the ruling of the Chair. Have I the floor, or is the question whether the floor shall be given to me or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that if any gentleman asks that the matter shall be submitted to the House as to the entertainment of this question he will submit it under the rules. As nobody has asked it, the question is in order. The gentleman will suspend, however, until the Chair will have read to the House the rule with reference to persons privileged to be upon the floor of the House. The Chair is informed that numerous counterfeits of tickets of admission have been signed, and that persons not entitled to be upon the floor have been upon the floor to-day, yesterday, and the day before.

The Clerk read as follows:

No person, except members of the Senate, their Secretary, heads of Departments, the President's private secretary, foreign ministers, the governor for the time being of any State, Senators and Representatives elect, judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Court of Claims, and such persons as have by name received the thanks of Congress, shall be admitted within the Hall of the House of Representatives or any of the rooms upon the same floor or opening into the same: Provided, That ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and shall so register themselves, may also be admitted within the Hall of the House; and no person except those herein specified shall at any time be admitted to the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper and the Sergeant-at-Arms are directed to enforce that rule.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Under the term "personal explanation" I desire to know whether it is the opinion of the Chair that it opens up debate at the pleasure of the parties claiming to make personal explanations, or does the parliamentary rule require them to confine themselves to the question involved in the personal explanation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that question has been asked, to his certain knowledge, for some fifteen or twenty years in the House and there has never been a definite decision upon it. The Chair cannot say until the members are heard whether it be a question of personal privilege or not. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. TARBOX. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] occupied the attention of the House on Monday last on a question of personal privilege he commenced his statement with the citation of a resolution which I had the honor to offer to this body, and under which certain investigations by the Committee on the Judiciary had been had; and, commenting on that resolution, stated as follows:

The gentleman who offered that resolution offered it when I was not in the House, and my colleague, [Mr. FRYE] after it was objected to, went to the gentleman and stated that he would have no objection to it, as he knew I would not have if I were present in the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. TAR-

BOX,] to whom I refer, took especial pains to say to my colleague that the resolution was not in any sense aimed at me. The gentleman will pardon me if I say that I had a slight incredulity upon that assurance given by him to my colleague.

Now, sir, I do not profess to be skilled in the translation of parliamentary language, but, sir, my crude sense in relation to it leads me to suppose that the gentleman intended to impeach my sincerity in the statement I made to his colleague.

I do not rise with any purpose to attempt to convince the incredulous mind of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] of my truthfulness. What his opinion may be of my sincerity or of any quality I may possess is quite inconsequential to the public as it is to me. But the whole tenor of his remarks went to this result: that here was an investigation in progress, conceived in a partisan spirit and prosecuted in political malice toward himself personally; and, of course, as I had formally set that investigation on foot, the charge embraced me as one of the conspirators against his peace and honor or an instrument of such conspiracy. To that question, in vindication of my own good faith and in order that the House and the country may be in possession of some facts that bear upon it, I claim for a brief time the ear of the House and especially the ear of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

Now, sir, I confess that, after the conspicuous, not to say ostentatious, championship of the inviolability of private correspondence by the gentleman from Maine, I was surprised that a private communication of mine to his colleague, [Mr. FRYE,] made purely in a courteous sort, and in an obliging spirit, and in respose to a request for a favor to the gentleman personally, should have been gratuitously cited by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] in order to do me an entirely uncalled-for and vulgar impertinence. By the law as laid down by the gentleman, that conversation was my private property, [laughter;] it was a communication between his colleague and myself in the frankness and privilege of personal private intercourse, and equally under the seal of honor when spoken by the lips as when recorded by the pen.

The gentleman from Maine could not have done it through thoughtlessness, for he was at that moment about to expound the law, and he stated the principle so broadly that it would cover the case of a prisoner on trial in a court of justice, and a witness on the stand with a private letter of the prisoner's in his pocket, that prisoner had the right by force or subterfuge to obtain that letter which might contain the proof of the prisoner's guilt, and hold it in despite of court, witness, or jury. And yet, having so read the law of honor for his own justification, he did not scruple to violate, when it suited his convenience, the confidence that existed between his colleague and me.

Now I desire to state briefly to this House—for the gentleman from Maine has raised the seal from my relations with his colleague in this matter—just what that transaction was. The gentleman states that his colleague [Mr. FRYE] came to me and said he would have no objection to my resolution, and that the gentleman from Maine, his colleague, [Mr. BLAINE,] would have no objection to it if present. Sir, that was not the statement made to me.

I offered the resolution on Friday, the 28th day of April, and its introduction was objected to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.] A short space after the objection was made, the resolution of course not being entertained, that gentleman came to me and stated that had he known the scope and purpose of the resolution he would not have interposed an objection to exclude it.

I purposed to offer the resolution anew on the following morning, Saturday. But in the mean time I received a message from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] requesting that I would forbear its introduction until the Tuesday or Wednesday next. I went to Mr. FRYE and stated to him that I had received such an intimation of his desire; that I would be very glad to comply with his request; that I had no disposition to do any injustice to Mr. BLAINE, and that in my judgment the investigation proposed by the resolution would not involve Mr. BLAINE's integrity. He said that, for a reason which he did not like to state, he preferred that the resolution might not be introduced until Tuesday or Wednesday; and, in that event, if I would consent to postpone it thus far, he would engage that no objection would be offered to it on his side of the House.

On Monday, as I noticed that his colleague, Mr. BLAINE, had returned, I suggested to Mr. FRYE that he relieve me from that obligation and permit me to introduce the resolution in regular course at once. He stated in reply that he would prefer to hold me to my obligation of courtesy; and I yielded, of course.

Soon afterward the gentleman came to my desk and asked of me the privilege of examining the resolution. I gave it to him and he retired with it, for what purpose I know not, except as I infer from subsequent events. He then returned it to me with the statement that he withdrew all objection to my presenting it at that time. Such, sir, is the history of my relation to that resolution.

I speak now of my personal motive in the introduction of that resolution. First, I meant by that resolution just what appears on its face, and no more. I spoke in entire frankness to the gentleman's colleague. I did not suppose that I was doing the gentleman an ill-service when I set the inquest on foot or that he would so esteem it. As a man of integrity, who had no stain to hide, I supposed he would welcome it as much as he desired the Credit Mobilier investigation, which he himself put in motion. However, later revelations have influenced my judgment. I did not anticipate when I offered the resolution that the inquest it ordered would involve Mr. BLAINE disreputably.

At that time I had some vague tradition of Mr. Caldwell as a celebrity of doubtful fame in New England business circles, who was conveniently beyond seas, where he was safer in the enjoyment of his inalienable rights of liberty and the pursuit of happiness than he might be here. But I had not the slightest hint that the gentleman from Maine had ever been in confidential business relations with Mr. Caldwell, or an operator in that class of securities which figured in the suspicious transactions of the Union Pacific Railroad. So I could not have designed any injury to the gentleman from any possible disclosures in that line. Had I known what he knew, I might have agreed in his opinion as to whom the resolution would hit, but I had not his consciousness.

Now, sir, was the investigation ordered a proper one? Was the charge of a gravity worthy the attention of Congress, and of a subject-matter within the control of Congress; and did the charge have an apparent basis? Well, sir, the charge was of a corrupt misapplication of the funds of the Union Pacific Railroad Company by its officers; a corporation chartered by and a creature of the Government; that had fed on Government bounty; that is indebted to the Government in many millions of dollars; a quasi public corporation, the honest management of which is a matter of vital concern to the interests of the whole country. Who preferred the charge? A man placed in the board of direction to represent and protect Government interests, who charged that he had sought in vain from the management of that corporation an investigation into this particular transaction which bore upon its face the badges of fraud.

The gentleman charges that this is a persecution of partisan malice. What is the history of the charge? It appears, sir, that the gentleman was suspected—I certainly do not mean to say or intimate justly—but he was suspected, it seems, of some complicity in that transaction. Not suspected by strangers or political enemies, but by his personal and political intimates, who knew him best. Harrison, the Government director and a political sympathizer, thought it; Rollins, the treasurer of the corporation, thought it, and threw himself gallantly into the breach to defend it even at the risk of what was more valuable than life, his honor. Fisher thought it, the intimate business friend of a life-time of the gentleman from Maine. Mulligan thought it, the man whom Fisher declares to be, if not the best, as good a man as there is in the world!

Do you find, sir, in this any signs of partisan malice, any diabolical scheme of political opponents to ruin the personal character and the political aspirations of the gentleman from Maine? From what democratic source in this country, I ask, has any charge originated attacking the integrity of the gentleman? It can be discovered nowhere. The calumny, if so it be, was hatched, if anywhere, in the bosom of his own political household and by his own political kin. No democrat or ex-confederate conceived it or nursed it.

Now, sir, the gentleman, when rumor was loud in relation to this business, made upon this floor an elaborate and eloquent refutation of the charge as affecting him. Very well, sir, that sufficed perhaps for the vindication of his personal honor, but it did not alter or affect the rectitude of the transaction itself or relieve the officers of the corporation of the imputation on their fidelity. Then, sir, was this body to forego investigation because the gentleman's name had been involved by public noise in the matter, or shall the good faith of the investigation be put in question because some gentleman from egotism, a suspicious temper, or self-consciousness, or any other motive, chooses to imagine himself an intended victim?

The investigation then, I claim, was entirely a legitimate one. The gentleman from Maine was not assailed by it, as he was not named in it. If he is put on trial, it is by his own election that he occupies that attitude. If he is accused at all, it is not out of the lips of his political enemies that that accusation comes.

But, sir, to constitute a malicious prosecution the investigation must be without probable cause. If there are circumstances which raise a suspicion, whether they in any degree establish guilt or not, then there exists a proper basis for investigation. Investigation, sir, is not an arraignment and an accusation. It is as much designed to vindicate innocence from injurious suspicions as it is to brand the guilty with their guilt, and is the delight of the spotless as much as the aversion of the tainted.

When the gentleman moved the investigation into the Credit Mobilier affairs, with which his name had been connected in some equivocal way, he did not thereby accuse himself; he did not put himself on trial as an alleged criminal. He instituted it to vindicate his innocence; and he has no right to stand here and challenge my sincerity in instituting an investigation upon larger warrant of suspicion than attached to the Credit Mobilier at the time the investigation was ordered into that. And I challenge him to produce the act or word of mine that is inconsistent with what I professed to his colleague and what I profess now.

Then, sir, was there probable cause for this investigation? The history of the public rumor is notorious to the country and to the world. The connection of the gentleman from Maine with that public rumor is equally familiar to the country. Who set on its legs the suspicion of his connection with it is known; and there is no circumstance connected with it from the earliest moment of the public agitation of the question that in the slightest degree points it out as of partisan origination. Precisely the contrary is confirmed by every circumstance connected with it. I should suppose that any man jealous of his honest fame in the position of the gentleman would desire the thoroughest investigation into the whole elements of the transaction.

The inquiry conducted by the committee, it is suggested, looks singly and solely to the gentleman. The committee, sir, had to deal with the evidence and pursue the inquiry as it was developed to their inspection. If a witness testified to circumstances that seemed to point to the gentleman from Maine, it was not their discretion but their duty to pursue that clew wherever it should lead.

I do not know by what intimation the committee were enabled to get information upon which to summon witnesses. I know that I have not spoken a word to the committee since it had charge of the resolution or before in respect to who should be summoned or in respect to the conduct of the investigation, with the single exception that I made to the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. HUNTON] a protest that this investigation should not be permitted to take the form of a personal matter, but should go on purely as a public inquest into transactions by a corporation which was in some respect amenable for its honest management to the Government of the country, and was charged wi'h unfaithfulness in the use of its franchise.

That covers my entire agency in the inception and prosecution of the matter.

In respect to one matter which has been referred to here—which was made the subject of controversy yesterday in the committee-room, as public prints report—I desire a single word. The gentleman from Maine seeks to encourage the impression that he is the object of a persecution in this matter, and that the committee which have charge of the investigation was intentionally constituted in furtherance of this persecution in an unfriendly manner. I happen to know, sir, that before I offered the resolution, before anybody knew I proposed to offer it, the committee having charge of the Pacific Railroad investigation, and to whom my resolution would go in natural course, had been constituted. I mean that under the Luttrell resolution which embraced the question of the management of the Pacific Railroad a committee had been designated before my resolution was thought of. There were ex-confederates, the gentleman diplomatically and with sinister object suggests, upon that committee. True, sir, but they could not have been selected from any consideration of their antagonism to the gentleman so far as any procedure under the resolution I am responsible for is concerned, because their designation antedated it. No one on this floor will deny that they are men of truth and honor.

And I repeat that the inception of this investigation could not have been in malice to the gentleman from Maine except that malice found harbor in my own breast. It could not have had its origin south of Mason and Dixon's line. The scheme of calumny, if there be one, is not the concoction of democratic malignity nor fed on democratic slander, for the charge and the testimony to support it is altogether of republican sources, and any attempt to gather political or personal capital by an impeachment of the loyal source of this investigation must fail; for it was not instituted on the motion of any man who has a doubtful Union record, but alone of one who not only was not in the confederate service but was in the Union Army other than by substitute! [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to my colleague, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question or two.

Mr. TARBOX. I am not under the catechism, but I will listen to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. Please state whether or not it was on Monday when you came to me and asked to be relieved from your promise that I returned and relieved you; whether it was not on Monday?

Mr. TARBOX. The gentleman is right. I will state it fully. On Monday, when I came into the House at the opening of the session, I met the gentleman from Maine, and suggested to him that inasmuch as Mr. BLAINE had returned I might as well introduce the resolution then, that day, Monday; to which he replied that he preferred to hold me to my understanding. I then went to my desk. Some time afterward, I would not state the length of time, perhaps half an hour, the gentleman came to me and asked whether I was willing he should examine the resolution I had prepared. I expressed my willingness and handed it to him, and he retired with it, and was absent some little space. When he returned and handed me back my resolution, he said that he relieved me from my obligation.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman a further question, whether or not he imposed upon me or indicated to me by any words whatever that there was any privacy in the statement made to me about his purpose in offering that resolution?

Mr. TARBOX. What?

Mr. FRYE. Whether you indicated to me by any words you regarded the conversation between you and me to be private?

Mr. TARBOX. By no manner of means, sir; and permit me in commentary on that to say I make no complaint, upon any law of obligation between gentlemen of which I know, of the use which has been made of that. I was applying the principle laid down by the distinguished colleague of the gentleman in another case. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to state, further, that this communication of what the gentleman from Massachusetts had said to me was made in the committee-room before those gentlemen who were then present, and a question arose as to the limitation which was involved in this resolution. Some gentlemen remarked, I think a member of the committee, that they understood Mr. TARBOX had said he did not arraign Mr. BLAINE in that resolution. I immediately responded I knew he did not; that Mr. TARBOX had informed me he had no purpose or thought of Mr. BLAINE; that it was some other gentleman. Now I do not feel, so far as I am personally concerned, that there is anything in the remarks of the gentleman for me to reply to.

A MEMBER. Then I would not do it.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to suggest this, however, which occurs to my mind, and which has, no doubt, occurred to the mind of many gentlemen on the floor of this House, that the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts of the sacredness of conversation, that it was as sacred as written letters, as private letters—I desire simply to say, in reply to that, that my colleague from Maine a short time ago made a speech in this House upon questions of finance; that it was a printed speech, and one copy of that printed speech had been surreptitiously taken from the possession of Mr. BLAINE or his printer; and that I have learned from good authority that Mr. BLAINE's printed speech, the copy surreptitiously taken from the printer, was on Mr. TARBOX's desk, who at once proceeded to reply. Therefore the sacredness of conversation, of private conversation as assumed by him, amazed me while that fact was in my possession. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. TARBOX rose.

Mr. BLAINE. I am on the floor. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TARBOX. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, what relation the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] have to the subject of the privileged question to which I rose, and I am quite unaware in what school of propriety the gentleman has been brought up. I do not know what he charges me with. I do understand what he intimates. I suppose it is that I by some improper method obtained possession of a speech which the gentleman from Maine intended to deliver as his best counsel to his countrymen upon a subject affecting deeply the public welfare, and that I made some improper use of that paper. I have simply to reply that what he states is utterly untrue. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the galleries and the House that such manifestations are entirely out of order. The Chair would apprise them that the House is a deliberative body.

Mr. TARBOX. Not by any means do I charge intentional untruth on the gentleman from Maine. I suppose he speaks from rumor; perhaps out of a suspicious temper; perhaps out of some irritation.

Mr. FRYE. Irritation at what?

Mr. TARBOX. Well, sir, all the irritation that I can conceive the gentleman to feel in respect to the transaction in question is that by a certain circumstance a deliverance upon a public question that was made for personal purposes and not from patriotic considerations for the public good, which contained within it that which was calculated, spoken by a statesman, to mislead his countrymen, was not permitted to go forth to the country without certain of its misstatements having been refuted on the spot. [Laughter from the Republican side of the House.]

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman now, as he says what I stated was untrue, whether or not he did have a copy of Mr. BLAINE's speech on his desk?

Mr. TARBOX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman should not make a charge and then cross-examine the man he charges with an offense, in order to find out whether it is true or not.

Mr. FRYE. Well, was it true? [After a pause.] I have nothing further to say.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to state the transaction to which my colleague has referred. I never supposed the occasion would arise when I should desire or be induced to state it in the House.

Before I came away from my home last autumn to resume my public duties here, I did as many gentlemen have done, prepared a speech upon an absorbing public question. It was upon the currency. That speech was printed at the newspaper office with which I was for many years connected. It was printed in confidence. It was sacredly confided to the Associated Press with the intimation on the top of the speech that whoever found himself in possession of a copy of it before its publication was in possession of it wrongfully.

Circumstances of a varying character arising postponed the delivery of the speech from the month of December, when I had expected to deliver it, until the 10th of February. Meanwhile, five or six weeks before I did deliver it, I ascertained that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] had a copy in his possession. I think he offered it to some newspaper men to publish. How it came into his possession I do not know. I never have been able to ascertain. I have surmises. I assert that it was there, and that it was in his possession for weeks, and that his holding it was as gross a violation of the primal laws of honesty as though he had held my watch. I have never recognized the gentleman since. I have only recognized him to-day to state this fact.

I now call up the motion to reconsider the resolution for printing certain evidence taken before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TARBOX rose,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLAINE. I will hear what he has to say.

Mr. TARBOX. I understood the gentleman from Maine to intimate that I had offered a printed speech purporting to be his to some public newspaper.

Mr. BLAINE. I had heard so.

Mr. TARBOX. It is not true.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman a while ago stated that it was not true that he had a copy.

Mr. TARBOX. I did not hear what the gentleman remarked.

Mr. BLAINE. In answer to my colleague I understood the gentleman to say it was not true he had a copy.

Mr. TARBOX. I made no such statement.

EVIDENCE IN PACIFIC RAILROAD INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BLAINE. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House yesterday passed a resolution in regard to the printing of certain evidence before the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House continue the consideration of the Geneva award bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I am on the floor for a highly privileged motion.

Mr. LORD. I appeal to the House to proceed with the pending business.

Mr. BLAINE. I cannot be taken off the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Geneva award bill to be pending now as unfinished business. Is that true?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is evidently true.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I rise to a question of order. I read from page 195 of the Digest:

It is in order at any time, even when a member is on the floor or the highest privileged question is pending, on the same or succeeding day to move a reconsideration and have it entered, but it cannot be taken up and considered while another question is before the House.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I would ask my colleague that, if there is anything in the point of order, he will not insist upon it and prevent the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] from replying to the personal attack upon him.

Mr. BLAINE. O, I have no reply to make to the member from Massachusetts, [Mr. TARBOX.] [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I hope the regular order will not be insisted on, but that the gentleman from Maine will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. MORRISON. Let the House proceed with its business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. BLAINE. O, no; I merely insist that I have the right to call up the motion under Rule 49.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state in explanation that I object to the taking up of the motion to reconsider, but I do not object to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] rising to a personal explanation in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. TARBOX.]

Mr. BLAINE. I have none to make; I have no personal explanation to make.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I object.

Mr. BLAINE. Object to what?

Mr. SPRINGER. To the taking up of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BLAINE. That is for the Speaker to decide. I have already made all the reply to the member from Massachusetts that I desire to make.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire here to call the attention of the Chair to a note on page 172 of the Digest to this effect:

If the motion be made when a different subject is before the House, it is entered and remains until that subject is disposed of, and then "takes precedence of all other business, except a motion to adjourn."

The motion to reconsider may be entered at any time, but cannot be considered while other business is pending.

Mr. BLAINE. I will be heard for one moment on the point of order. The Chair very courteously afforded me the opportunity, and I will avail myself of it. Rule 49 says:

When a motion has been once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof on the same or succeeding day; and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions, except a motion to adjourn, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House; and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration.

Now, I want the Chair to observe the full significance of this rule. Yesterday and to-day I have the legitimate parliamentary control of this motion. I entered it. I had the right yesterday and I have the right to-day under Rule 49 to call it up, to discuss it, and to ask the judgment of the House upon it. If I am deprived of that right by the ruling of the Chair or by any other cause, then any other gentleman can call it up and I do not have the parliamentary connection with it to which I am entitled.

Mr. GARFIELD. After to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, after to-day; but if I am deprived of that right the motion to reconsider goes into the hands of any gentleman whom the Chair may recognize who can call up the motion and move to lay it upon the table. I do not want to be heard in reply to anybody, but upon that resolution.

Mr. REAGAN. I have had no connection with what has been going on in this debate, but I want to say a word in the behalf of this House. The pending question before the House is the bill in relation to the Geneva award; that bill is now under consideration. A resolution was offered here for the printing of testimony taken before the committee, and a motion was yesterday entered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to reconsider that motion. That motion stands, to be taken up by the House under its rules. I do not care to say further than this, that so far as I understand the rules the motion having been entered confers upon no one the privilege to come in and arrest the regular business of the House.

I want to say one more thing, and that is that it is apparent to all that the object of all this is to take away from a committee of the House the investigation of a subject-matter committed to that committee by the action of the House. It is an appeal in fact from the committee that is hearing the matter, and I suppose we are to have now the same thing that we had the other day, an arraignment of the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman will allow me to correct him, I wish to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, in order to include in it a motion to print the telegram received from Josiah Caldwell and the proceedings before the committee yesterday.

Mr. REAGAN. That telegram has no business before the House; it is not evidence, and its substance has been stated.

Mr. BLAINE. And yet one of your committees has reported a resolution of censure against General Schenck on precisely the same kind of evidence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide the question without further debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the Chair decides that question I wish to say that the Committee on Foreign Affairs did receive certain telegrams from London in regard to General Schenck's connection with the Emma Mine, but those telegrams were submitted to him before they were used. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. Why did not they submit this telegram to me? [Great applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I presume they will submit it to the gentleman in good time for him to answer it.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, "in good time."

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [rapping with his gavel.] The House will be in order.

Mr. BLAINE. It has been seven days in the possession of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be seated.

Mr. BLAINE. One moment, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No, sir; there is no necessity of discussing that matter on a point of order. The Chair must come to the point of order and decide it for the furtherance of the public business. The Chair is not here to listen to anything but in explanation of the rules which he is bound to enforce. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] whether they have not already claimed the floor on the Geneva award bill, and whether some progress was not had thereon after the morning hour?

Mr. LORD. We did claim the floor on that bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. But no progress was made in its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] claim the floor?

Mr. MCCRARY. I did; but I do not understand that there was any progress made in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LORD. Allow me to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY]——

Mr. BLAINE. A moment——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide this matter. If the Chair has any authority it is to enforce the rules simply as the organ of the House. The Geneva award bill being before the House, according to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] this rule applies:

It is in order at any time, even when a member is on the floor, or the highest privileged question is pending, on the same or succeeding day to move a reconsideration and have it entered, but it cannot be taken up and considered while another question is before the House.

That rule is imperative. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] can call up his motion to reconsider at some other time; but the Geneva award bill is now before the House.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I understand the Chair to rule that I lose my control over the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No, sir; the Chair has ruled no such thing. The Chair rules that for the present the Geneva award bill is before the House. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] the moment he rises on the floor when there is no other matter properly pending before the House. The Chair rules according to the rules.

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair will not understand——

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [rapping with his gavel.] Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair has said that he has ruled according to the rules of the House. The Chair will permit me to say that while that may be so——

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [again rapping with his gavel.] Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BLAINE. I will be through quicker than the Chair can strike twice with his gavel. The Chair will not understand that, in submitting to his ruling gracefully, as I do, I concur in it at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not understand anything of the kind. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] is entitled to the floor upon the Geneva award bill.

GENEVA AWARD.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. MCCRARY. I desire to confine my remarks upon this bill mainly to what I regard as the fundamental inquiry in the discussion. That inquiry is whether the fund paid into the hands of the United States as the proceeds of the Geneva arbitration and award is a trust fund which we are bound to pay to certain particular claimants, or whether it is a fund paid to this Government to be distributed according to its discretion, and according to its view of what is required by equity and justice and good faith toward its own citizens. This I say is the fundamental question. If it be decided, as I think it must be, that the Government of the United States may exercise its discretion in the disposition of this fund, then I think there will be but little difficulty in determining what ought to be done with it.

One class of the claimants, the insurance companies, represented by the minority of the committee, have already been enriched by war premiums charged and received on account of the very causes which gave rise to the treaty of Washington and resulted in the Geneva award. In order that the importance and the significance of this question may be seen by the House, I beg to state a few facts which have now passed into history and will not be questioned.

Very soon after the outbreak of the war of the rebellion Great Britain, animated no doubt by a hope that her oft-repeated prophecy of the downfall of this Republic was about to be fulfilled, recognized the belligerent rights of the Confederate States. That recognition and the events which followed gave rise to what were known as the Alabama claims, to the treaty of Washington, and to the Geneva arbitration. Before that recognition, Mr. Speaker, our commerce was safe upon the high seas. The confederacy had no ships of war and no means of producing them. It was not long after that recognition until a large number of confederate cruisers were armed and equipped in British ports and let loose upon the high seas to prey upon American commerce and to destroy American shipping. This, in a word, was the cause of our complaint against Great Britain. It was maintained by the Government of the United States from the very commencement that the losses which our American ship-owners and our American merchants suffered by reason of these cruisers were caused by the hasty recognition of the belligerent rights of the confederacy and by the subsequent course of the government of Great Britain in permitting rebel cruisers to fit out in and sail from her ports. As one of the results of these causes the rates of insurance went up to enormous proportions. The insurance companies who insured American ships charged very high war premiums; and as a result of the business of insuring American ships and cargoes against war risks, the insurance companies, which are now claimants for a portion of this fund, realized a profit in the aggregate of more than $2,000,000. Various ships were destroyed that were not insured. Persons who paid, because these cruisers were abroad upon the ocean, large sums of money as war premiums now ask, and I think justly, to be indemnified from this fund.

It is not my purpose to enter into detail. My task shall be to establish the proposition that it is within the power of Congress to exercise a discretion in the distribution of this fund and so to distribute it as to pay the actual losses, so as to pay the actual sufferers the amounts which they lost by reason of Great Britain's wrong. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that Congress is not bound to pay over this money or any part of it into the coffers of corporations that were enriched by the recognition of the confederacy by Great Britain and by the fact that confederate cruisers were permitted to be abroad upon the ocean. If, sir, this great arbitration between these two great nations has had no other result than this, that the fund received from Great Britain in order to carry out the award must be carried into the coffers of corporations that lost nothing but really enriched themselves by reason of the wrongs for which our damages were allowed, then our boast as to the honor that has been conferred upon this nation by the treaty of Washington and the Geneva award is an empty boast.

Now, I maintain the proposition that the Government of the United States has not put itself in this attitude, but has from the beginning to the end of this great and to us highly honorable controversy reserved the right to distribute this fund as right and justice and good faith may dictate. If I can settle that proposition, I think there will be little doubt as to what the House will do with the pending bill. The report of the majority provides a just, an equitable, a fair distribution of this fund, a distribution such as I am sure the House will not hesitate to agree to, if we shall find that this discretion exists.

In determining this question it is proper that we consider the treaty itself, the proceedings at Geneva, and the award of the arbitrators. I maintain that by reference to all of these it is apparent that the Government of the United States did retain control of this fund and the right to dispose of it to actual sufferers by reason of England's wrong, bounded only by the subject-matter of the arbitration.

But before I come to consider the main question, let me call the attention of the House to a preliminary consideration. This question, Mr. Speaker, has once been decided by Congress. After a long debate the two Houses agreed, and a bill was passed which is now the law of the land which recognizes the doctrine for which I contend, and which provides that the insurance companies which made money out of war premiums shall only recover the amount of their actual losses. The language of the law is as follows:

> No claim shall be admissible or allowed by said court, by or in behalf of any insurance company * * * unless such claimant shall show to the satisfaction of said court that during the late rebellion the sum of its * * * losses in respect to its * * * war risks exceeded the sum of its * * * premiums or other gains upon or in respect to such war risks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under that law the proper court has distributed about one-half of this large fund. Upon that principle about ten millions of the twenty million dollars originally in the Treasury, including interest and premium on gold, has been distributed. Now, I do not say that this Congress may not reverse the policy of the last Congress; but I do say that as a matter of public policy it is exceedingly impolitic for one Congress upon a subject of this character to change the policy established by another.

Let us look at it for a moment. Congress has deliberately decided upon a rule by which this fund shall be distributed. By that rule a large class of claimants are denied relief because they are not losers, but gainers, on account of the acts of which the Government complained and for which the Government received this money. Under this rule, established by solemn act of Congress, we have proceeded until the fund is one-half exhausted.

Now, sir, if that rule is reversed, if it be now declared that the insurance companies are entitled to this money, no man can say the fund will hold out until they are all paid, because one-half of it has been distributed upon the other theory. And if the fund does not hold out, who will undertake to say these corporations will not successfully demand the payment of their claims out of the Treasury of the United States for any balance over and above the amount of the fund? I think, Mr. Speaker, that a question of this character once decided, once passed into law, ought not to be changed unless there be very grave and controlling reasons for so doing, especially after a large part of the fund has been distributed.

But, sir, I proceed to show, as I believe I can, from the treaty itself, from the proceedings at Geneva, and from the award, that the Government of the United States has retained the control of this fund; that it was paid to this Government as a nation, without any requirement that it should be distributed to particular claimants, but with the distinct understanding that the Government retained the right to distribute it in its own discretion.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. MCCRARY. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. Are you prepared to state what proportion of this award has been paid to these insurance companies in comparison to what has been paid to actual losers?

Mr. MCCRARY. Mr. Speaker, under the law as it stands insurance companies are entitled to their actual losses, and I am told that they have claimed and recovered a small amount, a very small amount, because there were few companies that did not make money out of war risks.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The amount of claims put in was $48,000, and they proved $12,000.

Mr. MCCRARY. Now, sir, I insist under the treaty it was intended that if a sum in gross should be paid to the United States, that sum should be paid to the United States as a nation without restriction as to the disposition of the fund by this Government. By reference to the treaty it will be seen that two plans were proposed for the settlement of these claims. first it was proposed that the arbitrators might, if they saw fit, provide for the appointment of assessors before whom all private claimants should present their claims and prove them up. Or, if that was not agreed to, then it was proposed and provided that a sum in gross might be paid by the government of Great Britain to the Government of the United States.

And now I want to call the attention of the House to the two articles of the treaty, the one which provides for the appointment of assessors, and the other which provides for the payment of a sum in gross. I ask the especial attention of the House to the difference between these two articles, because the difference is very striking, and, as I think, very significant. If the proposition to refer the claims to assessors had been adopted, then it was provided that those assessors should be guided and governed in the allowance of claims by the decisions and findings of the board of arbitration. But in case a sum in gross was allowed to the Government of the United States, a very different provision was made. In the latter case there is no limitation to be found in the award except this: that the sum paid to the Government of the United States shall be in satisfaction of all the claims referred to the tribunal.

Let me call the attention of the House to the exact language of these two articles, and comment briefly on them. Article 7, which relates to the payment of a sum in gross, provides as follows:

In case the tribunal finds that Great Britain has failed to fulfill any duty or duties as aforesaid, it may, if it think proper, proceed to award a sum in gross to be paid by Great Britain to the United States.

For what? For such claims as the arbitrators have specifically allowed? For any particular claims, to satisfy any class of claims to the exclusion of others? No, sir.

To be paid by Great Britain to the United States for all the claims referred to it.

For all the claims referred to the tribunal. Now, sir, that is peculiar language, and it must have been inserted in the treaty for a purpose. I shall show, Mr. Speaker, presently that this language is repeated, with little variation, several times in the treaty and in the award.

But when you contrast it with article 10, which provides for the appointment of assessors, the House will discover at once why this difference, why this peculiar language in one article which is not found in the other. Article 10, which relates to the allowance of claims by assessors, is as follows:

In case the tribunal finds that Great Britain has failed to fulfill any duty or duties as aforesaid and does not award a sum in gross, the high contracting parties agree that a board of assessors shall be appointed to ascertain and determine what claims are valid and what amount or amounts shall be paid by Great Britain to the United States on account of the liability arising from such failure as to each vessel—as to each vessel according to the extent of such liability, as decided by the arbitrators.

Here is the point I call the attention of the House to—

Now, Mr. Speaker, why was not that language in article 7? Why was no limitation put upon the Government of the United States as to the disposition of this fund? It was provided in case assessors were appointed they should be guided by the decisions of the arbitrators, and it was provided if a sum in gross was paid to the United States it should be for "all the claims referred to the tribunal."

Now, sir, it is very plain that a different mode of distribution was intended under section 10 from that which is provided under section 7. I will show as I proceed why it was that the arbitrators were careful, and why it was that this language was inserted; that it was simply and solely because it was the settled policy of the United States to insist that this Government should not be committed as to the mode or manner of the distribution of any gross sum that might be allowed. Hence it was that when they provided for a sum in gross they provided nothing but that it should be in satisfaction of all the claims; but when they came to talk about submitting these claims to assessors, then they inserted the restrictions.

It was of importance to Great Britain in case the claims were to be settled by assessors, without any maximum sum being named in the treaty, that the rules should be laid down whereby these claims should be determined and the amount paid to each claimant should be fixed. But, sir, when it was proposed to pay a sum in gross to the United States in satisfaction of all claims, it became a matter of no consequence whatever to Great Britain what the United States did with the money.

I shall recur again to some other features of the treaty before I conclude, but I pass now to show by the proceedings at Geneva that this Government is not committed as to the disposition of this fund. Our policy on the subject was declared in language that cannot be misunderstood in the instructions given by this Government to our counsel at Geneva, from which I read as follows; and as I regard this as very significant, I would like to have the attention of the House to it:

The President desires to have the subject discussed as one between the two governments, and he directs me to urge upon you strongly to secure if possible the award of a sum in gross. In the discussion of this question, and in the treatment of the entire case, you will be careful not to commit the Government as to the disposition of what may be awarded. * * * The Government wishes to hold itself free to decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case. If the value of the property captured or destroyed be recovered in the name of the Government, the distribution of the amount recovered will be made by this Government, without committal as to the mode of distribution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the counsel of the United States before the tribunal at Geneva did not violate the instructions given by this Government, then I say that this Government is not committed as to the mode of distribution. And gentlemen who come here representing insurance companies and claiming that this Government is committed by the proceedings and the award at Geneva must do so upon the assumption that this positive, direct, imperative, and explicit instruction given by the Government to its own counsel was disregarded and was not obeyed.

Sir, if it became necessary in the course of that negotiation for the counsel of the United States to submit to a decision which would compel this Government to pay these $20,000,000 into the coffers of corporations that had been enriched by England's wrongs, if it became necessary in the course of that negotiation for our counsel to determine the question whether we should withdraw from the arbitration or tie the hands of this Government in that way, it would have been the imperative duty of the counsel on the part of the United States to insist upon a withdrawal from the negotiation. They were commanded by their Government to see to it that the Government of the United States was left free as to—

"The disposition of what may be awarded" and especially free "to decide as to the rights and claims of insurers upon the termination of the case" and to distribute any sum recovered in the name of the government "without committal as to the mode of distribution."

But, sir, the counsel of this Government were not false to their client and to their high trust. They did not fail to do their duty. They did not violate the order and the instruction which this Government had given them. They were careful from the beginning to the end of the negotiation to make it a negotiation between the two governments alone and not in any manner to commit this Government to do injustice as between its own citizens. Our counsel, in pursuance of this instruction, said to the tribunal:

These claims are all preferred by the United States as a nation against Great Britain as a nation, and are to be so computed and paid.

Now, sir, what did they mean when they said that this money was to be paid to the United States as a nation? It follows inevitably that it was not paid to the United States as a mere attorney or agent or trustee for any class of claimants whatever.

Mr. HURD. The nation may be a trustee.

Mr. McCRARY. The nation, my friend from Ohio says, may be a trustee. So it may. But you must put your finger on the authority which makes it a trustee. Where is the authority in all these proceedings for saying that this Government accepted the position of a trustee, much less of a trustee for the insurance companies or for any particular class of these claimants? Why, sir, from the very beginning this Government insisted that all these wrongs and injuries resulting from the recognition of the confederacy as a belligerent nation were just claims of damages on behalf of the citizens of the United States. The President in his message as early as 1870 recommended to Congress that all these claims be allowed and paid by this Government as a basis for a claim to be made thereafter by the United States against Great Britain. It is not to be presumed, sir, that this Government, for the sake of collecting money to be paid over to the insurance companies, intended to sacrifice the rights of other claimants whose claims were far more meritorious.

Well, sir, did the Government of the United States ever waive its right to distribute this fund in its own discretion? If so, when and where? Not surely by the award which it consented to and under which it received the money, for I will now undertake to show to the House that the most conclusive of all the proof on this subject is the award itself, and that, Mr. Speaker, is the instrument under which the money was paid. If anywhere there is to be found evidence to show what the United States was to do with this fund, surely it must be in the award, the final end, conclusion, and summing up of the whole matter. If the United States is a trustee for any particular class of claimants, surely we will find some evidence to that effect in the award which directed the money to be paid.

Now let us turn to the award for a moment and see how careful the representatives of the United States were to carry out and not violate or disregard the injunctions of the Government in regard to leaving the United States perfectly free and in no manner committed as to the mode of distributing this fund. I read now from the award itself:

The tribunal, making use of the authority conferred upon it by article 7 of the said treaty, by a majority of four voices to one, awards to the United States a sum of $15,500,000 in gold, as the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States, for the satisfaction of all the claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal, conformably to the provisions contained in article 7 of the aforesaid treaty.

Now, there are two or three things that I wish to call attention to in that part of the award. The money was awarded to the United States, not to any claimants, not for any particular claimants, but "as indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States, for the satisfaction of all claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal."

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Government of the United States took the money to be paid to a particular class of claimants, to the insurance companies, how could it be said that it was received in satisfaction of all claims referred to in the treaty? I apprehend, sir, that a man who owned a vessel that was uninsured, worth $50,000, which was run down and destroyed by one of the rebel cruiser not mentioned as inculpated by the tribunal, would think it a strange sort of satisfaction of his claim to pay the money over to the United States to be applied to other people's claims, and with the express injunction and provision that the Government should not use one dollar of it for the liquidation of his claim. A curious sort of satisfaction that. And yet this solemn instrument, the award of the tribunal, declares that this sum is paid to the United States in satisfaction of all claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal, all of the claims known as Alabama claims. Sir, it was to be in satisfaction of all the claims because this Government took the money to distribute as it might deem just.

I read again from this award:

And, in accordance with the terms of article 11 of the said treaty, the tribunal declares that "all the claims referred to in the treaty as submitted to the tribunal are hereby fully, perfectly, and finally settled." Furthermore, it declares that "each and every one of the said claims, whether the same may or may not have been presented to the notice of, or made, preferred, or laid before the tribunal, shall henceforth be considered and treated as finally settled, barred, and inadmissible."

And yet, Mr. Speaker, it is seriously contended that by that award the Government of the United States holds this fund as a mere trustee to pay to a certain class of claimants. The award was not for specific claims. If such had been the purpose of the tribunal, it would have been very easy to have expressed it. The tribunal found no difficulty in expressing its idea in reference to the allowance of claims by assessors, and it would have found no difficulty in saying, "the tribunal awards to the United States $15,500,000 for the purpose of paying the claims of certain claimants, according to the decisions of the tribunal." It would have been easy, I say, to have inserted language of that sort; but, sir, our counsel stood there, and they had been instructed by their Government that they were not to submit to anything of that sort; that this Government would not take the money if it should be bound by the award to do anything with it which it did not believe to be right and just in its dealings with its own people, and hence it was that all Great Britain demanded, all the United States submitted to was, that it would take this money and it would be considered a full settlement of all the claims referred to the tribunal, not all the claims allowed by the tribunal, not all the claims coming within the interlocutory decisions of the tribunal, but all the claims referred to the tribunal.

Why, sir, it is even provided that this fund paid to the United States shall be in full satisfaction for all claims whether presented to the tribunal or not. How could the United States become a trustee for the payment of specific claims under an instrument like that? A trust is not ordinarily created without some language being used implying that there is a trust. No man can read the award of the tribunal which I have read to the House and say that it was in the minds of the arbitrators to limit, prescribe, and control the mode of distributing that fund.

Why, sir, the men who sat in that tribunal, the men who penned that award, were great and learned men; they knew the force of language, and it cannot be that they intended any such thing as this when they used the language to which I have called the attention of the House.

But it is said (and this is the great argument on behalf of the insurance companies) that the award was founded upon a certain class of claims, that the amount of it was ascertained by referring to a certain schedule setting forth the claims chiefly of insurance companies, and that the Government of the United States obtained this money by making use of the evidence furnished by the insurance companies, and that now it is bound to pay it over to them.

Sir, there might be something in this argument if this statement embraced all the facts in the case; but it does not. The gentlemen who make these arguments overlook the fact that when this Government submitted to the decision of the tribunal as to the particular vessels concerning whose acts Great Britain was to be held responsible—when this Government submitted to that decision it did so giving notice to the tribunal, giving notice to Great Britain, that it reserved the right to dispose of this fund in its own discretion in distributing it among its own citizens. Therefore the proposition that this Government recovered this amount of money upon the showing made at Geneva by the insurance companies, even if it were true, would have no controlling influence in the decision of this question. But it does not appear to be true.

It is impossible to say upon what data, upon what evidence, the arbitrators arrived at the sum of $15,500,000. Various claims had been presented; such evidence as the United States could command was laid before the tribunal. But the Government expressly declared that it was not to be bound by anything that was presented. The tribunal ascertained the amount from the best evidence it could get. But, like the proceedings in a jury-room, it is impossible to say what controlled or influenced the decision of the arbitrators in fixing the sum.

Upon that subject perhaps no man is better informed than Mr. J. Bancroft Davis, who was the agent of the United States at Geneva. I ask to read to the House what he says about it. Mr. Davis says this:

It is evident that the arbitrators, to facilitate the investigations, wished to have before them a comparative summary of that which the United States claim and the criticism of these claims by England, criticism bearing upon the items as well as upon the classes of claims. These tables, made by the two parties in no way bind the arbitrators. They are simply indications suited to guide the tribunal across the mass of figures and details contained in the cases and the evidences of the two governments.

Again, he says:

It does not appear in the protocols how the arbitrators arrived at this amount. I am informed that it was reached by mutual concessions. The neutral arbitrators and Mr. Adams, from the beginning of the proceedings, were convinced of the policy of awarding a sum in gross. * * * We therefore devoted our energies toward securing such a sum as should be practically an indemnity to the sufferers. Whether we have or have not been successful can be determined only by the final division of the sum.

I have said, and I based the statement upon what appears in the record, that our counsel at Geneva obeyed the instructions which were given them by the Government. I think I have shown that they did so. But I have a little further testimony upon that subject; it is the opinion of one of the counsel who represented the Government before that tribunal; I mean Hon. Caleb Cushing.

Mr. Cushing, counsel for our Government, in his book upon the Alabama claims, says:

The award is to the United States, in conformity with the letter of the treaty, which has for its well-defined object to adjust and remove complaints and claims on the part of the United States.

But the history of the treaty and of the arbitration shows that the United States recovered not for the benefit of the American Government as such, but of such individual citizens of the United States as shall appear to have suffered loss by the acts or neglects of the British government. It is, however, not a special trust legally affected by any particular claimant or claims, but a general fund, to be administered by the United States in good faith, in conformity with their own conception of justice and equity within the range of the award. Nor does the tribunal define formally what claims shall be satisfied otherwise than in the comprehensive terms of the award, which declares that the sum awarded is the indemnity to be paid by Great Britain to the United States for the satisfaction of all claims referred to the consideration of the tribunal.

He further says:

The arbitrators, be it observed, do not say that it is for the satisfaction of certain specific claims among those referred to the consideration of the tribunal, but of all the claims so referred conformably to the provisions of the treaty.

And again, and more especially upon the point which I am discussing, as to whether the counsel of the United States carried out the instructions given to them by this Government, Mr. Cushing in a more recent opinion says:

The counsel of the United States were specially instructed by the Government to avoid committing the United States to any theory of distribution as regards either claims or claimants, and especially not to commit the United States in the matter of the claims of insurers.

* * * * * * *

5. The counsel of the United States obeyed the instructions given them, and did not commit the United States to any theory of distribution whatever, either by way of inclusion or of exclusion, but left that question to be determined by the wisdom and discretion of Congress.

The United States at Geneva laid before the tribunal all the claims of citizens of the United States which had been presented to the Government, without vouching for the validity of any of them; but insisted that the United States were not bound by the printed schedules, but only by the description of the treaty—"all the said claims, growing out of acts committed by the aforesaid vessels, and generally known as the Alabama claims." (Protocol XXVI.)

So it appears, not only from the language employed in the treaty and award and from the whole course of the proceedings at Geneva but also from the statement of one of the counsel of the United States, that they did obey instructions, and did not commit this Government as to the distribution of this fund.

But this very view of the subject has been taken by British statesmen themselves, and I wish now to call the attention of the House to that. Certain citizens of England who had lost by the Alabama, claimed indemnity from their own government, insisting that, inasmuch as Great Britain had consented to indemnify the citizens of another nation (the United States) for losses occasioned by those cruisers, that government was bound to indemnify its own citizens in like manner. And a claim of this character was made in the British Parliament. But it was not considered as valid. The reason given was that the government of Great Britain had not indemnified any citizen of the United States; that the claim of no citizen of the United States had ever been considered or allowed by the Geneva tribunal or paid by the British government under that award. During the debate in the British Parliament Mr. Anderson asked—

If we were obliged to pay for damage sustained by the Americans, by reason of the conduct of the Alabama, why were we not equally bound to pay for the damage sustained by our own subjects by reason of the acts of that vessel?

Mr. Gladstone, then prime minister, said in reply:

It appears to be implied that the government submitted the claims of certain persons not subjects of Her Majesty to arbitration.

This is altogether a mistake. No claims of individuals have been submitted to arbitration in relation to the Alabama.

What was submitted to arbitration was entirely a question between the two governments.

The report of this debate is to be found in the London Times of May 27, 1873, and is quoted in a volume of the Foreign Relations of the United States, part 1, page 371.

So that the statesmen of Great Britain themselves, who must be presumed to have been familiar with the proceedings of the tribunal, to have understood the views and purposes of the two governments concerned and of the tribunal itself, have declared upon this subject that the tribunal had nothing to do with the claims of individuals, and that this was simply a question between the two governments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to some decisions upon this question which have been rendered by the court of commissioners of Alabama claims. The very question now under consideration has been repeatedly brought to the attention of that court, and has legitimately and properly arisen in the discharge of its duties under the law; for a treaty, Mr. Speaker, is the supreme law of this land. And if this treaty makes this a trust fund and vests the title to the fund in certain specific claimants, it is not within the power of Congress to divert the fund from the claimants who are entitled to it under and by virtue of the treaty itself. This question, I say, has been repeatedly made before the court of commissioners of Alabama claims; a tribunal, I undertake to say, entitled to great respect for its ability, learning, and high character.

Mr. HURD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether, from the very nature of its constitution, that court is not one of limited jurisdiction?

Mr. McCRARY. Undoubtedly it is a court of limited jurisdiction. What I say is that this question arises properly and necessarily in the administration of the duties devolved upon that court by the law under which it is created.

Mr. LORD. Is not the jurisdiction of the court limited only as to the subject-matter of the claim? Does not the statute confer upon it the broadest power in other respects?

Mr. McCRARY. Unquestionably it is limited only as to the subject-matter over which it shall have jurisdiction; but there is no limitation upon that court which prevents it from deciding a constitutional question which may arise in the course of an adjudication properly brought before it.

Now, in the case of Hubbell vs. The United States that court uses this language:

Nothing can be found in those proceedings (at Geneva) to limit or control good faith on the part of our Government in making such allowance to claimants before us, as in their judgment and discretion Congress might think proper. In fact, the very able committee, to whom the British board of trade referred the investigation of the points at issue, say, in their report: "The proper compensation for the losses occasioned by the cruisers is the question we have to examine; but with the mode of distributing that among the various claimants the American Government alone is concerned."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LORD. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to continue; but I had agreed that at this point of time I would yield an hour to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] on another matter. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] prefer to continue his remarks now or at some other time?

Mr. MCCRARY. I shall conclude in a very few minutes, and I prefer to go on now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCRARY. Further on in this same opinion this court says:

The Government of the United States accepted the sum awarded in full settlement of all the claims comprehended in the terms of the treaty, and soon afterward Congress passed the act providing for its distribution among the claimants, which is to be our chief guide in the actual work of distribution. It is clear that the Government had the right to prescribe the terms on which claimants should present their claims. They were not strong enough to compel payment of the money by Great Britain, and when this Government obtained it the claimants had no legal rights to it except that which this Government, by its own acts, chose to accord. They must, therefore, take their respective shares of it subject to all the conditions which the Government has thought fit to appoint, or not take them at all.

I might read from numerous opinions of that court; but I will content myself with reading only from one more, which is a very recent case. I refer to the case of Rhind vs. The United States, in which the court say:

The award was made in favor of the Government and not in favor of the claimants. The Government thus vindicated the national honor; but it did not assume to pay any particular class of claimants, nor any particular claim. Having obtained the money by its own act and at its own cost, it had the right to prescribe the terms on which the distribution should be made. It certainly had the power to exclude certain claimants and to include others less meritorious. In the act now before us, claimants are excluded who believe themselves justly entitled to a part of the fund; but they have no power to assert their right to it. Under the powers committed to us we have in some instances rejected altogether claims presented at Geneva, and in many more instances we have largely reduced such claims in amount.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, I have shown that by the treaty itself, by the proceedings at Geneva, by the terms of the award, and by the decisions of the only court to which these questions have been submitted, it has been settled that this fund was paid to the United States to be distributed among the sufferers by reason of England's wrong in its own discretion.

It is claimed that the United States acted in that arbitration as the attorney or as the agent of these claimants. I deny it. There is no evidence to support it. All the evidence contradicts the proposition. But sir, if the Government of the United States did assume the position of an agent or an attorney it was alike the agent and representative of all the claimants named and referred to in the treaty of Washington. And if gentlemen could sustain the proposition that this Government was there in the capacity of an agent, not to settle great questions of international law, but to collect certain claims which citizens of the United States had against Great Britain by reason of her wrong-doing, they would only succeed in showing, according to their theory of what our Government did, that never did an agent and never did an attorney so betray a trust.

They would have you believe, Mr. Speaker, that this Government came before that great tribunal as the representative and agent of all these claimants, and so conducted its agency, so represented its principals or its clients, as to give the greater part of this whole award of $20,000,000 to men who do not in honesty and good faith deserve to receive a single dollar, and so as to deprive others who have lost their all by England's wrong of the right to recover a single cent.

A citizen of the United States was the owner of a vessel upon the high seas. With true patriotism and with true courage he took his own risk. He unfurled the Stars and Stripes over his vessel, when by showing foreign colors he would have been safe. He had no insurance. A rebel cruiser let loose from a port in Great Britain runs down his vessel and it is destroyed. His all is gone and he is entitled from no source, if not from this fund, to recover a single dollar of indemnity. This patriotic and loyal citizen places his claim in the hands of his Government, and his Government goes before this great tribunal to assert his rights, insisting it was England's wrong which resulted in his ruin. An insurance company that made its million of dollars out of war premiums, having in the course of its business to pay the loss on another vessel, places its claim, too, in the hands of this Government, and asks the Government to be its representative before this high tribunal and to insist upon its rights. The Government, according to gentlemen, accepted the position of agent or of attorney for these two claimants. It went before that high court. Before going, however, it pledged itself to these claimants, and to its citizens, and to the world, that it would not under any circumstances so tie its hands as to be unable to distribute fairly and justly any sum in gross which might be paid into its Treasury as the result of its negotiations. Yet, after all that, are we to be told that this Government, in its capacity as attorney or agent, has gone before that tribunal and has violated its promise to the people and to the claimants, and has so conducted that negotiation that the citizen who lost his all can recover nothing from this fund, and the insurance company that made its million shall carry off its whole claim? Sir, you disgrace the nation when you say it acted as attorney in this case, and you disgrace it more when you undertake to show to Congress and the American people that when acting as attorney it conducted itself in this way. No lawyer could retain his place at the bar in any respectable court on the face of the earth who should so betray his client.

Mr. LORD. I move the consideration of the Geneva award bill be postponed until half past seven o'clock this evening, and that in the mean time Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, be permitted to call up a bill which I understand had precedence of the Geneva award bill, but was yielded in order to give me the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be ordered accordingly. The Chair understands that no business whatever is to be transacted in case a night session is had.

Mr. LORD. I intended that as part of my motion.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move to take from the Speaker's table a bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and move that the House further insists on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agrees to the committee of conference asked for on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as the committee of conference under the order just made Mr. SINGLETON, Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. WALDRON.

CHEBOYGAN.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2140) establishing Cheboygan, in the State of Michigan, a port of delivery.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the amendment of the Senate, as follows.

At the end of the bill insert the following:

And all acts and parts of acts declaring Duncan City a port of entry are repealed.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BRADLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 26) to remove the political disabilities of Francis T. Nicholls, of Louisiana;

An act (H. R. No. 2288) granting a pension to Fannie S. White;

An act (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of A. F. McMillen, late captain First United States Heavy Artillery; and

An act (H. R. No. 3179) granting a pension to Thomas F. Wildes, late lieutenant-colonel One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE ON DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR BILL.

Mr. WALDRON. Mr. Speaker, I expect to be absent next week, and I ask to be excused from service on the conference committee appointed a few moments ago.

There was no objection, and Mr. WALDRON was excused.

PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3676) to provide for the examination of candidates for the appointment of professor of mathematics in the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KASSON. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is referred with that understanding.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, asking the insertion in the sundry civil bill of a proviso making available for the year 1877 the unexpended balance of appropriation by the act of March 3, 1875, for Rock Island arsenal; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COMMISSIONERS TO TAKE TESTIMONY ON CLAIMS.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3677) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1872, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and an act entled "An act to authorize the commissioners of claims to appoint special commissioners to take testimony, and for other purposes," approved May 11, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TEST OF METALS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit the report of the board appointed to test iron, steel, and other metals, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875.

This board is to determine by actual tests the strength and value of all metals, and to prepare tables which will exhibit their strength and value for all constructions.

The accompanying memorials and resolutions of scientific associations, colleges, and schools strongly advocate the continuation of this board, which is national in its character and general in its investigations.

The board asks for an appropriation of $50,000 for the ensuing year, and that any unexpended balances remaining on hand on the 30th of June, 1876, may be re-appropriated.

This recommendation is submitted for favorable action, in the belief that the labors of the board will in the benefits accruing to important industrial interests more than repay to the country at large any money that may be so expended.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 7, 1876.

NOTE.—Accompanying papers sent with duplicate of this message to the Senate.

The message was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the Chair puts the question on that motion, he desires to submit to the House certain requests.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was given, as follows:

To Mr. HATHORN for one week on account of important business.

To Mr. SEELYE for one week.

To Mr. DAVY for ten days.

To Mr. KING for four weeks on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. GOODIN for nine days.

To Mr. MUTCHLER for three days.

To Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, for three weeks from June 10.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAGE. Has not a motion been made to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky had the floor before the motion was made to adjourn and has the right to state his motion.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. No. 2798) to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago. This bill has been a special order since the 18th of April. It is a short bill and I think we can pass it in half an hour. I do not propose to discuss it unless it is opposed and questions are asked in regard to it. But I hope the bill will be read and attentively listened to by the House.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock when, by previous order, the House will meet for debate only on the Geneva award bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope the House will vote down the motion for a recess. The bill called up by the gentleman from Kentucky is a short bill and ought to be acted upon.

The question being taken on the motion for a recess, there were—ayes 56, noes 54.

So (further count not being demanded) the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House re-assembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. COX in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session this evening will be devoted to the discussion of the Geneva award bill; no vote to be taken and no other business to be transacted.

After a pause,

Mr. NEAL. There seems to be no gentleman present to address the House, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at seven o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. HILL: Memorial of citizens of Morgan and Walton Counties, Georgia, for a post-route from Rutledge to Fair Play, Georgia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Eli Petty, for compensation for property destroyed by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JENKS: The petition of William S. Lawrenson, for an increase of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANE: The petition of W. H. Musgrove and other citizens of Oregon, relative to Chinese immigration, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina: A paper relating to the claim of Jones County, North Carolina, for compensation for court-house destroyed by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 9, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read; and, on motion of Mr. INGALLS, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 8, 1876.

SIR: I am in receipt of Senate resolution of May 23, 1876, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a detailed estimate of the amount that would be required to execute House bill No. 2454, as reported with amendments by the Senate Committee on Pensions, and in reply have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter from the Third Auditor of the Treasury, who states that it is impracticable to give the detailed estimate from the records of the war of 1812, as filed in his Office, in any reasonable time, with the present force at his command.

On a conference, however, with the Commissioner of Pensions, and from the most reliable data that can be obtained on the question, he estimates that under the fourteen days' clause in the bill there will probably be seventy-three hundred applicants, (survivors and widows,) which number, at $8 per month, will aggregate $700,800 per year. If, however, the bill is intended to apply only to those "who were in any engagement," and who served fourteen days, there would probably be sixteen hundred and twenty applicants, and the amount required will be $155,520 annually.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. T. W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KERNAN presented a petition of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of delegates of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, praying the passage of a law extending the time in which to make applications for pensions by members of that nation who were in the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PATTERSON presented a memorial of citizens of Charleston County, South Carolina, remonstrating against the adoption of that portion of the proposed treaty with the Hawaiian government which admits the free importation of rice into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DENNIS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes concerning commerce and navigation and regulation of steam-vessels, to report it back with amendments. I will state that the bill has been in the hands of the committee for a considerable time, but owing to circumstances over which they had no control it has not been acted upon until the present time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 914) to repeal an act entitled "An act to incorporate the proprietors of the Glenwood Cemetery," approved July 27, 1854; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 915) to remove the political disabilities of D. H. Hill, of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL H. CANFIELD.

Mr. WRIGHT. If there be no resolutions, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 715.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 715) for the relief of Samuel H. Canfield, postmaster at Seymour, Connecticut. It directs the Postmaster-General to allow Samuel H. Canfield, postmaster at Seymour, Connecticut, credit for such a sum of money, not exceeding $352, as shall cover the amount of money-order funds and post-office stamps which shall appear to the Postmaster-General, upon satisfactory evidence to him, to have been stolen from the office of that postmaster on the night of the 30th of March, 1874.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in lines 5 and 6, to strike out "not exceeding $352" and insert "not exceeding $193.36 on his account for stamps, nor exceeding $158.65 on his money-order account;" and after the word "stolen," in line 12, to insert "without fault on his part."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WRIGHT from the Committee on Claims May 31:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 715) for the relief of Samuel H. Canfield, postmaster at Seymour, Connecticut, submit the following report:

It appears from the report of the special agent of the Post-Office Department appointed to examine the facts and all the circumstances attending the alleged loss in this case, that Mr. Canfield is a first-class man, and in every respect reliable and worthy; that the stamps and funds were in a Sanborn patent safe weighing four tons, which was considered perfectly secure; that it was opened by professional burglars on the night of the 30th March, 1874, by means of drills and powder; that they escaped with the funds, taking other money and property in the store and safe belonging to Canfield and others; and that the loss occurred without fault or neglect on the part of the postmaster.

The money-order funds taken amounted to $158.65, the stamps to $193.36.

Deeming it better that these two funds should be kept separate and distinct, we recommend that the bill be so amended the better to effectuate this object, and with this and one other slight amendment we recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the report state what the means of getting at the amount of loss was, or does my friend know?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that the special agent appointed to examine this case reported that the books of the postmaster and also the account kept at the Department here, and the evidence before him, satisfied him of the correctness of the amount. He therefore estimated the balance upon each fund and reported that he is entitled to that amount. The bill as it came from the House aggregated these two amounts and allowed payment of the aggregate amount. We deemed it better to separate them and allow the claim for the stamp account and for the money-order account also. That is the amendment which the committee propose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT KEARNEY RESERVATION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 894.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 894) to provide for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation in the State of Nebraska.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 6, to insert after the word "only" the words "at the minimum price;" so as to read:

To offer said land to actual settlers only at the minimum price, under and in accordance with the provisions of the homestead laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know if there is any report from the War Department recommending the sale of this land?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was such a report last year. A bill of this character passed the Senate last year, with the exception that the provisions of the bill last year were to give the lands to the State; this bill gives the lands to the settlers upon them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where is this reservation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the western part of the State of Nebraska. It has been abandoned for several years by the military authorities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a place where there are a good many settlers, is it not, and where there is a railway?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, sir; it is not a place of large settlement. There are settlers on each one hundred and sixty acres of the reservation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How did they get there?

Mr. SPENCER. It is occupied by squatters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They have been there for several years. They are squatters.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is not that a junction of railways?

Mr. PADDOCK. On the south side.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is a junction near there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How large is this reservation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is about ten miles square.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I want to get at is, if the War Department recommend this sale, the question whether the land is not worth more than the minimum price if it has been settled up all around there and railroads run near by?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think that the average value of the reservation is greater than that of the lands in that immediate vicinity. Some of it may be more valuable, owing to the fact of the improvements made by the settlers upon the land, but not essentially so. The House has already passed a bill providing for the disposal of the lands to homestead settlers only. This bill as amended changes that in three respects. It provides that those settlers who prefer it may enter their lands under the pre-emption law. It provides also that the heirs of persons who have made valuable improvements upon these lands may enter the lands in accordance with the pre-emption law. Further, it makes a small appropriation to provide for the survey of the lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have found out where this reservation is. I ought to state to the Senate that it is a very valuable reservation. I was there a number of years ago. It is about two hundred miles from Omaha, is it not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. At that time there was a town on the reservation. Is there not a town there called Oldtown, and also a fort?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was a town near there at one time, I will say, but there is no town there now, and no fort, or any other buildings except the buildings on their farms occupied by the squatters.

Mr. SHERMAN. When I was there it was occupied by the Government as a military reservation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It has been abandoned many years by the military authorities.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that such a valuable tract of land ought to bring to the Government of the United States a considerable sum of money; but I do not want to interfere with the disposition of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think the land would average in value any more than the land in the vicinity, which is now offered at the same rate to actual settlers only.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, the Union Pacific Railroad is just on the north bank of the river, and this reservation is on the south bank, and there is another railroad which comes from the south and forms a junction.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not far off.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the reservation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. PADDOCK. The reservation is at some distance south of the Platte River.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think there is any material difference between the value of this land and of other lands open to settlers in the vicinity at the same rate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask my friend from Nebraska whether the railway lands have not been sold at two dollars and a half an acre, which are right along aside of these?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Some portions of the reservation might be within the reach of the railway limits. This reservation was reserved long ago before the railroad was ever chartered, and the settlers are on these lands, each one on his own one hundred and sixty acres. The only possible result to be obtained from any such rule would be to divide the farms of the settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the point. I am getting at the value of this land. The United States ought to get what it is worth inasmuch as it reserved it, as everybody knew. I think everybody will agree to that. A railway has been built along and by this reservation; I do not know but that it crosses it; I do not know how that is——

Mr. PADDOCK. No; both roads are some distance away.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the railway grants and the reserved lands of the United States have been disposed of to settlers to any considerable extent at two dollars and a half an acre in that vicinity, I do not see why it is not a pretty good evidence that these lands are worth two dollars and a half an acre, and if they are, I do not see why the United States Treasury ought not to have what they are worth. That is what I should like to have light upon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I said before, I think that but a very small portion of the reservation might possibly come within that limit; but if it did, the only advantage which the Government would obtain by establishing that rule now would be to divide up the farms of the settlers who have been on this land now for a long time, who supposed very properly that all of it would be entered in one-hundred-and-sixty-acre subdivisions, and who have already gone on and made their actual improvements. I do not think that any possible advantage would accrue to the Government from the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, while it would seriously embarrass the settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would certainly be an advantage if we could get two dollars and a half an acre instead of a dollar and a quarter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The advantage, the honorable Senator will see, if he understands the provisions of the homestead law, would be that settlers would be allowed simply to take eighty acres as homestead land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I understand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It makes no money for the Government, and it diminishes the size of the settlers' farms.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, that leaves the Government standing on the ordinary homestead law, eighty acres out of every one hundred and sixty to sell to somebody else; but this bill, if I understand it, provides that they may take it up as homesteads in one-hundred-and-sixty-acre parcels, does it not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir; they have taken it up in that way already.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then because these people have settled on a Government reservation where they had fair notice that they had no right to go at all, you are to give them twice the benefit that you do other people who settled where they had a right to go. If that is the state of the case, I do not precisely see the justice of it to the United States. When you turn to that part of the bill which is now to provide that there may be pre-emption sales at the minimum of a dollar and a quarter an acre, my question is whether the minimum ought not to be two dollars and a half an acre in view of the circumstance that a railway is already built in close proximity to this section of country and it is being settled up, and has been for a good while.

That is the point; not to do any injustice to these people who have gone there on their own account, and not through any misapprehension as to this being a military reservation and therefore not open to settlement or occupation in any form lawfully, but whether we ought to wrong the Treasury for the sake of doing an act of extraordinary generosity to these people by doubling their homsteads and selling them to them at the minimum.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no proposition to double the ordinary homestead of any of the settlers on these lands. The proposition is simply to give them the ordinary homesteads that other settlers have settling on Government land. The suggestion made by the honorable Senator that they went there knowing they had no right there is perhaps technically true; but they went there as other settlers usually go upon reservations that are openly and publicly abandoned by the military authorities, with the understanding that the same rule would apply to this reservation as has applied to other reservations in numerous instances in the frontier country. I think it would make serious trouble with the settlers there and make no gain to the Government, and I trust the bill will pass with the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to test the sense of the Senate, I move to amend the first amendment of the committee by making it double minimum price, which will be two dollars and a half an acre.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no reason to suppose my proposition will prevail, but as I think it ought to be so, I hope my friend will excuse me for making the motion.

Mr. PADDOCK. These settlers who went on this reservation some years ago are squatters, so termed in our country; but they have only done that which they have been in the habit of doing upon other unsurveyed lands. It has been a custom for many years for settlers to go upon the unsurveyed lands of the United States. These settlers who went on this reservation, at the time they did go might have gone on other equally valuable unsurveyed lands of the United States; and so it seems to me, taking that fact into view, it is rather an unjust discrimination against that class of settlers. That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs, to insert the words "double the" before the word "minimum;" so as to read: "at double the minimum price."

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not this minimum price apply not only to those who have squatted upon the land, but to outsiders who may go there and buy the land? Have the lands all been occupied by squatters?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They have all been occupied and improved for some time. It would make very great trouble and disturbance with the settlers. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not be pressed.

Mr. PADDOCK. In addition to what my colleague has said, I should like to state that there is a very small portion of this reservation that is comparatively valueless, and while that portion of it might sell for a dollar and a quarter an acre, I do not think the Government would be able to dispose of it at two dollars and a half an acre.

The question being put on the amendment to the amendment, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will withdraw the amendment. I hardly think he realizes how much trouble it would make and how little good it would do if it were possible to pass the bill with that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose the Senator let this matter go over until to-morrow, that I may look into it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well. I prefer that it should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum according to the record. Will the Chair count the Senate to ascertain the fact that there is a quorum here?

The Senate was counted, and a quorum announced to be present

AUSTIN-TOPOLOVAMPO PACIFIC ROUTE.

Mr. CAPERTON. On the 4th of April the Committee on Railroads reported with amendments the bill (S. No. 92) to survey the Austin-Topolovampo Pacific route. The bill was afterward called up for consideration, and on motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] was postponed indefinitely. I had not an opportunity at that time to say anything on the bill, and it seems not to have been understood. There was a motion afterward made by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] to reconsider the vote to indefinitely postpone, and I ask that that motion be taken up now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who made the motion to reconsider?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from New York is not in, and I do not think we ought to act on it now.

Mr. CAPERTON. The Senator from New York is not in; but I had an understanding with him yesterday that the bill should be called up, and I notified him that I would make the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely call attention to the fact.

Mr. CAPERTON. I am sorry he is not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was indefinitely postponed, and the question is on reconsidering that vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. CAPERTON. I desire to make an explanation. Some years since, in 1873, there was a survey of a route from Denver, I think, to the Rio Grande in Mexico.

In the exploration of the route proposed from Denver to the Rio Grande there was a survey made, or attempted to be made, for the purpose of discovering a route to the Gulf of California, where there is an interesting harbor called Topolovampo, or commonly called Smuggler's Retreat. This awakened a good deal of inquiry, and a young engineer of great intelligence and a sensible gentleman had his attention directed to the importance of this point as a point for the accommodation of an interoceanic route from the Chesapeake Bay to the Pacific. Further inquiry and investigations were made by him, resulting in a great deal of very valuable information. The consequence was that a bill was introduced in January, 1875, for the purpose of obtaining an appropriation to aid in a survey of a route from Austin in Texas to this point on the Gulf of California. That bill was brought before Congress in January, 1875, and resulted in its reference to the War Department for the purpose of having information in regard to the feasibility of the route. There was a board of surveyors appointed, and that board made its report to the Committee on Railroads, in which they came to the conclusion that the proposed road, if the route was practicable, would be a very important road and that its feasibility could only be ascertained by a survey. There was a great deal of very valuable and interesting information communicated by that investigation to the Railroad Committee of the Senate; and, without reference to the great question as to whether this would be a feasible and practicable route for an interoceanic railroad, I was particularly struck with its importance in opening up a very interesting trade between our States and Mexico.

The government of Mexico has had its attention called to this subject and has manifested a good deal of interest in the establishment of this line, because it will at once put the northwestern portion of Mexico in railroad communication with every part and portion of this country; not only with the West and Northwest, but with the East and all along the Gulf States. The question is whether or not Congress will feel itself justified in appropriating the small sum of $15,000 to ascertain by survey the practicability of this route, which, if once established and once opened, will be of vast commercial consequence to this country.

I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont especially to the history of this bill, because he seems not to have understood it the other day. The inquiry was made whether this was proposed at the instance of any railroad or corporation. There is no railroad or corporation behind it. It is the result of inquiries made by the intelligent young engineer to whom I have referred, and one for which we ought to feel thankful to him, because it seems to me that, if the route is entirely practicable, without imposing upon this Government any other cost than the cost proposed by this appropriation of $15,000, it may result in the construction of a railroad along this line.

From Austin, in Texas, to the point on the Rio Grande where it is proposed to go is three hundred and seventy-five miles; from the Rio Grande to Topolovampo, four hundred and twenty-five miles; making altogether eight hundred miles. Then all that will be necessary for us will be to provide, and no doubt our railroad companies would unite with those whose roads terminate or pass by Austin, in Texas, and at once provide for the completion of a road to the boundary-line of Mexico.

In addition, I will state the fact that from San Antonio to the Rio Grande is one hundred and twenty-five miles only, and from the Rio Grande at this point to Topolovampo is five hundred and seventy-five miles, making a distance of seven hundred miles, and I have no doubt from the investigation I have made that this line will be adopted, which would make it necessary only to construct one hundred and twenty-five miles from San Antonio to the Rio Grande within the limits of our own country.

The effect of granting this appropriation will be to awaken the attention of the people of Mexico, and especially of that portion of Mexico where there is a great deal of wealth as I understand, to the importance of having this communication opened to Texas. It would open up a vast trade between that portion of Texas and all the States, especially the Western and Northwestern States. From Mazatlan to Guaymas there is a district of country between the Gulf shore and the foot of the mountain range about equal in territorial extent to Cuba and furnishing everything that Cuba furnishes, which makes the trade between us and Cuba. I believe our trade with Cuba amounts to some hundreds of millions. We could, if we had communication opened with that portion of Mexico, get all that Cuba supplies, and upon much better terms, for they would take in exchange for such products as would be furnished from that portion of Mexico a vast amount of our products and fabrics which now find an outlet to no other point in that direction.

I think, sir, if any one will take the pains to investigate the papers and documents which have been filed with the Railroad Committee through the intervention of the author of this bill and through the commission of engineers, he would be perfectly satisfied that there is probably nothing that would more interest the country than this proposed route between these points.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask my friend one question, and that is where he gets his information that there is any such amount of sugar or tobacco raised on this territory that he is speaking of as there is on the island of Cuba? I have been unable to find any such information.

Mr. CAPERTON. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will investigate this question; and I am sure if he had investigated it he would have found this to be the fact. Of course they do not raise as much sugar there now as they do in Cuba; but the idea I intended to convey was that being a tropical country they have the opportunity by climate and by soil to raise sugar probably to as great an extent as in Cuba. They do make a great deal of sugar now, and they make a great deal of tobacco; they abound in every variety of tropical fruits.

This is a point interesting to us, that the Mexican tropics are the only tropics with which we can have railroad communication. To get to Cuba we have to cross the ocean. Here we shall have a continuous railroad line connecting with the railroads throughout all portions of this country, extending and ramifying through the East and West, that will connect with this tropical region which would furnish us an almost inappreciable amount of products.

I say, sir, that apart from the great question as to whether this can be adopted as an interoceanic line, it is exceedingly important in that point of view. It will have the effect of establishing commercial relations and social relations with the government of Mexico. That is a matter of great importance to us; and I submit to the Senators from California, who are so much interested in the Chinese question, that it is all-important that we should cultivate pleasant relations with Mexico, in order that she may co-operate with us in keeping back that tide of Chinese immigration which threatens not only to overrun California but other portions of the country.

In view of the fact that it will have the effect to establish commercial relations with Mexico—one of the most important countries on the face of the globe in every respect, so far as commerce is concerned—or as it will tend in that way, I think there should be no hesitation on the part of Congress in making this small appropriation. If it should result, as I said before, in ascertaining that this is the best interoceanic line of communication between the Chesapeake Bay and the Pacific, it will be a very important result. But apart from that, the important interests that we have in our commerce with Mexico ought to command the assent of Congress without hesitation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which this bill was postponed indefinitely. The Senator from Vermont has called for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I trust at least that the Senate will favor the restitution of this bill to a condition of business that will permit of its consideration. This now is a motion not to pass the bill, but to reconsider its indefinite postponement and give us at some future time an opportunity to consider it, as, with the few minutes left of the morning hour, we shall have no opportunity to do now.

In addition to what the Senator from West Virginia has said, I should like for a moment to ask the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill which has been charged with being the origination of the War Department and officers of the Army was not so originated, but it was presented here by a member of the Senate; and was, by the chairman of the Committee on Railroads in the last Congress, referred to the War Department under the request of that committee; and a board was convened in New York who presented the result of their examination of the subject in a recommendation that a survey should be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that report?

Mr. WEST. Here it is in full; I will hand it to the Senator. I repeat that the matter was referred by Congress to the War Department; that the Secretary of War convened a board, and the result of their investigations is submitted to us in an official document that we have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do you say Congress referred it to the War Department?

Mr. WEST. Referred by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would read a resolution of that kind.

Mr. WEST. By the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By a committee of the Senate. Is that what you call "Congress?"

Mr. WEST. The amount asked for in this bill is no great sum, and the Senate I should think would ask the question whether the expenditure of such an amount should stand in the way of exploring another highway to the Pacific. Millions of money have been spent in opening communication to the Pacific on higher latitudes, both in construction of the ways themselves and in the minor expenditures for exploration. The section of the Union lying to the south of those degrees of latitude is absolutely cut off from communication with the Pacific; and when a simple amount is asked for an exploration, certainly that much consideration might be accorded to that section.

To the objection which is sometimes made that such an exploration ought to be undertaken at the expense of private individuals who are interested in the opening of this route, it is a sufficient answer to say that this exploration is to be directed through our own and through the territory of a foreign neighbor. Any individual surveying party sent down there to Mexico would be met on the confines of that territory with the objection that they were intruders; but going there by co-operation between this Government and the government of Mexico, they will have that official and authoritative sanction which will enable them to pursue their labors. Hence this appropriation is asked for from the Government of the United States, and it is but a very small trifle in contrast with what has been done for other sections of the Union. This is a proposition to inquire, to examine, to see whether there is not some outlet through southern territory to the Pacific Ocean. You of the North have your northern communications; you have had your millions and your hundreds of millions spent to facilitate that communication and to benefit your property. We ask you to give us this little amount to see whether we cannot find our way to the ocean, and we are met here by an objection that it is too much money. Mr. President, it is not generous, it is not fair or equitable. If we are required to build our roads, open the highway to us, show us the route, at least go to that expense on behalf of that section of the Union. I have no expectation that we can pass this bill now; but I think, out of consideration for its claims, at least the motion to reconsider and place the bill on the Calendar, where it can receive the consideration of the Senate, should be accorded by the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I trust the Senate will place this bill upon the Calendar so that we can in the future consider the matter with some degree of care. If by this appropriation more intimate relations can be established with Mexico, if we can make it to the interest of Mexico to maintain close commercial relations with us, we shall thereby aid very greatly in settling the Rio Grande trouble, which is now disturbing the country, and has occupied so much of the time of the other House during the present session of Congress. If by this course we can secure another outlet to the Pacific Ocean, we thereby bring about a competition which is in the interest of promoting trade and transportation, and thus benefit every citizen throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The city of Austin is now connected by rail with the rest of the country. There is a railroad chartered to the Rio Grande; and if that road can connect with a road through Mexico to Topolovampo, we shall have possession of the trade of all that country. The result will be of advantage in two respects: First, in promoting commercial relations with that country, and in settling the Rio Grande troubles; and second, in bringing about competition between the present roads and a new road to the Pacific Ocean.

For these reasons I hope the motion to reconsider will be adopted so that the matter can be fully investigated.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I am not at all opposed to the route of road proposed here. I am not opposed to the construction of the road. I should certainly be glad to see it constructed; it might be of great national importance; but I am opposed to any further Government aid or subsidy to any railroad whatever, whether it be in the North or in the South.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator that this bill has nothing on earth to do with the question of subsidy.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I understand that, and I am coming to that point presently.

Our experience in the past in reference to encouragement by the Government to railroad enterprises has not been such as to recommend that policy for the future. There was, it is true, before the construction of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads, a great national necessity for the immediate construction of one railroad to the Pacific, and that sooner than private enterprise could accomplish the object. But I look upon all the legislation since that time as wasteful and extravagant in the extreme, and it ought to be checked from this time forward. It is said this is not a subsidy. It is true it is not a subsidy; that is not the form of it; but it is making an appropriation which in the end is to result in favor of some railroad company to be hereafter established. The principle of it is precisely that of a railroad subsidy, and it is nothing else. Now whenever private capital, whenever the interests of capitalists will warrant the construction of such a road, it will be built, and whenever they undertake to build such a road they can easily obtain the necessary survey and establish the necessary route, which should be done at their own expense, as well as the construction of the road itself. I see no difference in principle.

It is said here, however, by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] that a private company may not be able to obtain leave from the government of Mexico. I should think that the diplomacy of the United States might succeed in obtaining that leave for a company as well as for the Government, and in my opinion it would be a much easier thing to obtain. I see nothing, therefore, in that objection.

I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate. I have merely stated briefly my objections to the adoption of this motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

STATUE FROM VERMONT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not desire to speak on this question, but I rise to give notice to the Senate that to-morrow morning immediately after the close of the morning business I shall ask the Senate in behalf of my colleague and myself to take up the resolution from the House of Representatives, which has been for some time lying upon the desk of the President, in relation to a statue to be given by the State of Vermont to Statuary Hall; and we shall want to occupy perhaps twenty-five or thirty minutes in relation to the matter.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOWE was, on his own motion, excused from serving upon the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN to fill the vacancy occasioned by excusing Mr. HOWE and also Mr. WITHERS in the place of Mr. BOGY, excused yesterday from service upon the committee of conference.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2684) to amend sections 246 and 251 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872, as amended by the twelfth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 882) for the relief of Mrs. James K. Polk, of Nashville, Tennessee.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 1800) for the relief of Kendrick & Avis; Kuner, Ziseman & Zott; Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri; and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio;

A bill (H. R. No. 2135) relating to the execution of custom-house bonds;

A bill (H. R. No. 2140) establishing Cheboygan, in the State of Michigan, a port of delivery;

A bill (H. R. No. 2434) to correct an error in section 5271 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 773) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry, United States Army.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; it agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OTHO R. SINGLETON of Mississippi, Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HENRY WALDRON of Michigan managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 26) to remove the political disabilities of Francis T. Nicholls, of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 2288) granting a pension to Fannie S. White;

A bill (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of A. F. McMillen, late captain First United States Heavy Artillery; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3179) granting a pension to Thomas F. Wildes, late lieutenant-colonel One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEST. Agreeably to notice given yesterday in the Senate, I desire now to call up the post-office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3263.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3263) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. WEST. I suggest that we act on the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations as they are reached in order in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WEST. I desire to preface the consideration of the bill with a few general remarks in regard to it.

The salient features in all appropriation bills at the present time are perhaps the contrasts in which they are submitted to the consideration of the Senate with the action that has been had upon them in the House of Representatives, the two bodies being somewhat at variance with respect to the proper economies of the Government at this time.

I will state that when this bill came over from the other end of the Capitol it proposed an appropriation of $33,589,109. It is now submitted to the Senate, with the approbation of the Committee on Appropriations, with a recommendation that the sum of $36,946,350 be appropriated, being equivalent to an addition recommended to the Senate over and above the amount appropriated by the House of $3,357,241. The considerations that have governed the committee in making their recommendation have been somewhat various. In the bill as it came from the House there were propositions of a general legislative character, looking to an anticipated and possible reduction of the expenditures that upon the information of the Senate committee are not practicable. That is to say, the Senate committee recommends non-concurrence in the legislative features of the bill. Those legislative features embrace three points: First, the re-arrangement and re-adjustment of the salaries of all postmasters throughout the country. On that point the matter more properly belongs to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, who have the subject under consideration; and from the information laid before the Committee on Appropriations they were of opinion that the just and economical method as at present applied was more for the interest of the Government and of the people than the recommendation made by the House in its bill.

The next recommendation of a legislative character proposed by the House in the bill looks to a change in the compensation made to the different railroad companies throughout the country. Some of the Senators will bear in mind that this has been a vexed question for years, and after extended controversy between the Government and the railroad companies an adjustment and agreement were arrived at somewhat upon compulsion as against the companies, but admitted and sanctioned by them some two years ago. Now, in the direction of economy, in the judgment of the other branch of the legislative department, it is proposed to open the question again. That subject is also under consideration by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and so far as the Committee on Appropriations could inform themselves, they are of opinion that a curtailment in that direction would not be advisable and would not meet the sanction of the people. One of its first effects would be to entirely take away the system of railway post-office service. Under the limitations of the bill as it came from the House an absolute discontinuance of the railway post-office service throughout the country, and entirely throughout the country, would necessarily follow. Besides, if their propositions should be acceded to, there would be necessarily a further reduction of what is known as the fast-mail service throughout the country, with the withdrawal of the through lines from Boston to New York, from Springfield to Albany, from Albany to Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago, and Saint Louis; from New York to Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

One other matter of the proposed legislation refers to the details of the management of the Post-Office simply with respect to what are known as depredations. It is not a material matter, nor did it tend in the direction of any great economy; consequently the proposition has not met the approval of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, with respect to the amount appropriated, let me tell the Senate that we have met the House of Representatives part of the way at least in the direction of economy. We have not gone to the full extent that they desire; but we appropriate less money this year for the service of the Post-Office Department than we appropriated last year. The continual growth of this service is well-known to every Senator here. The demands from his region and section are constant; and not long ago we passed a bill establishing post-routes that, without the action that the Senate committee now recommends, it will be impossible to carry into effect.

The annual increase of the Post-Office service is estimated at something like 8 per cent. We have not admitted the possibility of such an increase, but we have conceded something to the recommendations of the heads of the various Departments, and granted them, as far as we felt justified in doing so, such appropriations as would meet the necessities of the service; and I take very great pleasure in saying that there is no dissent on the part of any member of the general or subcommittee on appropriations to whom this bill was confided. They come here united, and recommend that the entire reductions that are suggested by the House of Representatives shall not be conceded, but that we shall do something in the direction of economy, and try to contribute toward making this branch of the public service self-sustaining.

I have felt it due to say this much in reference to the general features of the bill, because I know that the first inquiry with reference to all appropriation bills in this Congress is, how far do the two Houses differ in their efforts at economy? I trust that the bill will now be proceeded with; and I shall be glad to offer any explanation that may be required in the consideration of its specific provisions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 11, to increase the appropriation "for mail depredations and special agents" from $110,000 to $150,000.

Mr. KERNAN. While I do not wish to occupy time or be at all captious about these appropriation bills, and while I regret that I am not as familiar with this post-office bill as I should like to be, I submit to those in charge of this bill whether we cannot make some reduction in some items. Every one is generally familiar with the fact that during the years of high prices and of flush times as to money the expenditures for agents and country postmasters grew up to large proportions. Here I assume that the committee have reported the former sum, $150,000. Am I right? Is that what the appropriation for this item was last year?

Mr. WEST. No; it was $160,000 last year.

Mr. KERNAN. I think in this item "for special agents" there can be great economy without detriment to the public service. If the amount of $160,000 was allowed last year we can reduce it more than $10,000 this year.

Mr. WEST. The Senator will find that there is a proviso which makes the reduction $17,500.

Mr. KERNAN. My suggestion is that, if we turn our attention to going over these items, and where there is one like this that is quite elastic, where there is a discretion as to spending much or little, we can reduce the figures as much as the House did this item. I believe that if we, as to special agents, appropriate $110,000, assuming that it was $160,000 last year, we shall find that the head of the Department, who I doubt not is quite willing to economize as much as he can, can reduce the expenses for special agents down to the $110,000.

I say this with a little diffidence, because it has not been in my line to examine this matter; but I know generally that in the section of country where I live there is a great struggle to be a special agent, and the agents magnify their calling to some extent. I do think we should commence to try the experiment of reducing the amount to be paid to these men who are employed more or less, as the Department requires them, and I think you will find that the mail service will be as honestly performed, frauds as efficiently detected, with the $110,000 as with this sum of $150,000 to which this item has grown up in the past. I do not understand we are cutting off anything here that the law fixes at so much, but I feel sure that if we appropriate $110,000 we shall be able, especially in these lower-priced times, to get along very well. I think to a reduction of that kind by the House we should be willing to conform, unless there are very strong reasons given to the contrary. I think as to many of these items we should endeavor to reduce them down. Certainly the business was done much more cheaply years ago. True, it was not then so large, you may say; but there was a great deal more of peculation and a great deal more necessity for special agents in the old days when the mail was carried by stages, where there were great frauds perpetrated which are not possible now when there is so much railway service. I hope we shall refuse to agree to this amendment, and concur with the House in appropriating $110,000 rather than $150,000.

I see there is here for special attorneys an appropriation of seven or eight thousand dollars. The Government has United States attorneys whose fees exceed the salary allowed by law in almost every district; and they will be able to furnish the legal service necessary to special agents without employing special counsel. Although the sum is not much, I think it might be cut off entirely.

Mr. INGALLS. I agree with the Senator from New York in what he has said respecting the necessity for reductions in all governmental expenditures, and I shall very heartily concur with him and all other members of the Senate in this direction so far as is consistent with the proper administration of public affairs. With regard to appropriations not required by law, it is undoubtedly true that reductions can and should be made wherever practicable. I am inclined to think from a cursory inspection of this bill that the Committee on Appropriations have in many cases injudiciously increased the sums named by the House of Representatives; but, with regard to the particular item under consideration, I am convinced that the amendment reported by the Senate committee should be adopted.

The number of special agents, I am informed by the Senator from Louisiana, is about sixty. They are the detective and the police force of the Department. They have in charge the whole subject-matter of depredations upon the mails, whether in the transportation of them or in the money-order department, and it is absolutely essential for the efficiency and for the safety of the transmission of letters and money through the mails that this force should be efficient and that it should be supplied with all the necessary means to carry on its operations at the discretion of the Postmaster-General. I think, therefore, that the sum of $110,000 is too little for this purpose; that the experience of previous Postmasters-General, the experience that has been heretofore communicated to the Senate, is such as to render it almost absolutely certain that this appropriation is one that should not be curtailed, because it concerns the efficiency and the safety of the whole mail service.

Mr. WEST. If I vex the ear of the Senate with undue frequency, it is because of the confidence that seems to be reposed in me by my associates on the committee. I should be very glad to find some of them here giving me support and taking from me the irksomeness of being on my feet constantly to explain.

I will say, in response to what the Senator from New York has said about the great desire of individuals to become these special agents, that no doubt that was the case during the early inauguration of this system; but it is scarcely so now. They are selected with great care from a very superior class of men, and they are by no means cheap men. We have to have the very best men with respect to efficiency and character in this service; and it is the insurance to the people of the United States that their property, when passing through the mails of the United States, shall not be spoliated. This is done in their interest, to protect them, because, as the Senator very well knows, there is no recourse for any citizen of the United States upon the Post-Office Department for any depredation upon his property passing through the mails.

There have been during the last year ninety-one convictions—not arrests, but ninety-one convictions—brought about through the instrumentality of this branch of the service. There are now some four hundred and odd persons under arrest, detected by them, awaiting their trial. In whatever direction the Senate may feel willing to go toward economy, this of all others seems to me the least justifiable. We have given the Post-Office Department this year in that connection $17,500 less than we did last year, not taking into account the increase of the service; and I am happy to state that we have arrived at that proposition, that we have called a halt in the expenditures of the Post-Office Department, and everybody can very well tell how soon the revenues of the service will overtake its expenditures at that rate. We appropriate less money than we did last year in the aggregate. In but one instance do we give more than we gave last year. Therefore we offer this bill, and the Senate should consider that we have demanded that the officials of the Post-Office Department shall spend no more money than they did last year, and the Senate can very readily realize how soon the revenues will overtake them. In this particular branch it is worse than in almost any other to make the economy proposed further than the extent the committee have already done.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether these special agents receive fixed salaries for the year?

Mr. WEST. Their compensation is $1,600 a year and from three to five dollars a day, according to the nature of their expenses.

Mr. KERNAN. That is, they get a salary and expenses besides?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not desire to press this matter unreasonably; but I cannot conceive why we should have sixty detectives. We have all the postmasters charged with looking after the safety of the mails; we have the district attorneys of the various districts, who are bound to prosecute offenses against the postal laws whenever their attention is called to them; and we have all the marshals. When I once, as a young man, had a little familiarity with ferreting out troublesome things, at a time when the mail was opened every four or five miles in every State, you did not have any corps of detectives. When it was ascertained that the ordinary officers did not find the money that was missed, and that the vigilance of district attorneys and marshals and postmasters was not sufficient, now and then a man was specially detailed as a detective to work up the case and detect where the dishonesty was. I still think we do not need sixty. I still think if we had fewer men—for they are to be detailed whenever there is occasion for it—they would be sufficient; and I should like very much, unless the gentleman thinks it would be detrimental to the service, to try the experiment of $110,000 for the salaries of the necessary special agents, because we pay their expenses, and he will find they will detect all crime, and we shall save $50,000.

Mr. INGALLS. I find, on inspection, that the number of special agents is forty-three, instead of sixty, as the Senator from Louisiana stated.

Mr. WEST. Then they have reduced them.

Mr. KERNAN. Then why so large an appropriation?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator will observe that the amount appropriated, distributed among the forty-three special agents, would only amount to about $3,000 each annually, including their compensation and expenses.

Mr. KERNAN. I still think the Postmaster-General will detect all crime with the $110,000. That is my opinion.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I sympathize most fully with what the Senator from New York has expressed. I too, with him, would be extremely glad to see the expenditures of the Post-Office Department reduced at every practicable point; and with the information which I have I would join with him in doing that where my judgment tells me the best interests of the service will allow it. Further than that I cannot go. Further than that the Senator from New York will not go.

Now, a word or two in relation to these special agents. There are about forty of them. The compensation, including expenses, is about $3,000 per annum. It is a corps of men which has been very carefully selected, and they have certainly rendered very valuable service to the Department in the detections which they have made, in the arrests and convictions which have been had under their supervision; and in many of the cases it is the work of weeks, if not months, to follow up the simple intimation, the simple circumstance upon which they fasten. That requires skill and vigilance and endurance—a service by night and a service by day; and in that service there have been four hundred and ten arrests during the past year; ninety-one convictions have been had, and there are still pending one hundred and forty indictments. Owing perhaps to the condition of the country, resulting from the war—for I think all wars are demoralizing—we have unfortunately found more of that class in our community than there was at another and an earlier time. When you look at the service which they have performed, its breadth, and the precise duties which they discharge, I can only express my own judgment that I believe the best interests of the service are promoted by not reducing this number. It may be done; but my own judgment is that the best interests of the service do not require it.

Your postal service is one which, to be carefully and properly administered, must be taken as a whole. There are a great many subjects connected with it; but when we come to act practically upon any of the details of the service, it is wise and well to examine carefully, and we do not do our duty if we do not examine very carefully, what is the effect of our action upon one branch as connected with another. In that view, taking into consideration the honest administration of the Department, and knowing as I do of a good many of the cases which have been made public and where punishment has been finally inflicted, and knowing the service that has been performed, and from my position being compelled to know something of the character of quite a number of those who are engaged in it, I think I am justified in saying that they are skilled men; they are men of integrity; and the best interests of the service will justify, nay, require, that they shall be retained. That is my judgment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I know nothing special, except from information derived from the Department, of the necessity for the services of these special agents. I have no question, however, that they do render very valuable service to the Department; but I find in the second section of this bill a provision contemplating the contingency of a deficit in the revenues of the Department of over $7,000,000, for which an appropriation is made out of the public Treasury of the country. That suggests to my mind that we ought to be exceedingly careful in reference to the provisions of this bill and to restrict and limit the expenses of the Department to the very lowest possible point. I will not undertake to say that the appropriation provided by the committee is too large; that is, too large for the service which might be properly performed by these special agents; but seeing that we are to have a deficiency, had we not better even dispense with the services of some of these special agents and with the services of other employés of the Government, rather than to tax the public Treasury of the country with the amount which is provided in this bill, over $7,000,000? Therefore, I think I shall vote for the bill as it came from the House, and in doing so I do not wish to be understood as expressing the opinion that the amendment is wholly unnecessary or that the public service would not be benefited by the amount appropriated by the committee of the Senate; but I think we must curtail somewhere. The expenses of the Postal Department are too heavy, are beyond the income of the Department, and we ought to bring it down to a self-sustaining system if we possibly can. Rather than vote for an appropriation of public money to such a large amount as $7,000,000 to carry on the Department, I would rather dispense with the services of some of these special agents.

Mr. WEST. I was aware that when a discussion on this bill would commence, it would embrace the whole question of economy in the postal service, and therefore I have not up to the present time, and shall not just yet, ask for the application of the five-minute rule, in order that in the consideration of this preliminary amendment the whole subject of economy in the post-office service may be discussed, and I feel it necessary in that connection to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Delaware.

He speaks as if this was the first time such a thing as an appropriation for a deficiency in the post-office service had been heard of.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator greatly misunderstood my remarks.

Mr. WEST. At least he says that now is the occasion to make the post-office service self-sustaining. If the Senator is willing to go before the country with a proposition to-morrow to abruptly bring the postal service of the country to that condition, I am quite sure that some of us will not hesitate to go there. But we cannot do that in justice to the public requirements. We can only examine how far our efforts are directed, and how far they are accomplishing that much desired equilibrium between expenditures and receipts in the Post-Office Department; and although there is an apparent growth from year to year of this deficiency, yet the percentage is almost uniformly, and has been for ten years, in the direction of economy. Gradually, although yielding to the expansive necessities of the country, although contributing generally to all the requirements coming up from remote and new-settled portions of the country, we are coming, and the pursuance of the present policy will undoubtedly bring us, to such an equilibrium as will require no disbursement of the public money. But suppose we do, I ask the Senator where and in what direction can you more justifiably, beneficially, or advisedly spend the money of the public than in this very service?

I would ask the attention of the Senate to the figures I am about to present. In the year 1868 the percentage of the deficiency of the post-office service was 28 per cent.; in 1869, 22 per cent.; in 1870, 17 per cent.; in 1871, 17 per cent.; in 1872, 17 per cent.; in 1873, 20 per cent.; the rise being due to the increased compensation of postmasters and the re-adjustment of mail transportation. Then we come down again in 1874 to 17 per cent. Then the effects of the panic are evidenced in the receipts of 1875, and the percentage is 20 per cent. Now again it is about 18 per cent. So it will be seen that the whole tendency has been in the direction of economy, and from the fullest and most careful consideration of the subject, without the least inclination in the world to yield to the requirements of the Department unless they were well and thoroughly substantiated, the Committee on Appropriations has made this report, and those Senators who differ with the majority on political questions should bear in mind that their representatives were present in the committee, and after a careful digest of all the features in the bill they have seen the necessity and given their consent to these recommendations.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state in connection with the last remark made by the Senator who reported the bill that, so far as I am apprised, this bill does come before the Senate with the approval of the whole committee. It is true that the postal service can be administered at less expense than is provided for in this bill as proposed to be amended, because it is manifest at once that you might cut down the appropriations by one-half and the postal service would still be administered by the Postmaster-General, but it would be at the expense of the people; the mail facilities with which they are now furnished would be cut down precisely in the same proportion.

I am not one of those who believe that the post-office ought to be a self-sustaining institution. I believe that it was organized for the accommodation of the people, and although that accommodation can only be secured by appropriations out of the Treasury to supply any deficit that may be found to exist in the receipts of the Department, I believe that such appropriations ought to be made.

With regard to the particular amendment now under consideration, I would state that the bill as reported is a reduction upon the amount expended last year in the same direction, and although the reduction is not as great as was contemplated by the House bill, it still in my opinion is judicious. We may cut down this appropriation for special agents to detect frauds and thefts and robberies of the mail to $50,000, and the service will be rendered, but of course to much less extent than it will be if you increase the appropriation, because as you decrease the appropriation you decrease the number of special agents whose duty it is to ferret out and detect these frauds and these thefts, and the service suffers precisely in the same ratio. Whether these detectives are always selected of the very best men possible; whether they may not themselves occasionally be found corrupt, is a matter which I do not pretend to decide. I presume such instances can be found, but they are absolutely inseparable from the administration of any public service. Let it be known that the appropriation for this particular service, for the detection of frauds, thefts, &c., upon the mail is cut down one-half, and the number of persons employed in the detection of these crimes diminished by one-half, and I think it a logical deduction to assume that those whose minds are already turned to making money corruptly by these practices will see that their chances are thereby increased for robbing with impunity the United States mail and committing these thefts and depredations, and that the number will be increased thereby because the legislation will absolutely encourage it.

I do not myself conscientiously believe that the amount appropriated for this service is larger than the necessities of the service demand, and consequently I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say in reply to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] that I made no allusion to political considerations in my remarks; neither did I make my remarks because of any political considerations. My connection with the Post Office Committee has given me some information with reference to the wants and necessities of that Department, and I have felt it my duty to aid the Department with all the suggestions which I can make, and to aid it by my vote in this body to properly administer the affairs of that Department without any reference to political considerations. The Senator from Louisiana does great injustice to those whom he supposes to be influenced in their course by political considerations. I took especial occasion to state that I was not prepared to say that the appropriation proposed by the committee of the Senate was in excess of the wants of the service; but I based my opposition to the increase upon the consideration that the expenses of the Post-Office Department were increasing, and taking from the public Treasury, which is supplied by taxation upon the people of the country, a large amount of money. I stated that we had better curtail something even of the necessary service in the Post-Office Department rather than to be increasing the expenditures of that Department and taking the surplus over the proceeds of the Department out of the Treasury of the country.

The people of this country are taxed enough already, and we ought to curtail wherever we can legitimately and properly do so. I have not accused the Committee on Appropriations with being extravagant. On the contrary, I am sure that the committee acted according to their best judgment of what was necessary for the postal service. I say to the Senator who has this bill in charge, and also to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] that in looking at the wants of the Postal Department they have lost sight of the necessities of the people of the country in another direction; that is, the necessity for relief from the taxations which are imposed upon them.

I repeat again that I do not say, because I am not prepared to say, that this appropriation is in excess of what could be properly and judiciously expended by the Department; but my objection to it is that it is one of the items which help to entail upon the Treasury of the country between seven and eight million dollars, to be provided for by taxation imposed upon the people of the country. I am, therefore, in favor of restricting it. I think we should not give to the Post-Office Department all that it wants or all that it needs, but give it that which will be efficient and the lowest minimum amount.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, if it is desirable to diminish the cost of the Post-Office so as to make it self-supporting or to approximate to that condition, it is perfectly plain that this is not to be done by diminishing its general efficiency, its security, and its reliability. It can only be done by cutting off the small post-offices, which are exceedingly convenient to small neighborhoods, to remote settlements, connecting them with the heart of the country, and by increasing the rates of postage. Either of these, however undesirable, would be a legitimate means of bringing the expenses and the revenues of the Post-Office near together; but to cut off the means of detecting frauds in the mails, to cut off the means which I know are not now as large as they ought to be and are not adequate to the necessities of the service, to cut off the means of preventing a plundering of the mails, it seems to me, is the most miserable economy that ever was thought of. If we must diminish the expenses of the Post-Office, there are but two ways to do it, either to cut down its farthest ramifications or to increase the rates of postage.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, some two weeks ago or more Congress passed a post-route bill establishing new post-routes. I sent to the document-room for a copy of the bill, and am furnished with one which I find was submitted to the Senate June 8, 1876. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads [Mr. HAMLIN] in his seat, or I should like to ask him if this is an addition to one in my mind which has passed Congress, a bill of about the bulk of this, which has become a law.

Mr. ALLISON. This is an additional bill.

Mr. SARGENT. This, then, is an additional bill. A bill about the same size as this has passed, and this is additional to that. This will answer as a text for the few remarks which I wish to make.

I find in looking over this bill, which resembles so much in bulk the one which went before it, that here are proposed new post-routes to be established in every State and Territory of the Union. For instance, in Georgia is a long list of new post-routes, the first one being from Villa Rica, via Draketown, to Cedartown; and the last one being from Cave Spring to Livingston, via Thomasville; in all twenty-two. I suppose that these items were placed in the bill by the members from Georgia in the House or the Senators from that State, they being familiar with the wants of their country and knowing that by development of population and business it is necessary that this provision shall be made in order to give them the advantage which they ought to have in the post-route service. I find in the State of Iowa, which my friend near me [Mr. ALLISON] so ably represents, that there are twenty post-routes. Kansas comes in with some twenty-five new post-routes, and Kentucky comes in with twenty-four, and so on running through the whole list. Virginia desires twenty-seven additional post-routes. Double this number, and we have the amount of post-routes required for these various States, and all of them during this session of Congress, for the next fiscal year.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say to him that there is a necessity, the public demands it as its right, for another post-route bill probably. There has been one passed about the same size as that in the Senator's hand, to which his remarks will apply precisely as well as to the one he has in his hand.

Mr. SARGENT. Exactly; and this is a second bill establishing post-routes.

Mr. HAMLIN. A second bill at this session.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt those who represented their various States in making these suggestions for new routes did so on account of a necessity existing there. I know it was so in reference to my own State, although the number of post-routes there is somewhat less than in the States I have named. Notwithstanding, they were of necessity to my people. Senators perhaps will be somewhat surprised if we pass this post-route bill, as we have already passed one, to find that the Postmaster-General says, "I am not able to put on any of this service." The bill before the Senate, stripped of the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, cuts down the amount of money at the disposal of the Postmaster-General so much that he would not be able to put on any of what is called the "star service;" that is, inland transportation aside from railroads. It is a very serious question whether he would be able, in case of default on routes now existing, the failure of contractors, or accidents which break up a service, to re-advertise a letting unless he could bring it within the amount which is now being paid. In other words, we require him to make bricks without straw. We pass laws establishing post-routes as our right under the Constitution. The House of Representatives has required that no existing service shall be discontinued. I should like to know how it is possible for the Postmaster-General to oblige Congress in both particulars. You cannot have the post-routes unless you appropriate money for them.

What is true in regard to this service is true of the rest; it illustrates the whole principle. A person sends a valuable registered letter by the mail and it is lost, or there is some depredation committed upon the mail by which he is a considerable sufferer. The person so suffering does not like to be told by the local postmaster, or by the Postmaster-General, if he applies to him, that Congress has not appropriated money enough to hunt up his property which was placed in charge of the United States. The United States is not responsible for it absolutely, but in good faith it has been accustomed to endeavor to recover the man's property for him. He would not like to be told that Congress was so mean that it cut down the appropriation for mail depredations and special agents so low that it is impossible for the Department to answer this natural obligation; and yet it cannot be done unless the amendment of the Senate committee is adopted. That is, the Postmaster-General so assures us; his most accomplished officers say so, and the committee are thoroughly satisfied of it, and so is the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

I agree with my friend from Virginia fully in the idea that the postal service should be maintained amply, even if we do pay out of the Treasury for its support. By and by, a hundred years from now, it may be that we can have a magnificent postal service which will pay all its expenses. There are only five States of the Union now which pay their expenses to the postal service. There are enough letters deposited in the post-offices within those States, reckoning postage upon them, to pay the expenses of the postal service within them. Unquestionably, as time progresses and our population becomes more numerous and our business more important and extensive, more States will be in this category; and by and by, it may be, by another centennial, the postal service carried on properly may be self-sustaining; but it is not so now. Yet this is the nerve running to every community throughout the land, through which the benefits of the Government are more distinctly felt by the people than any other whatever. It is more pervading even than our courts, because very few men resort to the courts. If it were the rule that property rights were invaded or personal liberty infringed, then everybody, perhaps, would apply to the courts; but fortunately under our form of society there are very few who need this protection. The United States courts are generally not called into requisition and a very small class of the community are compelled to resort to them, although all have the privilege.

Run all through. Take the Patent Office. This is for the benefit of inventors, a small class, although a useful one; but when you come to the Post-Office Department it affects every man, woman, and child in the whole country old enough to have intelligence to read or write. It is the principal benefit, I may say, which the Government confers upon the people; and certainly we ought not to begrudge a small portion of the taxes which are paid into the Treasury to keep up the service in such a manner that it shall foster our growing settlements; that it shall give facilities to our great volume of business; that it shall oblige the people in every part of the land. Suppose that we apply a Procrustean principle to this service; suppose we say in effect, and we might as well say it in words, that there shall be during the next fiscal year no additional postal service; that all further feeders on the railroad routes shall be forbidden to the country; that although growing so vastly and although the interests of this service are growing so greatly, we shall have no additional mail-routes; would it not be a cause of great discontent necessarily, and great inconvenience?

I appeal to any of my friends, especially those from the outlying States, those who are distant from the great commercial centers, whether it is not necessary to maintain this service in proportion to the growing wants of the community; whether the immediate interests of our constituents do not require it. How can you do without additional routes? One-third, perhaps, of the fourteen additional routes proposed in Kentucky, for instance, may be reduced, but the remainder may be absolutely essential. I have seen the growth of these communities. I have seen California grow from a few thousand people to hundreds of thousands. I know what our shifting population is; shifting from elsewhere and gathering there in communities where these facilities are as absolutely necessary to their convenience and their business as they are to any street in New York City. We do not ask that we shall have a carrier service that shall bring the mail two or three times a day. There is only one city in my State where this privilege is granted. That is the city of San Francisco, where it pays its expenses. But we do ask for such cities as Sacramento, Yreka, and Petaluma, places of moderate population but business interesting to them, that they shall have means of intercommunication.

Furthermore, our business is largely with the Eastern States. We buy many of our goods from the East. We sell our grain and other articles to the East, and they are handled, furthermore, by factors who reside in New York and other eastern cities. If we are able to send our letters to them, they are able to send theirs to us; and so there is a common benefit to the postal service. I hold that we can do the people no better favor, we can no more clearly answer their wants, than by a decent liberality in providing for postal facilities, and it seems to me that we shall lay ourselves liable to extreme censure, and that we shall deserve it, provided our action upon an appropriation bill will even stunt the postal service to its present dimensions when the country is growing so rapidly.

Mr. MAXEY. As a member of the Post-Office Committee, Mr. President, I happen to have a pretty fair knowledge of the largely increased number of mail-routes which have been projected in the Senate and in the House during the present session. I represent in part a State which is largely increasing in population, and therefore necessarily demanding largely increased mail facilities. I have presented a large number of applications for additional routes in the State of Texas. In regard to every one of those which I have presented, I either personally know the necessity of the additional route, or I had such information from gentlemen of the country known to me as residents of the State as led to the assurance that the route was needed. I also know, because I have been in constant intercourse with the members of the Texas delegation in the other House, that the routes presented there by the members of the House from Texas were necessary.

It occurs to me that there ought to be some reason in all things. I do not know that I ought to refer to the bill as it was presented to us by the House, but I will state that a largely increased mail service is demanded. The Postmaster-General is required to carry out every one of the contracts, including the star contracts, and yet the means of complying with these contracts are cut off from him. I cannot, as a business transaction, understand the bill as it came from the House. I know that in all the frontier States, as was well said by the Senator from California, we have a feeling knowledge of the absolute necessity of increased mail facilities because our States are constantly increasing in wealth, population, and prosperity, and therefore constantly demanding increased mail facilities.

As a Senator from a State which necessarily demands additional mail facilities, I ask that they be given. I do not know the number required in Texas. The Senator from California has the bill in his hands. I do know it is very large, and I do know that so far as those routes presented by me are concerned they are needed. They were known to me to have been needed from my own personal knowledge or from information which justified me in declaring so to the committee. I have every confidence that the Representatives from my State in the House, all of whom I personally know, have presented no application whatever except for routes that are needed owing to the necessities of the increased population of our State and the increase of commerce in the State.

Mr. SARGENT. The number is forty-two in Texas.

Mr. MAXEY. As was said by the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the number of new routes will be probably doubled before we get through with that bill here, for almost daily additional applications are made and referred to the Post-Office Committee. I will state further that in every instance, so far as my knowledge of the operations of that committee are concerned, we have never failed, when a Senator has stated of his own personal knowledge or from information which justified him in so doing that a route was needed, to authorize that route to be incorporated in the bill. I think that right, because it is one of the objects of local representation to have men here who can say for themselves whether a thing is right or wrong, and not only say it but insist upon it.

I insist upon all the routes I have asked for, and I do not call upon Congress to do a nonsensical thing. I do not ask Congress to establish post-offices and post-routes in order to be told when I go to the Postmaster-General, "I cannot carry out that act of Congress, because you have not given me the money to enable me to carry it out." We have a maxim of the law that the law never does a vain or useless or foolish thing. I think an act of Congress which would establish post-offices and post-routes, and not furnish the means of executing that law, would be a very vain and a very foolish thing.

To the extent, therefore, of whatever is necessary to make the Post-Office effective everywhere, to the extent of carrying out wholly and completely the postal facilities for the convenience of all the people of all the States, I shall favor this bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I shall do so because I know that there is no part of this Government in which the people are more directly or more immediately interested than they are in a complete and perfect system of mail facilities.

There are some things reported in the bill that I do not understand. I only say in regard to that which has fallen within my personal knowledge, that, so far as the increased routes are concerned, which are necessary, there should be an increased appropriation of money to pay for the establishment of those routes. Every one of us who lives in the new States knows and feels the absolute necessity of establishing new routes. The man representing a new State who would not be in favor of establishing post-routes and post-offices wherever they are needed in that country is not the right representative of his State. I can readily understand how in the old States, where everything is working as smoothly as the machinery of a clock or a watch, they do not feel this need as we do who live in the outlying States. They have had all their facilities years and years ago. The predecessors of those who now represent them came into Congress and had their routes established, and they have been continued up to the present time; but we now, in this new West and in this new Southwest, which is building up so rapidly and making such a magnificent addition to the wealth, population, and prosperity of the American Union, come into this Congress and say we are entitled by right to the same privileges which have been extended to the old States, and I for one shall favor granting them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I presume, now that debate upon the economies of this bill has been pretty well indulged in, I may, in order to expedite matters, ask for the application of what is known as the five-minute rule in the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I may desire, on the amendment in regard to the salaries of postmasters, perhaps, to exceed that time, but I shall be very brief.

Mr. WEST. In a case of that kind the rule may be waived.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the rule being adopted, because I think the Senate will allow me to call attention to some figures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the five-minute rule be applied to the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And not exceeding $7,500 of this amount may be expended for fees to United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of courts, and counsel necessarily employed by special agents of the Post-Office Department, subject to approval by the Attorney-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 18, to increase the appropriation "for preparation and publication of post-route maps" from $20,000 to $30,000.

Mr. INGALLS. Without fuller information, I should be inclined to oppose this amendment. It seems to me this is a matter in which the discretion of the Department is largely exercised, and I can see no reason why the sum fixed by the House bill is not employed for the purpose specified.

Mr. WEST. It is true, as the Senator says, that in the expenditure of this amount of money for these special purposes the control is largely at the discretion of the Department; but that control is influenced and affected by the demands of Senators and Representatives for their own localities. These maps are made mostly in response to these demands, and the Department, judging by its experience in the past, knows that these demands will be continued. There will be the same necessity as heretofore, and the committee do not consider it judicious to assent to the curtailment that is made by the House. The amount appropriated last year was $30,000. We propose to give the same amount now. If you cut it down to $20,000, although you can conduct that branch of the service as you may conduct all others with a reduced amount, it must be followed by a reduced accommodation to the parties who require it.

Mr. INGALLS. This is certainly not an essential feature of the Post-Office Department. The Senator from Louisiana himself says it is merely for the accommodation of Senators and Representatives. For my part, I am entirely willing to forego any share I may have in the benefits of this appropriation. The sum of $20,000 will certainly, if these maps are lithographed, provide for an enormous number of copies for distribution. I trust, in the interest of economy and retrenchment, as this is purely a matter of accommodation, and not of necessity, that the amendment will not be assented to.

Mr. WEST. I beg pardon. The extent of it is a mere matter of accommodation, but it is a matter of necessity for the transaction of the business of the Post-Office Department itself.

Mr. INGALLS. Are not these maps lithographed?

Mr. WEST. No.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand this appropriation is used for keeping up the office maps, which are continually changing in every part of the United States. I shall have to refer to the post-route bill again for the purpose of illustration. Every route advertised to be let has to be laid out on the map. If a route is abolished it has to be erased from the map. Senators and Members wish to consult with regard to routes in their States and districts; a reference is continually made to the maps to ascertain distances, routes, &c. The amount of $30,000 is not too much for the necessities of the office.

I did not understand what was said with reference to the distribution of the maps. I am sure, so far as I am concerned, I never received any of them, and I doubt if many of these maps are given to Senators and Representatives. It may be that when a Senator is applied to for one of these maps he may send to the Department for it and get it. Under these circumstances he may procure a copy and send it; but this appropriation is spent in keeping up this branch of the service of the Department, and if it falls behind the Department would be very much at a loss to know where the post-routes are. The amount is not extravagant considering the necessities of the service.

Mr. INGALLS. If I understand this matter, the original plate of every State or group of States is lithographed with the railroad routes and other mail-routes laid out in pen or pencil, and as these routes are changed the change is indicated by some clerks in the office in order to make it a proper matter of reference for the Department. The routes are marked in red or blue or yellow to indicate the frequency of the service. A subsequent portion of this paragraph provides that these maps may be published and sold "to individuals at the cost thereof" and the proceeds "applied as a further appropriation for said purpose." I still am unable to see what considerable use there is for this large appropriation. I should like to know how many copies there are printed and how many clerks are employed in their preparation, and what is the necessity for this annual appropriation, because undoubtedly the plates are lithographed and additional copies from them or from the block can be supplied at an almost infinitesimal cost.

Mr. SARGENT. Assume that they are lithographed, nevertheless they have to be materially changed. As the additional routes have to be put upon them, new lithographing of plates is necessary, and the work has to be gone over year by year. A map of year before last would be entirely obsolete except in regard to some of the main railroad routes, and on many of those there might be changes.

Mr. INGALLS. Those changes are indicated by pen or pencil.

Mr. SARGENT. That is a mere temporary expedient; but how soon will it be before the map is completely destroyed by constant use? It has to be put in some more permanent form, and a surface has to be prepared for future change. I am assured at the Post-Office Department that this is a very necessary appropriation, and that the want of the service cannot be supplied unless this amendment is adopted. My attention has been specially called to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in line 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 22, to increase the appropriation "for advertising" from $25,000 to $40,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the gentleman having charge of this bill what is the object of changing the advertising from the newspapers of the country to special advertisements placed in the post-offices? It seems to me that is an amendment of doubtful propriety.

Mr. WEST. If that is so that doubtful propriety or impropriety ought to have been discovered in the past year, because I will say to the Senator that that principle was established a year ago. It was done for the purpose of lessening the expense, and also with a view of giving more extended notice, according to the judgment of the officials of the Post-Office Department. This is, therefore, perpetuating an arrangement that was established a year ago, which has been found to work exceedingly beneficially. It is not a change made at the present time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know anything about the propriety of the matter, and I do not know how it has operated. The Post-Office Department perhaps are aware of the facts on that point. It seems to me that $40,000 for simply sending advertisements to the post-offices of the country is a very large amount. There are some 50,000 post-offices, I believe, in the country. If the object is simply to place in the post-offices an advertisement put up by the postmaster, it seems to me it is more than a dollar for each post-office, if that is the mode which is to be adopted. If, however, there is a special agent sent around to place up those advertisements, I can see how the expenses would be increased to $40,000. I presume the Department does not have that rule, but simply sends the advertisements to the post-offices. If that is true, then I think the amount in the bill as it came from the House would be sufficient.

Mr. WEST. Last year there were $100,000 given for this same purpose. This year the House proposed to reduce that item down to $25,000. The Senate committee acquiesced with the House to the extent of three-fifths of the reduction instead of what they fixed, which would be three-fourths. The system is found to work so beneficially that the Senate committee now recommend its continuance. It has been established for over a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in line 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 25, after the word "cause," to strike out "an advertisement" and insert "advertisements;" in line 24, after the word "of," to strike out to "the" and insert "all general;" in line 25, after the word "be," to insert conspicuously;" after the word "post-office," to strike out "therein, to be posted conspicuously" and insert "in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements;" in line 28, after the word "such," to insert "general;" in the same line, after the word "letting," to strike out "but" and insert "and;" and after the word "required," in line 29, to insert "but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail-lettings;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail-lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail-lettings.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Do I understand the honorable Senator from Louisiana to say that this was a provision of the law last year?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir. If the Senator will refer to the post-office appropriation bill of last session, he will find that the system of advertising in the newspapers was changed to advertisements posted in the post-offices.

Mr. SARGENT. Are they not still advertising in newspapers?

Mr. WEST. Certain mail-lettings are advertised; what are known as specific mail-lettings, not general mail-lettings. If a contractor defaults or if a new route is established, that is known as a special letting; but the general mail-lettings are put out in pamphlet form and distributed to the post-offices throughout the country. That principle was established a year ago, and in the experience of the Office the new arrangement is found to be beneficial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 32 and 33, to increase the appropriation "for compensation to postmasters" from $6,800,000 to $7,500,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is upon this amendment that I desire to make a few remarks, and especially to express my regret that on the question of the compensation of postmasters the Senate Committee on Appropriations did not concur in the reduction proposed by the House of Representatives. It is true that to carry out this reduction it will be necessary to adopt certain legislative provisions. I do not know whether the legislative provisions on that point in the House bill are wise or not. I expected the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to propose some substitute for the provision made by the House of Representatives. I know that a reduction ought to be made in the pay of postmasters in the country. I know that in the State in which I live the office of postmaster is the most valuable office in the State, comparatively; that the pay of a postmaster in an ordinary city in Ohio is more than the pay of a supreme judge of the State of Ohio or of the governor of Ohio or any of our officers; and this occurs in most of the States of the Union. I am told by my friend from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and also by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that to be postmaster of a town of 20,000 inhabitants in Maine is worth more than to be governor of the State of Maine, the highest office in the State. This is wrong and ought to be corrected. We cannot, in the face of the present condition of affairs and in view of the figures which I shall give to the Senate, agree to the continuance of this state of things. We cannot refuse to make a reduction here where it is plainly and properly right. I for one will not vote for the amendment of the committee.

The estimate of appropriations submitted to us by the Departments, which is guiding the Committee on Appropriations, aggregates $314,612,608. Our bills are based upon these general estimates. It is true that the Treasury Department in their estimate have reduced these amounts, and they put the amount necessary for general purposes at $269,265,000, to which is to be added the sinking fund, $34,063,000. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends, according to the estimates of appropriation for this year, appropriations in all to $303,328,371 which is $11,284,281 less than the general estimates submitted to us from the heads of Departments. In addition to that, there will be a falling off of revenue in all human probability during the next year equivalent to that of the present year, of $15,000,000. It is therefore absolutely necessary for the Congress of the United States to reduce the appropriation bills to the extent of $26,284,231.

In order to show this matter a little more plainly and to spread upon the record these facts, I will state the actual result of the deficiency during the current fiscal year as taken from the official documents received by me since I made a statement on this subject the other day.

It was estimated by the Treasury in November last, (finance report, pages 4, 5, and 6,) that the receipts from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, would be		$156,233,626 25
The actual receipts from July 1 to May 31 have been	$136,527,536 04
And during the month of June it is thought there will be received	9,500,000 00
Making the total receipts for the year		146,027,536 04
And less than the estimate.		10,205,090 21
The estimate of the internal-revenue receipts for the same period was		120,199,723 50
The amount received from July 1 to May 31 has been	$105,448,507 10
It is estimated that the receipts during the month of June will reach the sum of	10,600,000 00
Making the total receipts for the year		116,048,507 10
And less than the estimate.		4,151,216 40
In these two items there is a falling below the estimates of		14,357,306 61
The estimate of miscellaneous revenues, including sales of public lands, &c., was placed at		21,022,795 39

The actual receipts to date added to the amount which will be paid into the Treasury during the current month it is expected will be yielding from this source	$24,171,344 62
And in excess of the estimate	3,148,549 23
The foregoing statement of actual receipts and estimates for the current month puts the total income of the Government for this fiscal year at	286,247,387 76
The estimate of the same in finance report, page 6, was placed at	297,456,145 14
It will therefore be seen that the income of the Government will probably fall below the estimates by the amount of	11,208,757 38

It is manifest, therefore, that if we are to be guided by the amount of our revenues we cannot presume a deficiency in the next year upon the same estimates of less than $15,000,000, and we must face a probable deficiency during this year of at least $26,000,000 less than the aggregate of the estimate submitted to us by the Treasury Department. It will be necessary to us to reduce the appropriation bills $26,284,231. This duty rests upon the Committee on Appropriations, and they are pursuing the duty, no doubt, wisely and well. I have concurred with them thus far, and I believe that their action upon the legislative and executive appropriation bill was wise. I had no cause to criticise it. Indeed I voted for every proposition of theirs. But here is a proposition made by the House of Representatives where if they do not agree to the identical measure submitted by the House, it seems to me the Committee on Appropriations or some committee of this body ought to make a counter-proposition.

Take another fact. The Postmaster-General has said himself that the pay of postmasters is too large, and he has submitted a bill to Congress which, according to the statement made to me, reduces the aggregate salaries of postmasters by the amount of $400,000 or $500,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. About $250,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars! I understood it was more.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not certain that I am accurate about it, but I understood it was about $400,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know exactly; but it is perfectly apparent that there can be a reduction in the salaries of postmasters. That is not all. I have the figures before me, furnished by the Post-Office Department, and I will present you a rather remarkable statement presented in these papers. I find in one of the tables furnished by the Postmaster-General, and I suppose sent to most Senators, that the pay of postmasters has increased up to last year, since 1868, 65 per cent.; but now, this year's estimate for the pay of postmasters is $7,500,000, instead of $7,049,000; so that, if we adopt the appropriation bill as it is now before us, the increase of the pay of postmasters in the United States from 1868 is 80 per cent.

Mr. HAMLIN. But the revenue increases pari passu.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will call attention to that. The revenues have increased to the extent of 63 per cent. only. In 1868 money was far less valuable than now; so that the postmaster now receives money worth 30 per cent. more than it was in 1868. Three thousand dollars in 1868 would not buy so much marketing or provisions, or supplies, or gold, or anything else, by from 25 to 30 per cent. as it will now; and yet since that time the aggregate pay of postmasters has increased 80 per cent., partly by the increase of the number of postmasters, but also by increasing the actual rate of pay. Is this right? Ought we not to consider the changed condition of things? Ought we not to reduce the pay of these postmasters? I say we ought; and I believe it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to take some proposition to reduce these appropriations.

But that is not all. We had here a very able speech made at the beginning of the session by the honorable Senator from Maine, in which he showed us that there was a deficiency in carrying the newspapers of this country to the amount of $7,000,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Six million dollars; I made a mistake.

Mr. SHERMAN. I find it stated in the table at $6,900,000. The Senator now says $6,000,000. According to the statement made by him, there is a loss on carrying the second-class mail matter of $6,933,023 and some cents. Why is it? What argument can be given by any prudent man to justify the people of the United States in carrying newspapers practically free of postage? The whole amount paid by the newspapers of this country toward carrying the mail matter I believe is only about $2,000,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. About one million.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only $1,000,000, my friend says. Why is that? Have we not the courage to deal with this question? Have the newspapers the power over us to compel us to carry their matter free? When we are charging three cents on letters, should we carry newspapers at two cents a pound? Is there such terror of newspapers in this country that we cannot do what is right? Cannot everybody see that this is not right? We can all very well admit that the circulation of newspapers, intelligence, information, is of great value and great importance. We ought not to pass laws that would greatly check it; but at the same time it is manifest that this service should be paid for by those who have the first benefit of it, that to a reasonable extent at least the newspaper ought to make good this deficiency.

Now, sir, put the question to any intelligent newspaper publisher, and he would consider himself insulted if you would tell him that he is a stipendiary on the bounty of the Government; that we carry for his special benefit this large mass of matter at a loss of $7,000,000 a year, covering nearly the whole of our deficiency. It is wrong; it ought to be corrected; and we ought to have the courage to do it, even if every newspaper in the land should cry out against it.

Two or three years ago, when this rate was fixed, I called attention to the fact that the charge was greatly below the cost and tried to have it put at four cents a pound instead of two; and I was very much misrepresented about it; and yet I have since conversed with many newspaper publishers in regard to it, and they have uniformly said to me that our action was a mistake and that we put the rate too low, and that a reasonable rate, such as would divide with the public at large the expense of carrying this matter, would be right and proper.

It seems to me, therefore, that to increase the rate to four or five or even six cents a pound on the newspapers carried in the mail would be a wise solution of the trouble; would give us two or three millions to supply this deficiency, and thus enable us to live within our means. Why can we not do it? The House of Representatives have proposed certain reductions. Accept them. If their proposition is not wise—and I rather think it is not from the statement made to me—make some counter-proposition that will bring about the same result, the reduction of half a million dollars on the pay of postmasters. Does anybody dispute that their pay is too high? I never saw a man do it; the Senator from Maine does not do it. Why not reduce them, then? Why pay the postmaster of a town in Ohio $4,000 a year when a judge of the supreme court traveling over the State gets but $3,500? Why hold out to all the people of the United States the eager desire to get a Federal office because the Federal office is paid for beyond a State office? To many of the men who hold your post-offices the position is a matter of great convenience. Large numbers of them are merchants, who find it convenient to have the post-office at their place of business in order to bring customers. Of all the services in the world there is no service that will bear to sustain itself at a less rate of compensation than that of postmaster, because it is an easy service, a very easy service comparatively.

Mr. WEST. Are the bonds easy?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is no trouble for a man to be honest. I take it where a man receives money he has to pay the same money back.

Mr. WEST. Let me interpose. The post-office in New York has some seven hundred employés and the postmaster is responsible for the official integrity of every one of them. It is easy for him to be honest.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that fair? I admit that the postmasters at New York, Philadelphia, Boston, these leading cities, ought to be paid more than elsewhere.

Mr. WEST. The Senator has not said so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not said all I intended to say, by any means.

Now, sir, I submit to the honorable Senator from Louisiana, because a single man, or two men, or three men get an insufficient salary, is that a reason why we should pay ten thousand men an unreasonable salary? We cannot meet the House of Representatives on that proposition. If the salary in New York is too low, why does he not propose to raise it? If it is too low in a few cities, as I confess it to be—and I would not hold the office of postmaster of New York, because of the responsibility—is that any reason why in Bangor, Maine, or in some other town in Maine or in Ohio, or anywhere else, there should be paid more than any private citizen would pay for the same kind of service? Not at all. We ought to correct it; we ought to meet the House of Representatives, if their proposition is not a fair one, by some counter-proposition.

So with the newspapers; if it is a fact that we spend $8,000,000 to carry newspapers from the publishers to the people, and only get $1,000,000 back, we are derelict in our duty unless we make them pay a reasonable fraction, at least one-half, of the cost of that service. There is no reason in the world why that service should be charged upon the people; and they ought to pay a reasonable rate, whatever it is.

It seems to me these amendments ought to be made to this appropriation bill; and in this way we ought to save a considerable sum. As it is now, there is over $8,000,000 appropriated for a deficiency in the postal service. We can reduce it; we ought to reduce it; we must reduce it. We must reduce these appropriation bills; and, therefore, while I do not desire to criticise my honorable friends who have charge of these bills, while I know they are carrying out the general idea that they will not agree to any legislative amendments to appropriation bills, yet these legislative amendments are here; they have got to be acted on; they will be carried into our conference committees. If we do not think they are right, we ought to propose something else; and besides, the Senate cannot stand in the position of refusing to meet legislative provisions in appropriation bills when we have loaded them down for the last forty years. All we can do is to take up these propositions and say whether they are right or wrong.

If they are wrong, we can strike them out; if they are not right in details, we can amend them in details; but we must act upon them when they are presented to us. While I am disposed to acquiesce in anything that is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and not to call for a division on this question, I do say that it is the duty of somebody of the Senate to meet the House of Representatives on this question of the reduction of the pay of postmasters and an increase of the income of the Post-Office Department so as to make it self-sustaining, or at least to relieve it from some of the embarrassments under which it now labors.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I concur in nearly all that the Senator from Ohio has said. I concur at least in the propriety and justice of re-adjusting the compensation to postmasters; but I do not favor such an amendment in this bill. I have prepared no counter projet, because I do not propose to do it on an appropriation bill.

Now, I will state very briefly—and perhaps I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to allow me to transcend the five minutes—my views in relation to a re-adjustment of the compensation to postmasters; and I am inclined to believe that when I have stated them I shall meet the approval of the candid judgment of this Senate.

I would re-adjust it upon a basis that will furnish a competent sum to pay a good man for discharging the duties, no more. And in looking at the present law and at its application to the present officials, I know that it does provide a compensation in a very large number of cases beyond that which is required for the good interest of the service, and I am, therefore, and have been at all times, for reducing it to a proper standard.

Senators will recollect that at the last session of Congress there was incorporated in a bill a provision that the Postmaster-General should communicate to Congress his views upon two propositions, one upon the postage paid upon what was called third-class matter, and the other in relation to the compensation of postmasters. The Postmaster-General did that. He communicated to this body at length his views, and gave to the Senate his figures in relation to the effect of the postage paid upon third-class matter. We have acted. He sent to the House of Representatives his views in relation to the reduction of the salaries of postmasters. That communication never has been committed to the Senate; we have never had it before us; but we have waited, or I can say as one member of the Post-Office Committee, that we have waited in all patience expecting that the House of Representatives would send us that bill, or such a bill as they might agree upon, that we might here consider it, instead of which they have incorporated in this appropriation bill the provision which is here.

The compensation of postmasters is based upon a commission. The first commission is 60 per cent. on the first $100. That applies to the little offices; and so it runs up, and as the sum increases the commission is reduced, and the maximum of a postmaster is $4,000. Under the action of the present law we find this fact, that in all the little cities and towns of fifteen or twenty thousand people over the country the salary is $4,000, while when you go to Boston, to Philadelphia, to Chicago, and to Saint Louis you find the postmasters get not one mill above that sum. Every man will see at a glance that a law which fixes the compensation of a postmaster in a little town of fifteen or twenty thousand people upon a basis that gives him $4,000 and allows no greater compensation in such cities as Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, and Saint Louis is wrong; it is palpably wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MERRIMON in the chair.) The Chair will interrupt the Senator to say that under the rule his time has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe there was a reservation made of this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Let the Senator from Maine go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time will be extended if there be no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. In that view of the case I have on several occasions invited the attention of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to the consideration of this subject, and I say here for myself, as I say for them, that we are willing to meet it and to give to it that consideration which our best judgment shall dictate. I have said that the projet of a bill was furnished to the House of Representatives and that bill, of which I had knowledge although it never came to the committee of the Senate, did make a new basis upon which the compensation of postmasters was to be graded; and, if I am right in my recollection, it made a saving to the Government of about $250,000, at least that, or it might be $300,000. But that gradation, while it cut off the amount beyond that which was fair and requisite, and necessary for the smaller offices, would have made the compensation of the postmasters at Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and some other places, above $4,000—more than they now get; and that, in my judgment, is clearly and distinctly right, because when you go to those offices and see the large amount of revenue which they collect, the large number of employés under them, for whose moral conduct the postmaster is responsible, there is an equity and a right that while you apply the corrective to the smaller offices you should also do equal justice to these large offices that have been limited by the existing law.

That was the bill which met my approval, which meets my approval now; but I do not propose to offer it here as legislative matter to an appropriation bill. And yet if the House of Representatives are not disposed to act upon that and send it here to us, then if we strike out the section of this bill on that subject the matter will be in abeyance between the two branches, and then you may more accurately and more properly, in my judgment, or with more hope of success, present your counter-proposition to the House. I think there can be no doubt that there should be a re-adjustment of this compensation.

But now let me come to the conditions contained in the section inserted in this bill by the House of Representatives. First, I object to treating the subject upon an appropriation bill. I am in favor, as I have been, of re-adjusting the compensation upon that basis which shall meet the approval of candid men, which shall furnish just and adequate compensation to an honest and competent man, and no more. But this section is reckless; it has no system to it; it would not apply justly and equitably if it should become a law. I have papers in my possession which I could read, and show you that a postmaster in a town of 20,000 inhabitants receiving a compensation of $4,000 under the provisions of this section might not receive $1,000. That is not right; and how is it? I have said the compensation was graduated upon the amount of revenues received. I should have said, to be accurate, upon the amount of stamps sold and box-rents. How, then, would the result be produced to which I have alluded? Let me state. In one of these small towns, and they are everywhere uniform without exception, save where the Government owns the building, there are box-rents received by the postmaster. Where the Government owns its own building, it furnishes its own boxes and receives the rents; but in all other offices the postmaster himself furnishes the boxes, and puts his own tax upon them, and in that way he gets a portion of his compensation. Having had some conversation with the Senator from New York on my right, [Mr. KERNAN,] I invite his attention to this point that I am now making. In addition to the compensation which the postmaster gets, he gets the rents of his boxes. In an office where he furnishes his own boxes, it may be at an expense of $1,500 or $2,000, and he does not happen to hold the office for a single year, he would not get above $1,000 for the whole of his compensation. I have a case in my mind where it would be less than $1,000.

I say, therefore, that while a plan of re-adjustment is right and ought to be carried out, and as one Senator and as a member of the committee I am ready and desirous of carrying it out, I am opposed to this provision, because it is not what I think is just. It goes perhaps as far the other way, it makes the compensation in many instances too low; but taking the projet of the bill which the House committee have before them, I think substantial justice would have been done and proper economy would have been exercised.

Mr. WITHERS. The provision to which the Senator refers is in the House bill, not the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. A provision of this bill inserted by the House. It is not the bill referred to the House Post-Office Committee, but a House amendment put upon the appropriation bill. Whether it came from the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads or not, I am not advised; I do not know.

Therefore with my present view, I would strike out all this legislation. I have not yet seen the time when I would be willing to vote affirmatively on any general legislation of this kind on an appropriation bill. I will not say that in the last resort I would not vote for it if we can secure the measure in no other manner. But if we may do it, we may better do it by trusting to a committee of conference to meet a committee on the part of the House and so compare our notes the one with the other, and find perhaps, as I hope we may, some middle ground upon which we can stand.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I hope we shall dissent from this amendment. While I appreciate the great force of what the Senator from Maine says, I think as the matter stands we shall accomplish the result so many are in favor of, the reducing of the salaries of some of these postmasters, by not appropriating money enough to pay them their present salaries; and I think when we make the appropriation less we shall be more likely to amend the law and adjust their salaries according to the money appropriated, rather than to appropriate the full amount of money, for then I fear there will be no change made.

The amendment to the House bill is to increase the amount $700,000. The House of Representatives by the bill under consideration appropriated $6,800,000 for compensation to postmasters. The amendment of the Senate committee increases it to $7,500,000, being an addition of $7,000,000. I think we should appropriate only the lesser sum; and we have a right to and we should amend the law so as to re-adjust the salaries of postmasters. It is conceded on all hands that some of them get far too much, a great many of them, and very few get too little. To illustrate that I have looked to the salaries of some of the postmasters in my own State. While the postmaster in New York is performing the service of postmaster for a million people and a great business center for $8,000, at the little town of Tarrytown, on the Hudson, a little watering-place, a nice town, the postmaster gets $2,600. Nobody doubts that you could get a good man to do all the duty, his clerks and office expenses being paid, for $1,000 or $1,200. As I have no invidious feeling toward anybody, I will take the city where I live, where the postmaster is an excellent gentleman. The population is 35,000; the compensation of the postmaster used to be $2,000. I do not know when it was changed, but I know it was at that rate about the year 1860, or a little before it. It is now $4,000. I do not doubt that, in the present state of business and at the present value of money and price of living, that gentleman or any other excellent man would perform the service and feel that he was well compensated for much less. There is a very nice village in my own county, the village of Clinton, where I find that the postmaster gets $1,900. I venture to say it would be on all hands admitted that $1,000 or $1,200 would be very ample compensation. Then take Geneva, a nice village, but not a place where you need have a high-salaried officer, and there the salary is $3,100. At Genesee it is $2,500. Then there is the village of Richfield Springs, a nice little watering-place, a country village, where the postmaster gets $1,700. You could get any of the business men to take the office into their stores for half that sum. At Buffalo, a large city, as you all know, the postmaster gets $4,000, and is very willing to serve at that, while at Bath, a small village in a neighboring county, quite a small village compared with Buffalo, the postmaster gets $2,300. At Batavia, a nice village on the line of the road this side of Buffalo, the postmaster gets $3,100. These rates are too high.

Mr. WEST. Is the Senator from New York aware of how much out of that compensation these parties are obliged to disburse for carrying on their offices?

Mr. KERNAN. I do not understand that they disburse at all for carrying on their offices.

Mr. WEST. I am so informed by the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. KERNAN. Then we should have the facts, because certainly the office is paid for at Utica and it is at Buffalo, and I think also at Batavia, and the clerks are paid. But at Batavia or Richfield Springs the expenses of the office must be very trifling. I think, without any feeling of politics or party, the people would say in these country towns "we can get good men, reliable men, for much less salaries." I do not want to make the compensation too low; but I think we should adhere to the House bill and not appropriate $700,000 more than they call for but appropriate the lesser amount, and then adjust the law or authorize the Postmaster-General in some way to adjust these salaries at a fair rate of compensation, and not while we are paying out of the Treasury large sums to carry on the distribution of mail matter pay to postmasters what is really an exorbitant salary in these times in a large number of instances. Therefore I hope we shall stand by the House bill.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I will state that there is no contrariety of sentiment on the part of the Committee on Appropriations with the opinions expressed by all the Senators who have addressed the Senate on the subject of the necessity of a re-adjustment of the salaries of postmasters in certain localities. That was a difficulty which was recognized by the committee; and the particular amendment which is now under consideration, increasing the appropriation from $6,800,000 to $7,500,000, was predicated upon this fact, that although the House bill provided for a re-adjustment of the salaries of postmasters to such a degree and in such a manner as would probably cause a reduction in the amount which they would receive to the sum fixed by the House bill, yet in accordance with what we understood to be the sentiment of the Senate as expressed on all the appropriation bills which have been passed inimical to ingrafting any legislation thereupon, we could not assume that the proposed reduction which would be effected by the House bill would be consummated; and as we recognized the obligation to pass the appropriation bills in consonance with the existing laws, we had, as we thought, no option in carrying out what I say had been the previously expressed views of the Senate than to increase this appropriation by the amount indicated.

There is, I will mention here, also an additional reason why this should be done. The law as it at present stands requires the salaries of the postmasters to be adjusted every two years, and the time has now come when such adjustment is absolutely necessary, because a notice has to be sent out of the change by the beginning of the next quarter, and there is barely time to make the re-adjustment and issue the notice as required by law.

Bearing all these facts in mind, therefore, the committee decided to increase the appropriation to the amount required under the existing law, leaving it hereafter to the Senate to decide whether the additional legislation which would be demanded to re-adjust the salaries should be consummated, because if it be thus consummated the effect will be simply that the whole amount appropriated will not be required and the residue will be turned back into the Treasury.

As to the point of legislation upon appropriation bills, I do not propose to say much, because it is a subject which has been very freely discussed in the Senate, and all men of all parties, so far as I know, have expressed their disapprobation of that principle; and to-day——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was it that this Senate established the principle that they would ingraft no legislation in appropriation bills?

Mr. WITHERS. It has been done by the uniform votes of the Senate on all appropriation bills involving that principle.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator answer this question? Section 4 of the postal appropriation act of the last year, passed on the 3d of March, 1875, is as follows:

That the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be published by the United States in any newspaper, anything in existing laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

Was that legislation in an appropriation bill?

Mr. WITHERS. I hope that the Senator does not understand that the remarks which I have submitted on the subject of the opinion of the Senate in regard to legislating on appropriation bills had any reference to the last Senate or to any previous Congress. It is what has passed in this Senate during this session that I referred to, and I think I have sufficient ground to repeat the statement which I made that the Senate has indicated, to my mind unmistakably, its condemnation of that practice by the votes which it has given on all legislative amendments hitherto to appropriation bills in this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time due to the Senator from Virginia under the rule has expired.

Mr. WEST. I suggest to the occupant of the chair at the present moment that before he took his position the rule was suspended on this amendment. The five-minute rule was suspended by common consent.

Mr. WITHERS. There are some other points I wish to present——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not so informed. The Senator from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. BOGY. It was distinctly understood that the rule should not apply to this amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. With regard to the action of the Committee on Appropriations on the legislative portions of this bill, I will state this, which I think will meet the views of the Senator from Maine as well as I hope those of the Senator from Ohio: that when the committee determined to amend the bill by striking out the fifth and sixth and subsequent sections which contain legislative provisions, it was done with the understanding that those amendments, if agreed to in the Senate, would be coupled with a reference of these particular sections to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, in order that they might investigate the matters therein contained and report such a bill as would embody their views upon the reforms which are proposed to be instituted by these sections.

I say for myself very frankly that many of the provisions which are contained in these legislative sections meet my hearty and cordial approval, and I would very cheerfully vote for a bill which embodied them; but, in accordance with the principle which I have previously announced as the one that controlled us in our action, I did not agree to them as attached to this appropriation bill. I will here state further that many of the amendments which have been adopted by the Senate on these appropriation bills in consonance with the idea to which I have alluded, that it is improper to ingraft legislation upon them, struck out provisions which would meet my approval in themselves; and if we are to strike down this principle on which we have previously acted, and if it be determined, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, that legislation shall be ingrafted on the appropriation bills, then for one I am willing to recede from several of the amendments adopted in this body, so far as my vote is concerned, and, if we are to legislate at all, to exercise such discrimination as in our best judgment may induce us to select what is the most appropriate legislation to ingraft on these bills.

But, sir, I submit with all due deference that all that is proposed to be accomplished in the way of legislation can be much more certainly and much more efficiently accomplished by referring the legislative sections of this bill to the appropriate committee, and let them prepare legislation to meet the wants which are indicated by the House bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, just a word or two in reply to the Senator from Ohio, whom I do not see in his seat at this moment. The Senator from Ohio thinks that the Committee on Appropriations did not do their duty in that they did not recommend some reduction of the salaries of postmasters. That is precisely the question that we had been discussing on former appropriation bills, and that we settled, as I thought, if we settled anything. If anything can be settled in the Senate of the United States as to the duties or office of the Appropriation Committee, it is that their function is to appropriate for the service and not undertake to tell what it ought to be. The Senate, I agree, may determine the service, but the Appropriation Committee cannot. That is the distinction, and for that reason I would say to my honorable friend, if he were here, that the Senate Committee on Appropriations reported this bill back according to the law. Now, if the Senate chooses to change it, very well; that is not our business.

My honorable friend says he thinks the salaries of the postmasters ought to be reduced and may be reduced, and that the Postmaster-General is of that opinion. Very likely. I think that is so; but will the Senator from Ohio tell me or tell the Senate precisely how much? That is the proposition—how much? I can see from the statement of the Postmaster-General that it is competent, that it is probably consistent with the public service to reduce the salaries of the postmasters in this country. Who is there on the floor of the Senate that can tell precisely to what extent? My honorable friend confesses that he is not wise on that subject at all; and if he is not, how does he suppose that it falls to the lot of the Committee on Appropriations, whose business it is simply to find what the law is and appropriate for it, and not to determine what it should be?

If my honorable friend from Ohio, who I am glad to see has returned to his seat, can tell the Senate precisely what these salaries ought to be, then I am in favor of accepting his amendment; but my honorable friend says he is not able to do that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me make a suggestion. I do not want to make amendments to appropriation bills blindly, because I know how foolish, and how difficult, and how embarrassing it is to the committee having charge of them; but when the Postmaster-General says he can get along with $400,000 less, my idea would be to put the amount at what he says he can get along with, and then allow the legislation to reduce the salaries to be arranged either by a committee of conference, which is a dangerous way, it is true, or by a proposition coming from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I would fix the amount at about what the Postmaster-General thinks he can get along with.

Mr. WEST. Where does that admission come from? We have not heard it from the Postmaster-General, and he has absolutely insisted on having this amount. Of course we should have curtailed it if we could have got his consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I inquired of the Senator from Maine—I went to the fountain-head—and he told me he thought $400,000 could be saved according to the idea of the Postmaster-General. His colleague thinks not so much.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is not the point I am touching; the point is the reduction of salary. I understand the Senator to say that he thinks the Postmaster-General supposes the salaries of postmasters in this country might be reduced without injury to the public service, and without any injustice to them; but the question is how much? On that point I did say to the Senator from Ohio that I understood the Postmaster-General to think there might be a reduction of about $400,000, but I am told it is less than that, and only $250,000 or $300,000.

The bill as it comes from the House of Representatives undertakes to do a particular thing in regard to the salaries, to reduce them to a certain amount. The Postmaster-General says as to that particular reduction that it would be an injustice and that it would cripple the public service. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations were placed in an attitude precisely like this: First, we must undertake to judge whether this proposition of the House of Representatives was a correct one, whether it might be done or not, without the proper information; and when we go to the Postmaster-General he tells us that it would be an injustice and would cripple the public service. Now, what was to be done? Of course the proper thing was to strike it out and remit it to the Senate for its judgment. Our judgment is, from the best information we get, that it is not a safe thing to concur with the House of Representatives, and still that something else might be done, but precisely what we do not know. Nobody proposes anything. I do not know that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, who are supposed to have the best information on this subject, have any proposition; if they have, they do not offer it. That is the predicament in which we are found; and the Senate must either take the ground of concurring in the action of the House or take the ground of non-concurring, and trust to a conference to put this matter right, or some proposition must be made in the Senate. The Committee on Appropriations had none to make, and from the nature of the case I submit to my honorable friend from Ohio he ought not to expect us to make any.

The real question then is, will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations non-concurring with the House, and settle this somewhere else, or undertake to settle it now? It seems to me it will come to this: you will probably either concur with the House of Representatives in their provision or concur with the action of the committee, and endeavor to settle the matter in conference. Otherwise you can see, with the information we have, as to what is precisely right, we may stay here until the end of this week and next week to discuss this general topic without making much progress.

I agree with my honorable friend from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] who has recently addressed the Senate on this subject, that unquestionably there may be a reduction in the salaries; but that must be effected by the judgment of the Senate. If anybody is wise on that subject I wish he would put his wisdom in the form of an amendment, and I shall be the last man to object to it. But it should not come from the Committee on Appropriations. I submit, therefore, that there is nothing left for the Senate but to concur with the House of Representatives. That is the way it strikes me.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to present a proposition—and I will make one that I will vote for cheerfully—I move to reduce the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, which I think is the estimate of the Department, by exactly $300,000, so that the committee of conference when they are acting on this matter may have a choice between the House proposition and the Senate reduction, which will then be $300,000 below the estimate. I make it $300,000 because that is the smallest sum stated as the probable result of the proposition of the Postmaster-General.

I will say now, in order to present the question fully to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and the Committee on Appropriations, that I will move at the proper time to increase the rate of postage on newspapers to four cents a pound. I wish it understood now beforehand that I do it not to punish the newspapers, but simply that newspaper publishers should pay some reasonable share of the cost of carrying newspapers in the mail. I will now content myself with moving a reduction of the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in this amendment $300,000. That will leave the committee to adjust the amount upon the basis of legislation that they may agree upon.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator's motion is to reduce the $7,500,000 to $7,200,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. That will give a margin; that will leave the whole question open. If the two Houses cannot agree on some change of the existing law, they will have to appropriate the full amount, I admit. My amendment is to strike out "5" in line 33 and insert "2."

Mr. KERNAN. I was cut off from answering the question of the Senator from Louisiana as to whether these postmasters get this money as salary. I do understand that all those I have named receive, as salary for their own services, the sums I have stated. It is so put down in the Blue Book, and the clerks are paid out of the very appropriation in this same section of $3,290,000 for clerks of post-offices.

While we all agree that there could be and should be a very large saving to the Post-Office Department and to the country from a proper reduction of the salaries of a large number of postmasters, I fear that, if we adhere so firmly to this new principle that we shall not do anything by way of reduction in an appropriation bill, the people will lose the benefit of any reductions. Appropriation bills have been the medium generally of raising salaries, and I think we had better correct this evil and extravagance, as the House of Representatives propose to do here, by appropriating only the sum they have named and by legislating in the other sections of the bill so as to have the salaries reduced where they are too large, as they are. Salaries have been raised year after year by provisions in appropriation bills, and I think that we could correct a conceded wrong toward the Treasury by legislating in this appropriation bill, that will certainly go through, to reduce these salaries down as the House proposes by only appropriating this sum, and then by the subsequent sections, which the committee propose to strike out, regulating the salaries according to law. If we pass this bill as the House has sent it to us, these salaries will be reduced, and the law will be amended to conform to the sum which the House proposes to appropriate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in line 33, so as to make the appropriation $7,200,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee, as amended, to strike out "$6,800,000" and insert "$7,200,000."

Mr. KERNAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on this as a test question whether we shall do anything in the way of reducing where the appropriation is admitted to be too large.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I further propose to amend by providing that the reduction in the rate of pay shall commence on the 1st day of October next. A practical difficulty has been suggested to me that it will take some time to fix the new rate, and it will be impossible to do it by the first of the fiscal year.

Mr. ALLISON. That need not be put here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it can be put in the legislative sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am generally paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN;] hence I cannot vote on this bill. I apprehend if he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Dennis, Edmunds, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Maxey, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Paddock, Robertson, Sherman, Spencer, West, Withers, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, Thurman, and Whyte—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Sharon, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Windom—36.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 44, to increase the appropriation "for payment of letter-carriers" from $1,800,000 to $2,000,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Some time ago I called attention to the fact that there was a very great discrepancy in the number of letter-carriers and clerks in the various post-offices in this country. I instanced the discrepancy which existed between Boston and Saint Louis and Philadelphia, cities of much larger size, both with respect to the number of clerks employed and the number of letter-carriers employed. I am satisfied from an inspection of the Blue Book, which shows the number of letter-carriers employed in the various large cities and towns in this country and the number of clerks in the post-offices of those cities, that there is a surplus and an unnecessarily large number of clerks and letter-carriers employed. I do not know exactly the compensation that is paid to these letter-carriers; but we ought to curtail wherever we can, and if there are more letter-carriers being paid than are necessary we ought at least to curtail the number. I think the service could be supplied by a sufficient number of letter-carriers for the amount fixed by the House of Representatives, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. WEST. I will say in behalf of this amendment that the reduction made by the House of Representatives was a reduction from the amount allowed last year, and I am obliged to repeat that statement over and over again to remind the Senate of the increasing requirements of the postal service, so that whenever we get to the point where we prevent an expansion I think we have accomplished a great deal of good. That is the case in regard to this amendment. The amount we gave last year was $2,000,000. We prevent any further expansion and stop there.

Now, with reference to the character of the service, its benefit to the country, and to the people served by it, I have this to say: that of all the classes of service rendered through the post-office, this is almost the only self-sustaining branch of it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator what he means by sustaining itself? If he means that the letters which the carriers gather up and which they take to the post-office fully pay the expenses of the letter-carriers, I have no question of that; but would not those letters get to the post-office without the intervention of letter-carriers?

Mr. WEST. I suppose they would; and the Senator could send a letter to Dover if he hired a private express; but the question is whether you economically use the money of the people for this purpose. The revenue derived from collected mail matter more than pays this expense. It is not open to the objection of not being self-sustaining; it is self-sustaining, and more than self-sustaining at $2,000,000, for the revenue is about $2,100,000. Instead of expanding it as was desired by the Post-Office Department, we say, "Stop; you have gone far enough." We propose to keep them there, and we think that the service rendered is an equivalent for the money to the people.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to the letter-carrier system. I am not in favor of the abolition of the carrier system at all, but I am in favor of restricting it to the actual wants of the service of the cities and towns in which it is employed. My point is that there is an unnecessarily large number of employés of that character. With reference to the service they perform paying, I cannot see how it adds to the revenues of the Post-Office Department. It is true they gather up letters in the different cities in which they are employed and take them to the post-office; but they have got to be carried through the mails afterward, and if there were not a letter-carrier in those cities a large proportion of those letters would find their way to the post-office. I am not in favor, I say, of abolishing the letter-carrier system, but I am in favor of restricting it and of not having such an unnecessarily large number of letter-carriers in the various cities as there are in this country. That is the point I make.

Mr. HAMLIN. Senators are aware that within every post-office delivery supplied by letter-carriers an additional cent is paid in postage on every letter and circular deposited within the limits of that office. That I believe furnishes a revenue of about half a million dollars. That is done because the locality has a benefit upon its other communications. That is why drop-letters, so to speak, are charged a cent within the delivery where mail-messengers deliver them, and not elsewhere. The Government gets about half a million of revenue from that.

Now it is affirmed, and I have no doubt truthfully affirmed, that the letter-carriers do get enough more letters that would not otherwise go to the post-office to compensate them. I did not rise, however, to discuss that point, but to call the attention of my friend from Delaware to a fact that perhaps had escaped his attention or may not be within his knowledge. The House committee reported this bill, as he will see on looking at the proceedings of the House, abolishing all carriers in cities where the population was less than forty thousand; it is now limited to a population of twenty thousand; and they made their appropriation on that basis, to wit, of confining the carriers to the offices in cities of above forty thousand people. The House thought otherwise, and refused to concur in that part of the bill, and struck it out by a very large vote; but then the House did not put back the $200,000 to pay the carriers in those offices of between twenty thousand and forty thousand people; and there is just where the necessity for this additional appropriation comes in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 52, to increase the appropriation "for wrapping-twine" from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 53, to increase the appropriation "for marking and rating stamps" from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 54, to increase the appropriation "for letter-balances and scales" from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 56, to increase the appropriation "for rent, light, and fuel" from $390,000 to $425,000.

Mr. WEST. I will state for the information of the Senate that the sum appropriated last year was $500,000 for rent, light, and fuel for all the post-offices throughout the country. The House committee propose to reduce the amount to $390,000; in other words, to cut off $110,000. The Senate committee meet them over two-thirds of the way and reduce the amount $75,000 upon the assurance of the Post-Office Department that that amount is absolutely and indispensably necessary for the purpose. The appropriation failed last year, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] reminds me, because there was not enough. Now they think by proper economy they can get along with a reduced amount, and the difference between the requirements of the Post-Office Department and what the Senate gives is $75,000, and the House is $35,000 less than that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee in lines 56 and 57.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 59, to increase the appropriation "for stationery" from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 60, to increase the appropriation "for miscellaneous and incidental items" from $50,000 to $100,000.

Mr. WEST. The increase being 100 per cent. on the amount proposed by the House, I believe it is necessary to state that the Senate committee has there met the House once more half way. The appropriation last year was $150,000. The House have now cut it down $100,000. We have met them between the two points and reduced it one-half.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is the estimate of the Department for this year?

Mr. WEST. One hundred and forty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. KERNAN. I would ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he would indicate what they use this money for, "miscellaneous and incidental" items that run up to $100,000?

Mr. WEST. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from New York, I would refer to the detailed account of expenditures of the Post-Office Department on page 233 of the Postmaster-General's report for this year, giving minutely every item of expenditure. For instance, I will take Cambridge, Massachusetts:

Cambridge, Massachusetts, for 30,000 Official Postal Guides furnished October 10, 1874, $6,450.

That is one item. On that page and throughout he will find every dollar of the money accounted for and passed by the accounting officers of the Treasury. They had $150,000 last year and asked for $145,000 this year. The House gave $50,000, and we meet them half way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 63, after "inland" to insert "mail," and after "transportation" to strike out "namely: for transportation by railroad, $8,862,149; for transportation on 'star routes' and by steamboats, and on all other than railroad routes, $6,737,851; in all, fifteen million six," and insert "seventeen million five;" so as to read:

For inland mail transportation, $17,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 69 the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of said sum as may be necessary may be expended to continue the daily-mail service between Chicago and the Pacific coast, not exceeding, however, the sum of $25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert in line 70, after the words "provided, that," the words "in addition to the amount authorized by law;" so as to read:

Provided, That in addition to the amount authorized by law, so much of said sum as may be necessary may be expended to continue the daily-mail service between Chicago and the Pacific coast, &c.

I will state very briefly that the object of this proviso is to establish a daily-mail service between Chicago and Omaha. That service is now performed alternately by three different railways, and the proviso provides for the service; but on consulting with the Comptroller, he seemed to think the amendment which I offer necessary in order to perfect the proviso.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator state how much is now provided by law for that service?

Mr. ALLISON. I will state briefly that there is a daily-mail service now between Chicago and Omaha, connecting the daily mail from the east to Chicago with the daily mail running from Omaha to the Pacific coast. The three different railways running through Iowa contracted for this service and called it a Sunday-mail service, they before running only six times a week; but under an amendment to the law passed last year, the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that this additional service cannot be paid for. It is to enable this service to be paid for that I propose the amendment. Otherwise the train will be taken off.

Mr. WEST. It is a mere question of the administration of the Office, not an increase of appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not increase the service, and is no increase of the amount paid for it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 75, to increase the appropriation "for compensation to railway-post-office clerks" from $1,125,000 to $1,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 77, to increase the appropriation "for route-agents" from $945,000 to $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 79, to increase the appropriation "for mail-route messengers" from $147,000 to $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 81 and 82, to increase the appropriation "for local agents" from $98,559 to $109,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 83, to increase the appropriation for mail-messengers from $621,000 to $720,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 99, to increase the appropriation "for pay of agent and assistants to distribute stamped envelopes and newspaper-wrappers, and expenses of agency," from $10,000 to $16,300.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if that is not the same item as in line 93, above:

For pay of agent and assistants to distribute stamps, and expenses of the agency, $6,900.

Mr. WEST. I will say to the Senator from New York that that is entirely a different establishment. That is the establishment which controls the adhesive stamps. There are two establishments entirely separate and in two different cities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the amendment, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. WEST. Our friends who are in favor of sustaining these amendments require me continually to call attention to their necessity. I will call attention to the fact that for some six or eight items preceding the Senate has agreed with the House all the way along in this reduction, but we could not bring ourselves to consent in this instance, for the reason that it has been demonstrated to us, by the pay-rolls of the persons necessarily employed in that establishment, that this amount is absolutely necessary. It was given last year, and it is the same amount which has been maintained year by year, without increase, notwithstanding the increase of the service.

Another reason for assenting to this proposition from the Post-Office Department is that by a subsequent amendment of the bill all this expense is to be paid by the purchaser of the envelopes. Consequently this is another self-sustaining proposition, and I hardly think it was understood by the House when they adopted it. I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 112 the following:

For miscellaneous items in the office of the Postmaster-General, $1,500

Mr. WEST. I feel it necessary to explain that there has been a similar fund placed at the disposition of the Postmaster-General in person as a contingent miscellaneous fund for his own use. It has hitherto been $2,500. It was omitted by the House, and the Senate committee agreed to give him $1,500. This is for the purpose of defraying the expenses of any man sent out of his office in the event of an extraordinary emergency attending the abstraction of the mails, or some peculiar defalcation, in order to enable him to have a fund, so that he can send a man, an expert, right from his own eye, to attend to these matters. The amount is very trivial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 117, to increase the appropriation "for transportation of foreign mails" from $220,000 to $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the word "dollars," in line 119, the words:

Including the United States portion of the expense of the international office organized under the provisions of article 15 of the general postal union treaty concluded at Berne October 9, 1874.

So as to read:

For balances due foreign countries, $50,000, including the United States portion of the expense of the international office organized under the provisions of article 15 of the general postal union treaty concluded at Berne October 9, 1874.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 123 and 124, in the following words:

For official postage-stamps, for the use of the Post-Office Department, $850,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us see if we understand that.

Mr. SARGENT. It is put in another place.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it is put in another place; but it makes all the difference in the world, exactly the difference of putting a thing on the other side of the ledger. All the items in section 1 are paid out of the receipts of the Post-Office Department. Consequently where it is now it amounts to nothing at all. They simply pay it out of their own receipts. That is right enough, but when it is transferred to section 2 it is paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. My friend is mistaken. It does not make a bit of difference whether it is in section 1 or in section 2, as the Senator will find if he will read the bill with a little more care than he did on a hasty glance.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I do not convince the Senator that he is wrong, I will give it up. The first clause of the first section provides—

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1877, out of any money in the Treasury arising from the revenues of said Department, in conformity to the act of July 2, 1836.

On the other hand, the committee have inserted the following words at the commencement of section 3, into which they have transferred this clause:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

* * * * * *

For official postage-stamps for the use of the Post-Office Department, $850,000.

Mr. SARGENT. Section 2 of the bill provides—

That if the revenue of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, then the sum of $7,188,147, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in revenue of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. SARGENT. So it makes no difference whether it is in section 1 or in section 2; if the revenues of the Department are not sufficient to meet the appropriation the appropriation is made out of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. Section 2 appropriates $7,000,000, and section 3, as proposed to be amended, appropriates a further sum out of the United States Treasury, first, for foreign steamship service $250,000, and secondly, for official postage-stamps, $850,000. I do not say that the appropriation is not necessary; but the place in which it is put makes a very material difference.

Mr. SARGENT. It would only be material provided the revenues of the Department were sufficient to pay the expenses. It is very well understood that it is a mere nominal sum. Probably the actual expenditure will be only $5,000. I have over and over again insisted that this was a false and fictitious system, piling up apparent expenditures which did not exist to several millions of dollars. I think it ought to be abolished; but neither the House nor the Senate up to this time have done so. The legislative bill which has passed both Houses proceeds without question upon the idea that these stamps are to be furnished and charged to the appropriations of the various Departments at their nominal value, as they are in this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I assure the Senator that this $850,000 is just so much money paid out of the Treasury of the United States. It is just as much money paid out of the Treasury of the United States in addition to the $7,000,000 as if paid to members of Congress or judges of the Supreme Court. It is to be paid out for services rendered by the Post-Office Department. This bill proceeds upon the idea that the Post-Office Department is one person and the United States is another. We appropriate out of the revenues of the Post-Office Department so many millions, and then the balance is made up of three items appropriated from the Treasury of the United States: First, the general deficiency; second, the steamship service, and third, the service rendered by the Post-Office Department for the United States. It is paid in money; and the very first thing that will be done after the 1st of July next will be to place to the credit of the Post-Office Department this $7,000,000 and this $850,000.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator is correct, we are certainly carrying on a most extravagant system of paying postage. If the postage-stamps which the Post-Office Department uses for its own business in sending its own correspondence cost nearly a million of dollars, then it is time to abolish it entirely and revert to the old system of franking. But that view is not correct. The money is not taken out of the Treasury of the United States to the extent of nearly a million of dollars. That is simply the nominal phase of it. The Government does not expend to carry on the correspondence of the Post-Office Department any such sum.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can convince my friend. When I go to the post-office and buy three dollars' worth of stamps I pay $3 for them. I do not pay $3 for the hundred pictures I get and the paper on which they are printed, but I pay it for the privilege of sending one hundred letters through the mails. So when the United States pay $850,000 for official stamps, they do not pay it for the pictures that are printed on those stamps, nor to re-imburse the mere cost of printing them, but they pay it to the Post-Office Department for the service of carrying the official documents of the United States through the mails of the United States. Therefore it is precisely the same when the Government buys the stamps as when an individual buys them. The money is appropriated out of the Treasury. The true way, in my judgment, would be to drop this fiction, because I agree in one sense it is a fiction, of increasing the annual appropriations for deficiency by adding the $850,000 to the $7,188,000. It is done in the estimates proper. In the estimates they are all grouped together as deficiencies, and so they are here in the Book of Estimates. They are all included in the deficiency.

Mr. WEST. I presume there will be no further objection. We shall get at this matter better and make progress by dropping this item where the committee recommend that it be stricken out, and then we can discuss the question when we reach the point where the committee propose to insert it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have reported a bill, and it is now before the Senate, to abolish this whole thing of franking by the Departments and to provide that their envelopes may go without any frank upon them. They would go just the same, just as well, and I can see no necessity for keeping this thing here in any event.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why does not the Senator move that provision right on this bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. Because I do not support the bill as it is; it has got other things in it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suggested the idea of putting the bill to which the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has referred upon this bill as an amendment, but it was objected that it would be in the nature of legislation. Therefore it was concluded to let it go over and deal with it separately by itself.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friends around me do not yet seem to understand that this $850,000 is to be taken bodily out of the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. WEST. And paid back to the Treasury through the Post-Office.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may not be paid in greenbacks, but it is placed to the credit of the Post-Office Department and drawn out in money, just like my salary or the salary of any one here. It is simply an addition of $850,000 to the deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. WEST. There is no question but that the Senator from Ohio is perfectly right. That subject has been understood by the Senate ever since it adopted the principle that each Department should pay its own postage just like an individual does, for the purpose of doing away with what was considered a pernicious system of franking. But when the Senator from Ohio says that it costs the Government of the United States that amount, he is scarcely correct. It is taken out of the Treasury and put in as a receipt in the revenues of the Post-Office Department. It is nothing but a fiction so far as that goes. It is putting to the credit of the Post-Office Department $850,000 which they draw out and credit to their revenues; but, so far as taking a dollar of the people's money is concerned, it does not do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That $850,000 is paid to your postmasters, and the railroads, and everybody else.

Mr. WEST. Most assuredly it is. I do not hesitate to admit that; but it is so much more of revenue received. It is making the Post-Office Department pay its own postage, as we are making the State Department pay its own postage, for the very good and sufficient reason that this is found to be the most feasible way to provide against the frauds which were practiced under the franking privilege. Unless you do something of this kind, you are obliged to adopt some measure to carry the post-office business through the Department. How will you do it? By saying that the Postmaster-General shall frank everything? That would be impossible. If his whole time were devoted to that subject alone, it would occupy all of it merely to frank. Therefore you have got to have some insignia upon your official communications to pass them through the mail, and this is the method which has been adopted of doing that. Let me tell the Senator that this is found to be the most direct method, by creating a fiction of this kind, because I venture to tell him that if he will get a Treasury stamp or a post-office stamp and put it on a letter, the letter will be stopped and to-morrow morning it will be returned to him from the post-office here on the ground that he had no right to use the stamp.

The effect of the system is to check frauds. Its operation has been found most beneficial. We paid dearly to inaugurate it. I did not believe in it when we did it. It cost $50,000 for the payment of plates alone to put it in operation. We did so, and now it costs only $1,500 a year, the cost of printing these stamps for franking all over the country. You could not hire two clerks to frank the Postmaster-General's business for that amount.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am happy to hear that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have taken a better view of the matter. I believe it is in one sense a fiction, and a very bad fiction indeed. Under the operation of this system of franking there is more fraud committed than ever was committed under the old system.

Mr. WEST. O, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. Here the anomaly is presented that every clerk in all these Departments who has the power to mail letters may abuse that privilege. You trust it to all the numberless officers contained in all these various Departments, but you will not trust a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives with this power. These postage-stamps may be applied to private letters or may be given out to wives and children, and can be used and abused, and you cannot detect it.

Mr. HAMLIN. And they are.

Mr. SHERMAN. The honorable Senator from Maine, who is chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, says they are. I do not say they are, because I do not know it, but I know very well that there is the power of abuse in this system of stamps.

Mr. HAMLIN. If my friend will allow me, I will say that I know it, because I have received letters with the stamps on them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads if the Postmaster-General is not of opinion that this is a more expensive system than the old system of franking?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have so understood.

Mr. WEST. I do not know when the gentleman had an opportunity of conferring with the Postmaster-General, but I can say to him that the Committee on Appropriations have direct from the Postmaster-General an entire refutal of that statement. He says this is the best way and the most economical way. As for the idea of the Senator from Ohio that clerks can give these postage-stamps to their wives and children, did he never in his innocence hear of a member of Congress doing the same thing, franking for his daughter, for instance. Very likely he did. We know that the franking privilege was abused and it met its reprobation before the public. Here now you propose to re-adopt it. I do not say that I would not be willing to do so; but, until you do, this is a necessary check upon the frauds that are practiced.

I say to the Senator from Ohio once more let him try it to-morrow morning and put a letter in the post-office with a Department stamp upon it, and see if it is not found out and sent back to him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator really believe that a clerk in the post-office in Washington would dare open my letter or the letter of a private individual? If so, he would be guilty of an offense for which he could be sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. WEST. I do not know as to that; I have not looked into that, and I will not take the Senator from Ohio as my guide on a post-office question. On finance he is perfectly right and I will follow him, for we know him to be a brilliant and shining light, but having "locked horns" with him once on this proposition and followed him, and followed him to ruin, I do not propose to do so again.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, my friend deserted me on the question of postage on newspapers. I tried very hard to get the postage fixed on newspapers at four cents a pound, and he agreed to put it at two cents a pound, and the proposition, now on the statute-book, has lost us thousands and thousands of revenue.

Mr. WEST. The honorable Senator forgets where he stood. He stood for three cents a pound and compromised on two, the result of necessity; but I do not see how we should have saved so much if we had only adopted his proposition. The whole revenue of the Government from this source is only $1,000,000. That is what makes me hesitate about adopting the views of the honorable Senator from Ohio as orthodox on postage questions, although I follow him as a brilliant light on finance, a question which none of the rest of us seem to understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was put, probably at the request of the Senator himself, on the committee of conference and I stood for four cents. My impression is that I did not even sign the report. I was deserted by my friend from Louisiana and the report was carried without me.

Mr. WEST. I did not have the honor to serve with the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. And for a year afterward I was very heartily criticised, I will not say abused, by the newspapers for trying to make them pay four cents a pound. I have conversed with some of the same gentlemen who criticised me, and they say it was a great mistake that we did not adopt that suggestion; and I intend to try it again.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana why it was that the clause "for official postage-stamps for the use of the Post-Office Department, $850,000" was taken from its place in lines 123 and 124 and put where it is now?

Mr. WEST. For the simple purpose of increasing the appropriation made for the service of the Post-Office Department. It is part of the increase that I spoke of at the outset. This is one of the items. I admitted that the Senate Committee on Appropriations had increased the amount appropriated by the House $3,357,241, although keeping within the limit of last year. To take the clause from where it is and put it where we propose to do is part of the increase. That is the effect of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, if it remained where it is aimed to be stricken out, it would not be an increase.

Mr. WEST. No, sir, it would not be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out lines 123 and 124, in the following words:

For official postage-stamps for the use of the Post-Office Department, $850,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section 2, lines 3 and 4, to strike out "four million two hundred and thirty thousand nine hundred and six," and insert "seven million one hundred and eighty-eight thousand one hundred and forty-seven;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That if the revenue of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, then the sum of $7,188,147, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in revenue of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1877.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the amendment, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. WEST. If the noes are to have that, the balance of the bill is all gone. The defeat of this amendment virtually neutralizes everything the Senate has so far adopted in the bill, if it is the pleasure of the Senate to pass it. No new route could be established; you have got to stop your railway-post-office service, fast trains, and everything else. It is all right, however, if you want to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after section 3 the words:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, lines 5 and 6, to strike out the words:

To be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

So as to read:

For steamship service between San Francisco, China, and Japan, $250,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. I should like to know why that appropriation should not come out of the Treasury and not out of the Post-Office Department. It is made in pursuance of a distinct law for sea-service. It has, I think, always heretofore been paid out of the Treasury, and I think it ought to be now.

Mr. SARGENT. Because that language occurs at the commencement of the section by the amendment just adopted, and we do not want to repeat it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then it will be still paid out of the Treasury?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, after line 6, to insert the following:

For official postage-stamps for the use of the Post-Office Department, $850,000.

Mr. SARGENT. I understood the amendment of the committee striking out this clause in lines 123 and 124 was disagreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT, (to Mr. WEST.) Then of course you do not want to insist on this latter amendment.

Mr. WEST. I should like to insist, and I should like the Senate to agree to it, for the reason that it would bring the whole subject within the jurisdiction of the committee of conference and enable us to come to an agreement on it. It being in both parts of the bill, the question is where shall we retain it.

Mr. SARGENT, (to Mr. WEST.) You do not want to pass it in a double form?

Mr. WEST. It is not material, and I will not insist on its retention.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to strike out sections 5 to 14 inclusive, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the respective compensations of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes shall be annual salaries, assigned in even hundreds of dollars, and payable in quarterly payments, to be ascertained and fixed by the Postmaster-General from their respective quarterly returns to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, or copies or duplicates thereof, for four quarters immediately preceding the adjustment or re-adjustment, by adding to an amount of the box rents of the office received or estimated not exceeding $1,200 when the boxes are supplied and owned by the postmaster, and two-thirds of the box rents and not to exceed $1,000 when the boxes are not supplied and owned by the postmaster, that at such offices the postmaster shall at least receive $700 per annum out of the box rents, if so much as that shall be collected; commissions on all other postal revenues of the office to an amount not exceeding $1,200, at the following rates, namely: on the first $100 per quarter, 60 per cent.; on all over $100 and not over $400 per quarter, 50 per cent.; and 30 per cent. on all revenues exceeding $400 per quarter, but the aggregate of the said commissions not to exceed $1,200; and at all offices where the total revenues exceed, respectively, $4,000 per annum, there shall be added to the compensation hereinbefore provided from box rents and commissions a percentage of the gross revenues at the following rates, namely: 1 per cent. on all sums over $4,000 and not exceeding $10,000, 9-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums over $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000; 8-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums over $20,000 and not exceeding $40,000; 6-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums over $40,000 and not exceeding $80,000; 5-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums over $80,000 and not exceeding $160,000; 4-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums over $160,000 and not exceeding $320,000; 3-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums over $320,000 and not exceeding $640,000; 2-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums over $640,000 and not exceeding $1,280,000; and 1-10 of 1 per cent. on all sums exceeding $1,280,000; and in order to ascertain the amount of the postal receipts of each office, the Postmaster-General may require postmasters to furnish duplicates of their quarterly returns to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department at such times and for such periods as he may deem necessary in each case: Provided, That at offices where the letter-carrier system is now, or may hereafter be, established, the box rents, in fixing the compensation of the respective postmasters at such offices, shall be estimated at not less than $1,000 per annum; but at all such offices they shall be estimated at an amount which, with the commissions and percentage hereby allowed, will make the salaries of the postmasters thereat not less than $2,500: And provided further, That the maximum salary and compensation of any postmaster under the provisions of this act shall not exceed the sum of $4,000, except in the city of New York, where the salary and compensation shall be the sum of $6,000, and no more.

SEC. 6. That the compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be the box rents collected at their offices; and commissions on other postal revenues of their offices at the following rates, namely: On the first $100, or less, per quarter, 60 per cent.; on all over $100, and not over $400, per quarter, 50 per cent.; and all over $400 per quarter, 30 per cent., the same to be ascertained and allowed by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department in the settlement of the quarterly accounts of such postmasters: Provided, That when the aggregate annual compensation, exclusive of commissions on money-order business, of any postmaster of this class shall amount to $1,000, the said Auditor shall report such fact to the Postmaster General in order that such postmaster may be assigned to his proper class, and a salary fixed as heretofore provided.

SEC. 7. That railroad companies furnishing cars or parts of cars for the exclusive accommodation of the United States mails and the agents in charge of said mails, for what is known as postal-car, route-agent, or baggage-car service, shall be paid at the following rates, to wit: When by an order of the Postmaster-General the mail-car is attached to trains or space set apart for through or express mails on trains run regularly during any quarter, on a schedule time, between terminal points, at a rate of speed not exceeding twenty-five miles per hour, a sum not exceeding five mills per linear foot of interior full-width car-space per mile run; attached to or set apart on trains run regularly during any quarter, on a schedule time, between terminal points, at a rate of speed exceeding twenty-five miles, a sum not exceeding six mills per linear foot of interior full-width car-space per mile run: Provided, That no railroad company transporting the United States mail shall, when all the requirements of the Postmaster-General, under the laws governing the transportation of the mail by railroad, are complied with, be paid a less rate than $25 per mile of road per annum. But the sum paid to any railroad company for such transportation shall not exceed $500 per mile for such service for any one year.

SEC. 8. That all mail-cars or parts of cars shall be heated, lighted, fitted up, and furnished in a suitable and acceptable manner by the railroad companies for the character of service for which said cars or parts of cars are required: And provided, That a mail-car shall be attached to, or part of a mail-car furnished on, any passenger train run, as the interests of the postal service may require and the Postmaster-General direct: Provided, however, That no railroad company shall be required or permitted to furnish car space for the transportation of the mails in route agents', baggage, or railway postal cars not actually required for that service, and no car or part of a car shall be loaded with United States mail beyond the maximum capacity of such car or part of a car, under the regulations of the railroad company by which such cars or parts of cars are furnished.

SEC. 9. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to adjust the space furnished by or required from each railroad company to the actual necessities of the postal service upon each railroad, in accordance with sections 7 and 8 of this act; and this adjustment shall be made during the last month of each quarter for the next succeeding quarter, and shall be certified to by the officer authorized by the Postmaster-General to make the adjustment.

SEC. 10. That railroad companies whose railroad was constructed in whole or in part by a land grant made by Congress, on the condition that the mails should be transported over their road at such price as Congress should by law direct, shall receive only 80 per cent. of the compensation authorized by the seventh section of this act.

SEC. 11. That section 4017 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4017. The Postmaster-General may employ such a number of special agents as the good of the service and the safety of the mail may require. Such agents shall be paid a salary at the rate of not more than $1,000 a year each; and they shall be allowed, on proper vouchers, for living and incidental expenses actually incurred while traveling and absent from their headquarters in the discharge of their official duties, not exceeding $5 a day: Provided, That in the employment of such special agents, the appropriation made in the first section of this act for mail depredations and special agents shall not be exceeded."

SEC. 12. That section 4019 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4019. The Postmaster-General may employ, when the service requires it, any officer of his Department as a special agent; and he may allow him therefor, out of the appropriation for mail depredations and special agents, not exceeding the amount actually expended by him as necessary traveling and living expenses while so employed, upon his approval of itemized vouchers for such expenses, which must be certified to by the officer, and accompanied with a statement of the service upon which he has been engaged."

SEC. 13. That section 4020 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4020. The Postmaster-General may appoint one special agent as superintendent of the railway postal service at a salary at the rate of $2,500 a year, and not to exceed six special agents as assistant superintendents of the railway postal service at a salary at the rate of $1,600 a year each; and the superintendent and assistant superintendents shall receive such additional allowances only as are provided for by section 4017, which allowances, together with their salaries, shall be paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of the mails; and the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department shall charge to the appropriation for the free-delivery system the salary and allowances made to one special agent who may be detailed for that service; and the salary and allowances made to not exceeding five special agents who may be detailed for employment in the money-order service shall be paid out of the proceeds of that service: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the temporary detail of any special agent in the employment of the Post-Office Department for special agent's duty in connection with any branch of the postal service in cases of emergency."

SEC. 14. That no post-office or service on any mail-route necessary for the public service, and required for the proper and efficient distribution of the mails, shall be discontinued.

Mr. WITHERS. Would it be in order to make a motion in addition to the amendments striking out these sections? My understanding was that the Committee on Appropriations agreed to refer these legislative sections to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I make the motion that these sections be stricken out and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, if that be in order.

Mr. WEST. I have no objection if the Senator from Virginia will make that proposition apply to all the legislative provisions to be stricken out.

Mr. WITHERS. My proposition would include all the legislative portions of the bill. It would also include sections 16 and 17.

Mr. HAMLIN. Section 15 in the original print, which will stand as section 5 of the bill, will not be referred?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Would not the effect of section 15 be to increase the cost of the stamped envelopes and stamped wrappers?

Mr. WEST. That is to be retained, the Senator will observe.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask if the effect of retaining that section will not be to increase the price of stamped envelopes, so that a person sending letters with stamped envelopes will be at greater expense than where he buys the stamp and attaches it himself; and will it not defeat entirely the sale of stamped envelopes?

Mr. WEST. I shall be ready to answer the Senator's proposition when we come to consider that section; but I will now ask the consent of the Senate that the motion of the Senator from Virginia be taken, which would facilitate business very much. The motion of the Senator from Virginia is to strike out all from section 5 to section 14 inclusive and refer those sections to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to strike out all from section 5 to section 14 inclusive, and refer the same to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The question is first upon striking out.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is upon referring the matter thus stricken out to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [15] 5, line 3, to insert before the word "cost" the word "average;" so as to make the section read:

No stamped envelopes or newspaper-wrappers shall be sold by the Post-Office Department at less (in addition to the legal postage) than the average cost, including all salaries, clerk hire, and other expenses connected therewith.

Mr. WEST. I shall be very glad to answer the question of the Senator from Delaware as to the increased cost of these stamped envelopes or newspaper-wrappers. There will be an increased cost, probably so small in special instances as not to be observable, but really in the aggregate amounting to a considerable sum. This provision was put on for the purpose of protecting the interests of envelope manufacturers throughout the country, they complaining—in the opinion of the committee with a great deal of propriety—that the transportation of the Post-Office Department throughout the country was made use of free of charge for the purpose or with the result of enabling the Post-Office Department to undersell the dealer in envelopes; that in no place in the United States can you buy stamped envelopes but at the post-office, and they are offered for less than the dealer across the way can offer an envelope with a stamp upon it. This proposition is to charge, in addition to the original cost of printing, the clerk hire in handling and the expense of transmitting. It increases the revenue of the Post-Office Department, exacts from the people a very small trifle, and at the same time does not encroach or infringe upon the private business of envelope manufacturers. It is evidently just, and I hope it will meet the approbation of the Senate as it has of the House.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that I ought to raise any objection to this matter. I was not in committee the moment when this proposition was considered, and I will not object to it, provided the committee were clear upon the point that this was a well-considered provision of law. I should like to ask my friend from Louisiana if the committee were decidedly of opinion that this section ought to be adopted. If there was debate and doubt upon the matter, I wish to express my opinion upon it.

Mr. WEST. There was none. The committee were clear on the subject; and if the Senator will recur to the debates in the House of Representatives on this subject, he will find that a very elaborate statement was made there by a member from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] The section was put on in the House by the unanimous concurrence of the House itself, and in committee it was considered thoroughly and concurred in.

Mr. SARGENT. It is very well known that the principal fraud inflicted upon the post-office revenue is in the use of stamps separate from envelopes, on account of the readiness with which defacing-ink is washed off. They have never been able to invent any kind of ink that would make permanent defacement, unless it contained acids, which could not be used on account of injury to the fingers of persons canceling the stamps. This fraud has been avoided in a very large degree by the use of stamps with envelopes. Directing an envelope is canceling the stamp, and it cannot be used a second time. If the effect of this section should be to increase very much the cost of these envelopes, of course persons would resort to envelopes bought of other persons, not of the Post-Office Department, and there will be no more stamped envelopes used. They will resort to the system of stamps, where I am told at least 25 per cent. of fraud is committed. If the committee, however, considered this matter well and in that view, aside from the claim which was made by the envelope manufacturers, I do not know that I ought to antagonize my own opinion to that of my committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out sections 16 and 17, as follows:

SEC. 16. That all mailable matter of the third class, referred to in sections 3878 and 3911 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, may weigh not exceeding four pounds for each package thereof; and postage shall be charged thereon at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof; that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be held to change or amend section 3879 of said Revised Statutes; and that all annual reports of universities, colleges, and other institutions, and annual catalogues, shall be deemed third-class matter.

SEC. 17. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that these sections be stricken out with a view to have them referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee striking out sections 16 and 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves the reference of these provisions to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make some observations on the bill itself. I was so much flattered by the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana, especially his compliment to me as a financial manager, that I almost feel regret in calling the attention of the Senator to the mistake into which he fell, which was very natural, because it is in regard to a matter that occurred two years ago. I think it is proper that I should call attention to the fact that I was right and he was wrong in the matter of recollection of what occurred two years ago when he said he followed me. The truth was I refused to follow him. I have before me now the debate upon the post-office appropriation bill. I was one of the committee on the part of the Senate to manage the matter. The House had reduced the postage on newspapers to one and a half cents per pound, much below even the present rate, and the committee of conference met. The Senator from Louisiana was the chairman and Mr. Ramsey, then Senator from Minnesota, and myself, the other conferees. We met, and the Senate conferees agreed to report fixing the rate at one and a half cents per pound. That was the rate, I believe, proposed by the House of Representatives. I refused to sign the report, so that my friend and I separated there.

Mr. WEST. The Senator is mistaken. He was not on that committee with me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the RECORD. I will read what I said.

Mr. WEST. Is my name to that report?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEST. Where? [Examining.] Certainly; but the Senator was not on that committee. He defeated that proposition in the Senate and then he was put on the next committee. He never served on that committee with me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the RECORD before me.

Mr. WEST. Where is it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Here it is.

Mr. WEST. I ask the Senator whether he ever served on the conference with me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly I did.

Mr. WEST. I ask the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SHERMAN. My dear sir, here is the RECORD. Of course you cannot deny it.

Mr. WEST. We shall see.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will give the Senator the book in a moment. Here is the report of the conference committee, and it is signed:

J. R. WEST,
ALEX. RAMSEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAS. N. TYNER,
S. S. MARSHALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WEST. Who was the other person?

Mr. SHERMAN. I was the other conferee. I rose and opposed the report, and it was defeated. Here is what I said:

Mr. SHERMAN. I regret very much that I was not able to agree to the report of the committee of conference on account of the very large reduction it makes in the rate of postage on newspapers. It is reduced by this bill to one-half the present rate. The present rate of postage on newspapers is 20 cents per annum on a weekly paper. These papers weigh about 2 ounces, so that 52 papers weighing 104 ounces are now carried through the mails at 20 cents, or a trifle over 3 cents a pound. This bill reduces the postage on newspapers to 1½ cents a pound, or $30 a ton, to be distributed all over the United States. In other words, it is a reduction in the rate of postage on newspapers to one-half. The postage on periodicals is by a somewhat different scale; the precise rate I am not able to state, but no doubt the Senator from Louisiana can tell.

Mr. WEST. Three cents.

Mr. SHERMAN. I mean the old rate on periodicals and large magazines.

Mr. WEST. The same, 3 cents.

Mr. SHERMAN. The proposition now is to fix the rate of postage at 1½ cents a pound on newspapers and at 3 cents a pound on periodicals. On both the reduction is about one-half. To reduce the rate of postage on newspapers at this time, when we are looking around for new sources of revenue, when our expenses are coming close to our receipts, seems to me a most unwise measure, improvident, and unjustifiable in every sense of the term. I cannot therefore consent to it.

In the amendment sent to the House the Senate proposed a rate of postage of 4 cents a pound on all newspapers and periodicals alike—

That was offered by me, and I suppose that was the reason I was put on the committee—which was perhaps a very slight advance on the present rate, but it was a uniform rate and therefore much preferable rate either to the House or the rate now in force.

The debate goes on between the Senator from Louisiana and myself, in which my honorable friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] came to my relief and opposed the report of the committee of conference very urgently. The Senator from Maine, after speaking at some length, says:

The same spirit which yields this now will yield it forever. That is my answer to all that. Nobody has suggested any necessity for it. It is just as easy to put the tax at three cents, where it was before, as it is to put it at one and a half cents. It is optional with Congress. Nothing on earth stands in the way of it.—Congressional Record, volume 2, part 6, Forty-third Congress, first session, page 5346 et seq., June 22, 1874.

After some debate the report of the conference committee was defeated, and here is the vote—yeas 19, nays 21; the Senator from Louisiana voting in the affirmative and I voting in the negative. Whereupon another committee of conference was appointed, and with great difficulty and by a struggle afterward we got the amount raised to two cents a pound. That was all we could get out of the House of Representatives. That is the whole history of it. So my friend in that case simply endeavored to reduce the rate of postage on an appropriation bill to one and a-half cents per pound, and the Senate refused, having previously adopted the rate of four cents a pound. The Senate defeated the conference report signed by the Senator from Louisiana. The bill was sent back to another committee, of which I was a member I believe, although I am not certain about that. The result of it was, however, that finally we got the House to raise the rate to two cents a pound, and that is only just one-half what it ought to be. The Senator was mistaken in his recollection, and I do not think that at all unnatural; and I was not very positive about what the RECORD would show until I sent for it.

Mr. WEST. The Senator has not shown here, and I am not certain that he can show, that he was on that committee at all. My recollection is that he was not. If he was, I may be excused for forgetting the circumstance, because if he was there the committee was composed in a very extraordinary manner of members of one political party entirely. I knew that I had the assistance of the then chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Senator from Minnesota, (Mr. Ramsey,) but I had no recollection of being allied with the Senator from Ohio, and I for the present decline to remember it.

But the Senator says I did not follow him but he refused to follow me. I was constrained to follow him, by the vote of the Senate, in what I considered a glaring mistake that it was led into by the very Senator himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. How follow me?

Mr. WEST. A glaring mistake by his rising in his seat and saying to the Senate that two or three millions of dollars could be saved to the public if his proposition was carried out.

Mr. SHERMAN. So it could.

Mr. WEST. His proposition was three cents a pound. That he signed and that he agreed to, and he said two or three million dollars could be saved. The Senate adopted two cents, and with what result? With less money now than we used to get at three cents when the matter was not prepaid. I propose to make it a cent and a half and have it prepaid. What is the result? Where are the two or three million dollars in search of which I did follow the Senator and was constrained to do it by the vote of the Senate? The miserable barren result of $1,000,000 from that service. That is all there is of it.

The Senator appealed over and over again to the Senate, and said that if his proposition was followed we could save $3,000,000, and we did follow his proposition as far as we could go, and we did not get one million, let alone save anything, with an absolute loss to the Government all the way through. Put down your price on the newspapers and let it be followed as always had been the reduction of postage, and you will get more newspapers, and express companies will not carry them. That is where we are at fault, and there is where we have been led to be at fault by a part of the proposition of the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. A proposition came to us to put the postage on newspapers at a cent and a half per pound and changing the law so as to require it to be prepaid. The Senator from Louisiana favored that proposition to fix the rate at a cent and a half per pound. I opposed it and demanded the rate of four cents a pound, which everybody can see now would have saved us millions of dollars. Two cents, which we finally got after a long struggle, yield us only $1,000,000. The Senate, however, surrendered. The House proposed a cent and a half a pound prepaid. I, after a long struggle, was able to get it up to two cents, and that was all. Even at two cents it yielded only a million dollars. My proposition was four cents, for which I contended, and the facts justify the position I then took against the reduction of the postage on newspapers. If we had fixed the rate at four cents a pound prepaid we should have been receiving about two and a half millions every year from that time to this of money arising from postage on newspapers, and that would have lessened by so much the deficiency we now are providing for.

I do not find fault with my honorable friend from Louisiana that he was in favor of the smaller postage. It was a question simply of recollection. Either of us might have been wrong without any fault; but I knew very well that I struggled hard one long night—for it was a night session when this debate occurred—when the conference report was defeated and a new committee appointed. I have forgotten now whether I was on it or not; but the result was that we got the House finally to bring it up to two cents a pound instead of four cents. The proposition of the honorable Senator was in favor of one and a half cents, and if he had carried the day—and he was defeated by only two votes—the result would have been that instead of a million we should have received but $750,000 postage.

Mr. WITHERS. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following amendment:

That on and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1877, all newspapers and periodical publications mailed from a known office of publication or news agency and addressed to regular subscribers or news agents, postage shall be charged at the following rates: On newspapers and periodical publications issued weekly and more frequently than once a week, four cents for each pound or fraction of a pound, and on those issued less frequently than once a week, five cents for each pound or fraction thereof.

That is in the precise language of the present law, except that instead of two cents it is put at four cents. I offer it rather for the purpose of giving the committee of conference jurisdiction of the subject than with any desire to press my own opinions.

Mr. WITHERS. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio not to embarrass the bill now and delay its passage by the introduction of a question which is certain to lead to very extended and protracted debate. As the residue of the sections which provide legislation on this bill have been referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, let this proposition go to the same committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing to accept that suggestion. I suppose the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will take the whole subject into consideration. I want something to give them jurisdiction. I accept with pleasure the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator propose the amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; I move that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with the other propositions.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RANSOM. I am generally paired on all subjects with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN,] and shall not vote on this bill as I do not know how he would vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I will vote to make a quorum, as I understand my vote is necessary for that purpose.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Caperton, Conkling, Cragin, Dennis, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, West, Withers, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, and Thurman—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Windom—36.

So the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF ENFORCEMENT ACTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 686, the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] providing for amending the laws touching civil rights and suffrage to conform to the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. THURMAN. What bill is that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the suffrage bill reported from our committee. It is a bill (S. No. 686) to amend the second, fourth, and fifth sections of the act entitled "An act to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1870, and as a substitute for sections 5506 and 5507 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not expect to take up any time of the Senate in the discussion of that bill. I have expressed my opinion in regard to similar bills previously, and I dare say have fatigued the Senate with the expression of my views; but really I do think that there are more important matters for the consideration of the Senate at this time than the passage of that bill, and I suggest therefore that it had as well go over until we dispose of matters that we are absolutely obliged to dispose of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.] If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. COOPER, (after having first voted in the negative.) It is suggested this is a political question. If so, I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] and withdraw my vote.

Mr. WITHERS. I desire to state that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, West, and Wright—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Thurman and Withers—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Windom—39.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is less than a quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. COOPER. Pending that I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SARGENT. I am compelled to leave in the morning to be gone for some days, and I have a telegram from another Senator asking that a certain motion be made in executive session. I want an executive session to make that motion to oblige him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot make such a motion now; there is no quorum.

Mr. THURMAN. There are but two motions in order; one is to send for absent Senators, and the other is to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has moved that the Senate adjourn. The question is on that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, and Withers—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Caperton, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Key, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, West, and Wright—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Windom—37.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question recurs on my motion to send for the absentees.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to suspend the further proceedings on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, which is to inform absent Senators. I do it because a quorum has appeared, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is my motion now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Nebraska is in order if a quorum is present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I understand it, the last vote did not disclose a quorum.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought it did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the last vote shows that a quorum is not present, and therefore the motion of the Senator from Nebraska is not now in order.

Mr. CONKLING. I misunderstood the state of the vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit further that it would not be in order, there being another question pending, and that is the motion to take up the bill referred to. Now I renew my motion that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the prompt attendance of absentees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont as just stated by him.

Mr. THURMAN. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KELLY, (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. BOGY. I move that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not in order. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Caperton, Cooper, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, and Withers—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Cockrell, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, West, and Wright—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Windom—37.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of members.

Mr. THURMAN. There is clearly a quorum now, several Senators have come in, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONKLING, (after having first voted in the negative.) Understanding that there is no quorum, I change my vote and vote yea.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Hitchcock, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, West, and Wright—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Logan, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Windom—37.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS, (at five o'clock and twenty-six minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, and Withers—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, West, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Windom—36.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Chair announces the vote, he will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum present; we can have nothing laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote shows a quorum. Upon the motion to adjourn the yeas are 20 and the nays 17; so the motion is agreed to, and the Senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 9, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MRS. D. C. SMITH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of the report of the Paymaster-General on Senate bill No. 548, for the relief of Mrs. D. C. Smith; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALFRED MULLEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the reports of the Adjutant-General and the Quartermaster-General on House bill No. 1953, for the relief of Alfred Mullen, late assistant surgeon United States Army.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LORD. I call up for consideration the Geneva award bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to raise the question of consideration on the Geneva award bill until we have a morning hour, so that the committees can report private bills and save this constant asking of unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule that the Geneva award bill comes up after the morning hour, and for a stronger reason than the one stated yesterday; for the reason that the special order on the Geneva award bill was fixed at two o'clock, which is after the morning hour.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the decision of the House upon the question of taking up the Geneva award bill. There was a bill reported three months ago to confirm certain surveys in New Mexico. It is a matter of great importance, and it ought to be disposed of. For three months that matter has been before the House. It is a matter in which the Government is interested, and not private individuals; it is not a scramble as to how $10,000,000 shall be divided among private citizens.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide that question when it arises.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order. When the House took a recess last evening I occupied the floor with a bill now upon the Clerk's desk, and I wish to know if that does not come over as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Kentucky, by the courtesy of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] was on the floor to make a motion or to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. No, sir; the gentleman from New York yielded to me for one hour, in which hour I was to call up for consideration a railroad bill, and I took the floor and yielded to several gentlemen to make motions. I sent the bill to the Clerk's desk to be read, and when it was about to be read some gentleman moved that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine the record before making a decision on that question. The Chair is under the impression that unanimous consent was required and that the gentleman was on the floor to make the motion if he could obtain unanimous consent. The regular order is now demanded, and the Chair will now proceed to call the committees for reports of a private nature. The morning hour commences at twenty-five minutes past twelve, and the call rests with the Committee of Claims.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TARBOX, from the Committee of Claims, made adverse reports upon the following petitions; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

The petition of John Graham, for re-imbursement of expenses while United States marshal of the eastern district of Louisiana;

The petition of G. W. Ford; and

The petition of William S. Mitchell.

CHARLES B. ROBERTS.

Mr. TARBOX also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1434) for the relief of Charles B. Roberts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES W. BUTTON.

Mr. TARBOX also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 433) to pay to Charles W. Button the cost of advertising property levied on by the collector of the United States internal revenue in the fifth district of the State of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

THOMAS T. BARTLETT.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1029) for the relief of Thomas T. Bartlett, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LOUISVILLE BAPTIST ORPHANS' HOME.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 259) for the benefit of the Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

E. R. SEARLE.

Mr. NEAL. The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the petition of A. R. Searle, asking for payment for services as riding page of the House of Representatives, have directed me to report for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Clerk of this House be, and is hereby, directed to pay to A. R. Searle the sum of $60 out of the contingent fund of said House, the same being the balance due the said A. R. Searle for services as riding page for the month of December, 1875.

Mr. NEAL. This claim was considered by the Committee of Accounts, but owing to the fact that the roll bore more names than was allowed by law, the Committee of Accounts refused to recommend the payment of the claim, and had it referred to the Committee of Claims, who have reported the resolution which has just been read.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAMSHIP CITY OF BRASHEAR.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 863) to change the name of the steamship City of Brashear to Lone Star.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask to have read a letter which will show the reasons for the passage of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, May 13, 1876.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Charles Morgan, of New York City, has recently built four large freighting-steamers, to run between New York and New Orleans in connection with his railroad and steamship line to different Texan ports. The first of said steamships was named after the city of Brashear, Louisiana, the western terminus of his railroad. Since the naming of said steamer the name of the city of Brashear has been changed. Mr. Morgan is now desirous of changing the name of said steamer, and as a compliment to the State of Texas he desires to call her the Lone Star. We should like your active co-operation, with the other delegates from your State and such friends as we may have in Congress, to introduce and pass a bill authorizing said change. We have written to our good friend Hon. RANDALL L. GIBSON, member of Congress from this city, asking him to give his personal attention to the matter. Will you be kind enough to confer with Mr. GIBSON upon the subject? The steamship Brashear was built during the year 1875, by the Harlan-Hollingsworth Company, at Wilmington, Delaware, for Mr. Charles Morgan, of the city of New York. Her registered number is 2972, and letter J. R. C. T. She is 1735 14 tons burden; hails from the city of New York; is registered at the custom-house in the city of New York in the name of Charles Morgan, sole owner, and resident of New York.

Your attention to this matter will oblige, yours, very truly,

CHAS. A. WHITNEY & CO.,
Agents for Charles Morgan.

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN,
Washington, D. C.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PIVOT-DRAW IN BRIDGES ACROSS THE OHIO.

Mr. REAGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2263) for the repeal of so much of the act of December 17, 1872, as provides for a pivot-draw in any bridge to be erected across the Ohio River between the cities of Covington, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The attention of the Chair was called to this matter on Friday before last, and the Chair would be bound to rule that this is a public bill and not in order under this call.

PLEASURE-YACHT LYDIA.

Mr. PIERCE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3678) to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Lydia to that of Sylph; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PIERCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAM-BARGE DOLPHIN.

Mr. PIERCE also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3200) to change the name of the steam-barge Dolphin, of Clayton, New York.

The bill authorizes the owner of the steam-barge Dolphin, of Clayton, New York, to change the name of said barge to Solon H. Johnson, and provides that from the passage of the act the said barge shall be entitled to register in that name.

The amendment was to strike out the words "owner of the steam-barge Dolphin" and insert the words "Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to change the name of;" also strike out the words "be authorized to change the name of said boat."

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PIERCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF DANIEL CARROLL.

Mr. HUNTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 2976 a bill (H. R. No. 3679) to ascertain the interest of the heirs or devisees of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, in certain real estate in the city of Washington, and to secure the conveyance of the same to the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the heirs or devisees of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, or persons lawfully claiming title under or through him or them, be, and they are hereby, authorized to institute proceedings in the Court of Claims, for the purpose of ascertaining and settling the rights of the said heirs in and to the parcel of ground situated in the city of Washington, and District of Columbia, bounded by Maryland avenue, Second street, B street, and Canal street, and now known as square west of square No. 576 in said city; and the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized and required to hear and determine the said matter, and if it shall find that said claimants have any interest legal or equitable in said property, then to render judgment in favor of such claimants for whatsoever amount their interest in said property may be reasonably worth, whether the estate of the claimants be legal or equitable, and for such sum as may be just and equitable: Provided, That in ascertaining the value of such interest the court shall exclude from the estimate the buildings erected on said property by the United States.

SEC. 2. That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay any judgment of the Court of Claims which may be rendered by virtue of this act, he shall require to be made and delivered to him, by the said claimants, a deed, good and sufficient in the law, conveying to the United States all the interest of said claimants in and to said parcel of ground.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I raise the point of order that this, being a private bill, must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. I understand it has been the uniform practice of this House that all bills involving any property or money of the United States must receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTON. This bill provides for the payment of no money, but merely for the reference of this claim to the Court of Claims. If that court shall make any award, then an appropriation must hereafter be made by Congress. The bill itself does not appropriate any money or dispose of any property of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It has been uniformly held that bills of this nature must receive their first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, in accordance with the uniform ruling, sustains the point of order. Under Rule 112, as amended within the last few years, all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, must be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HUNTON. I understand that rule; but it does not apply to this bill; and I beg to state why it does not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HUNTON. The evidence discloses the fact that these parties whom this bill is designed to relieve owned a piece of property in the city of Washington, which some years ago the superintendent of the Botanic Garden, under direction from some of the officers of the Government, took possession of and built upon. That ground is now, and for years has been, the property of the claimants in this bill. In order to avoid the necessity of bringing suit, (if suit could be brought against the Government,) and in order to avoid disturbing the public buildings which have been erected upon this ground, the bill merely provides that the Court of Claims shall adjudge what is the fair value of that property.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would rule in conformity with the precedents that wherever a bill contemplates a contingency whereby an interest of the United States in property may be divested, the bill should be first discussed in the Committee of the Whole. In sustaining the point of order the Chair follows the authorities, and adheres to the ordinary interpretation of the rule as given by previous occupants of the chair.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calender.

CHANGE OF NAME OF SCOW MAYFLOWER.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2752) to change the name of the scow Mayflower.

The bill was read. It grants authority to the owner of the scow Mayflower, of the port of Black River, Ohio, to change the name of the scow to that of Luella, by which name the scow shall hereafter be known.

The amendment was to strike out "scow" wherever it occurs and insert "schooner."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I suggest that the bill should be further amended so as to provide, in accordance with the precedents, that this proposed change of name shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and not by the owners of the schooner.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move then to amend by inserting instead of "the owner" the words "the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. SAMPSON AND BENJAMIN HENRICKS.

Mr. HURD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3609) for the relief of George W. Sampson and Benjamin Henricks, of Austin, Texas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM C. O'BRIEN.

Mr. EDEN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of William C. O'Brien; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. JAMES K. POLK.

Mr. EDEN. I am also directed by the Committee on War Claims to report back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 882) for the relief of Mrs. James K. Polk, of Nashville, Tennessee. I am unanimously instructed by the committee to ask that this bill be put on its passage now. It makes an appropriation of $1,500 to pay for ten mules which during the war were taken by the Federal Army in Mississippi for its use, and which belonged to Mrs. Polk, widow of the late President Polk.

Mr. HURLBUT. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of this bill. It is a graceful tribute to Mrs. Polk, who, remembering her connection with the nation, stood fast to the Union during all our troubles. As this capture of mules was within my command in Mississippi, upon a plantation which belonged to that lady, I happen to know personally that this claim is just and right. I hope that an exception will be made in this case, and that the bill will be passed at once.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill. The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,040 to Mrs. James K. Polk, widow of the late President of the United States, in full satisfaction of her claim for property supplied the United States Army in Yalabusha County, Mississippi.

The amendment, which was read, was to strike out $2,040 and insert $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

B. B. CONNOR & BROTHER.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3681) for the relief of B. B. Connor & Brother; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. LUCIE A. JAMESON.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1705) for the relief of Mrs. Lucie A. Jameson, of Memphis, Tennessee, with a favorable recommendation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM J. ALEXANDER.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of William J. Alexander, of Bloomington, Monroe County, Indiana, with amendments; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the bill and amendments, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. EMMA A. PORCH.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3682) for the relief of Mrs. Emma A. Porch, of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN F. REYNOLDS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds, with a favorable recommendation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BOUNDARIES IN SAN MATEO, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 1308) to authorize the correction of bounndaries of certain lands in San Mateo, California, and moved that the bill be laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUNTER. I desire in that case to submit from the Committee on Private Land Claims a report containing the views of the minority, and move that it be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GUNTER. I now ask that the bill, together with the majority and minority reports, be referred to the Committee of the Whole and placed on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the gentleman has that right.

The bill, with the adverse report and the views of the minority report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole and placed on the Private Calendar.

HEIRS OF JACOB CRAMER.

Mr. LEVY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3683) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer, lieutenant of the Pennsylvania Continental Line in the revolutionary war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND CLAIMS IN FLORIDA, ETC.

Mr. LEVY also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3684) respecting land claims in Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, established under act of June 22, 1860; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

F. B. CULVER.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3685) for the relief of F. B. Culver; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN PHILIPS.

Mr. SCALES, from the same committee, moved that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the claim of John Philips, and the same be laid on the table; which motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. BEVERIDGE.

Mr. SPARKS, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 3379) for the relief of Benjamin F. Beveridge; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN JACKSON.

Mr. SPARKS also, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 1276) for the relief of John Jackson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House and placed on the Private Calendar, and the majority report and views of the minority, submitted by Mr. LANE from the same committee, were ordered to be printed.

EDWARD C. HOWARD AND DANIEL HARNETT.

Mr. VAN VORHES, from the same committee, reported back the memorial of Edward C. Howard and Daniel Harnett, in relation to their being driven from their land in Brule City, Dakota, by the authorities of the United States, when the same was included in an Indian reservation, and moved its reference to the Committee on Private Land Claims; which motion was agreed to.

MARIANO TRISARRO.

Mr. TUFTS, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the depredation claim of Mariano Trisarro; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

JOSÉ MARIA GONZALES.

Mr. TUFTS also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the claim of José Maria Gonzales; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

M. LADD AND J. L. WILLIAMS.

Mr. MORGAN, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3686) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the claims of Moses Ladd and John L. Williams, half-blood Menomonee Indians, and the Secretary of the Treasury to pay amount due; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

S. A. SHEPPERD.

Mr. MORGAN also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2780) for the relief of S. A. Shepperd; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

A. D. FISHER.

Mr. MORGAN also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1023) for the relief of A. D. Fisher; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

EASTERN BAND OF NORTH CAROLINA CHEROKEES.

Mr. MORGAN also, from the same committee, reported back, as a substitute for House bills No. 3358 and No. 3361, a bill (H. R. No. 3687) to authorize the eastern band of North Carolina Cherokees to institute suits to provide for the purchase of lands and to have a final settlement, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the substitute I have reported be put upon its passage. The purpose of this bill is simply to enable the eastern band of Cherokee Indians to bring a suit against the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman goes on to speak of the merits of the bill I raise the question of order that it involves an appropriation of money, and ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORGAN. I will refer to that before I get through. There is no appropriation of money provided for by the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think differently from the reading of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. It provides that $10,000 which may be expended in the payment of costs shall come out of the funds of the Indians. There is no provision for the appropriation of one cent of money.

I was about to say that a controversy had arisen between the eastern band of Cherokee Indians, who live in North Carolina, and the Cherokee Nation west of the Mississippi, in regard to the right of the North Carolina Indians to participate in the funds of the nation. The matter has been repeatedly before the Department, and generally there has been adverse action upon it. Any bill providing for the payment of that fund has never, I believe, been reported upon favorably in Congress; but in one instance, I think, a bill of that character did meet the approbation of the Department.

This bill does not provide, nor does it attempt to provide, for the distribution of a part of this fund to the Cherokee Indians of North Carolina. It merely provides for the investigation of the controversy in a proper court, and clothes the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to determine that matter. The committee considered that this controversy should have the deliberate consideration of a court rather than that it should be acted upon by Congress. The bill is carefully drawn. There is a provision in regard to the costs of the suit and the manner in which those costs shall be paid. It provides that they shall be paid out of the funds belonging to the eastern band of Cherokee Indians, who are the claimants in the suit; but that not exceeding $10,000 shall be expended as costs. It also provides that an attorney shall be employed and the amount of fees shall be determined by the Court of Claims. This bill meets the approbation of the Department and of the parties interested, and has the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. From what source are the costs of the suit to be paid? What is the idea of the committee as to that?

Mr. MORGAN. The idea of the committee is that the costs of the suit, the incidental costs of the suit outside of attorneys' fees, shall be paid out of the funds of the eastern band of Cherokees.

Mr. BLOUNT. Where do the attorneys' fees come from?

Mr. MORGAN. It is provided they shall be paid out of the amount recovered in the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. If any shall be recovered?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir. The attorneys' fees are to be fixed by the Court of Claims, and only such fees shall be paid as are allowed by the court.

The bill merely settles the controversy between these two tribes, which has been a matter of great annoyance and a source of trouble and demoralization. For the best interests of the Indians it should be settled. That is all I have to say in regard to the bill. I move the previous question.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I think the point of order is not well taken, because the bill does not propose to appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States; it proposes to appropriate $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of the funds held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the Indians, and I think therefore that the point of order is not well taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule that this is a re-appropriation, the United States being trustee, and there being no necessity for this bill unless a re-appropriation is necessary. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and I ask that it be made a special order for a week from to-day after the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. Would it then take the place of other bills that would otherwise have preference?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not take the place of an appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. One week from to-day is private-bill day and, I think, objection day.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object to making the bill a special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the morning hour has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask, then, that the bill be made a special order one week from to-morrow instead of one week from to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the committees shall be continued until all the committees have been called.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the regular order of business.

EVIDENCE IN PACIFIC RAILROAD INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. HUNTON. I call up the motion made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted by the House authorizing the printing of the evidence taken by the Committee on the Judiciary under two resolutions for investigating matters relating to the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion in the absence of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

Mr. HUNTON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table

Mr. PAGE. It was understood by the Chair yesterday and by the House that the gentleman from Maine should have a right to be recognized on the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Maine stated that the rule was that any gentlemen could call up the motion to reconsider after yesterday.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Maine stated very distinctly to the House that this motion could be called up after yesterday by any gentleman, and the Chair stated that he would recognize the gentleman from Maine to call up the motion on the first opportunity after the Geneva award bill was disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would certainly have recognized the gentleman from Maine if he had been here to call up the motion.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from Virginia not to press the motion until the gentleman from Maine can be here.

Mr. BLAINE, (entering the Hall.) I am here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the motion to reconsider offered by the gentleman from Maine; and moves to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. Do you think that in accordance with the understanding had on this floor yesterday? I put that question to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any understanding with the Chair is stated in the public RECORD; whatever it was, the Chair will abide by it.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Chair gave me the assurance that I should have the floor on this question.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair has just said that if the gentleman from Maine had been present he would have recognized him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would very gladly have recognized him. For all the Chair knows this matter of printing may be important.

Mr. BLAINE. It is very important; but I want the whole of it printed. I have not looked at what the RECORD records; I hope the Chair will.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to a point of order. This is a day set apart for the consideration of private business.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well; let the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his motion.

Mr. BUCKNER. I am not talking about the gentleman from Virginia or the gentleman from Maine either; I am insisting upon the enforcement of the rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have gentlemen take their seats. We may as well be quiet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will take their seats. The RECORD shows the following; but before reading it the Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine and to the House that this matter comes up by no motion of the Chair.

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair does not usually make motions, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No intimation of that kind can be made against the present occupant of the Chair.

The RECORD reads as follows:

If I am deprived of that right by the ruling of the Chair or by any other cause, then any other gentleman can call it up and I do not have the parliamentary connection with it to which I am entitled.

Mr. GARFIELD. After to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. That was not a question, as the Chair read it, but an affirmative statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, after to-day; but if I am deprived of that right the motion to reconsider goes into the hands of any gentleman whom the Chair may recognize who can call up the motion and move to lay it upon the table.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Chair accept a suggestion and allow the whole of it to be read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After the ruling of the Chair, the RECORD reads as follows:

Mr. BLAINE. Then I understand the Chair to rule that I lose my control over the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No, sir; the Chair has ruled no such thing. The Chair rules that for the present the Geneva award bill is before the House. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] the moment he rises on the floor when there is no other matter properly pending before the House.

How could the Chair rule otherwise?

Mr. BLAINE. I stated yesterday——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] had risen at any time after the morning hour to-day for the purpose of calling up his motion to reconsider, the Chair would have recognized him.

Mr. BLAINE. I stated yesterday that during the first two days after the order to print was made and the motion to reconsider entered the universal rule and courtesy of the House gave the floor to the person who entered the motion to reconsider. That was the reason why I was somewhat strenuous in insisting upon calling up the motion on yesterday, which was the last day under that rule that the matter remained within my control. I then interrogated the Chair to know whether I would lose my control of the motion to reconsider, should it pass over yesterday on account of my failure to obtain the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair replied as has been read from the RECORD.

Mr. BLAINE. I now understand that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] proposes to come in and call up my motion to reconsider and move to lay it upon the table, so as to prevent me from having the opportunity to move to have included in the testimony of the committee to be printed the Caldwell telegram and the proceedings before the Committee on the Judiciary day before yesterday, in which there was some testimony not under oath, but still as valuable as if it were given by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HUNTON. I would inquire of the Chair if this matter is debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not debatable, but the Chair is always very glad to hear gentlemen upon points of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] decline to withdraw his motion to lay on the table my motion to reconsider?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. And does he decline to allow me an opportunity to move an amendment to the resolution directing the printing of the testimony?

Mr. HUNTON. I stated to you on a former occasion what I was willing to do, and you declined to accept it.

Mr. BLAINE. What was it?

Mr. HUNTON. The RECORD will show.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not remember what the gentleman refers to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in addition, what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] very likely knows better than any other member of the House, that there is a rule specially applicable to this matter, and the Chair has no inclination to break the rule, which is this:

When a motion has been once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof on the same or succeeding day; and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions, except a motion to adjourn, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House; and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration.

Mr. BLAINE. That is just what I called the attention of the Chair to yesterday, and why I insisted on yesterday that I should have the opportunity to call up my motion to reconsider. And I received the assurance of the Chair, as I thought, with the assent of the House, that I should not be deprived by anything that took place yesterday of the opportunity to call up my motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only assurance given by the Chair is that recorded in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. I was not present on yesterday, and therefore I do not know what agreement was made. But I would like to remind the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] that by entering his motion to reconsider the other day he took advantage of the omission of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to make the usual motion to reconsider and table.

Mr. HUNTON. I think you are wrong about that.

Mr. BLAINE. How did I take advantage of the gentleman from Virginia? I went to the Clerk and asked him if the motion to reconsider had been made and tabled, and he told me it had not been.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that, exactly.

Mr. BLAINE. Then what advantage did I take of the gentleman?

Mr. RANDALL. It took from him, by your quick knowledge of the rules, after his omission to make the usual motion, an advantage. I admit that you could do it.

Mr. BLAINE. Was that any more advantage than——

Mr. RANDALL. Allow me one moment. Having taken that advantage of the omission of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] I submit that the gentleman from Virginia was entirely within the practices of the House, and entirely within the rules of due courtesy, in also taking advatage to-day of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] in moving to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman is talking about taking any advantage——

Mr. RANDALL. I am not through yet. Now, as to the telegram, I insist that the gentleman from Virginia—I was not here on Monday either—but I understood that the gentleman from Virginia was willing that the telegram should go in and be of record for what it was worth.

Mr. BLAINE. It could not go for any more.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not speaking of that at all. I do not understand that the gentleman from Virginia objects that the telegram should go in with the testimony.

Mr. BLAINE. But I call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to the fact that neither the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary nor the chairman of the subcommittee on the judiciary has ever yet intimated to this House or to me what they proposed to do with regard to that telegram.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman ask this House now that that telegram shall be embraced in the testimony.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; I am after that very thing; and I want the official telegram. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] after keeping it in his pocket for five days and then for three days longer——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BLAINE. As I understand, gave it to the Associated Press; but he has never given it to the House, never.

Mr. GLOVER. I call the gentleman from Maine to order. I say that he is violating the rules of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well; I am sorry that the rules are not observed by the other side of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine and other members will be seated. The gentleman from Maine was speaking out of order after the regular order was called, as no one knows better than himself.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it proper that the record should bear the utterances of a member, delivered out of order as declared by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that there is no rule upon that subject. The old custom was—and there was once a rule to that effect—that such utterances should be excluded from the official report. The Chair is not aware that such a rule is now in existence. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Maine that, while he gave the House the assurance, as reported in the RECORD, that he would recognize the gentleman from Maine to call up this motion, he did not, nor could he, preclude thereby any other member from calling up the motion at the proper time. How could the Chair do otherwise? How could the Chair take the gentleman from Virginia off the floor?

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Virginia could do otherwise very easily.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair should not have any imputation cast upon him by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HUNTON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I know that; but I want to make a motion which I think the Chair will entertain.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I would like to make an explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the point of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I raise the question of consideration on this business. I do not believe that the majority will cut off the gentleman from Maine from a hearing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that that point comes too late.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How so?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because the motion to lay on the table is pending.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Virginia called up the motion, and moved to lay it on the table; but——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And it is now pending.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But it is in order, according to the Digest, page 85, to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table has been pending, and the regular order is called for.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I would like to say one word in explanation of what occurred yesterday. The gentleman from Maine then insisted on calling up his motion to reconsider, and one of the reasons which he urged why he should have that right was that if it were not allowed him at that time he would lose the control of the motion. He then from his place on this floor gave it as his opinion that if he were not allowed the right to call it up then he would lose his right to the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair assured me otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not give the gentleman any such assurance and the RECORD does not show it.

Mr. SOUTHARD. My point is that the gentleman, not having the opportunity at that time to call up his motion, has, by his own admission, lost the right to the floor, and has no ground for claiming it to-day.

Many MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. It will be very brief. Yesterday I understood the Chair to rule the gentleman from Maine out of order in attempting to call up his motion, because under the rules of the House a special order was pending. To-day, under a like rule of the House, only private business is in order. Therefore, the point I wish to make is substantially that made by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] that, under the rules of the House and in accordance with the ruling of the Speaker yesterday, it is not in order for any gentleman to call up this matter of general business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will overrule that point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. On what ground?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not bound to give his reasons.

Mr. BLAINE. I never heard the Chair refuse to give the reasons for his ruling.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order now.

Mr. BLAINE. Is it out of order to ask the Chair to state the reasons for his rulings?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has no right to make a colloquy with the Chair in this way; and he knows it very well.

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair does not seem disposed to have any colloquy.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HUNTON to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. GARFIELD called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 23, not voting 146; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hooker, House, Hunton, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, Lynde, L. A. Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Parsons, John F. Philips, Piper, Pompleton, Powell, Randall, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stone, Tarbox, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Ward, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—121.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, William H. Baker, Bell, Campbell, Chittenden, Cutler, Durand, Hardenbergh, Haymond, Hill, Hopkins, Hurd, Kehr, Le Moyne, McFarland, O'Brien, Potter, John Reilly, Savage, William E. Smith, Walsh, Whitehouse, and Willis—23.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Conger, Cowan, Crapo, Croonse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Eames, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Goodin, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kimball, King, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Money, Monroe, Morgan, Mutchler, Nash, New, Norton, Odell, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, James B. Reilly, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Sayler, Schumaker, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stowell, Swann, Teese, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiting, Wike, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—146.

No quorum voted.

During the vote,

Mr. BEEBE stated that he was paired with his colleague Mr. DAVY, who, if present, would vote against the proposition, while he would vote for it.

Mr. DURAND stated that his colleagues, Mr. CONGER and Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, were absent by order of the House.

Mr. DOUGLAS stated that he was paired with Mr. MACDOUGALL, who, if present, he presumed would vote "no," while he himself would vote "ay."

Mr. MORGAN said: I am paired with Mr. PLATT, of New York, on all political questions during his absence. If he were present I would vote "ay," while he would not vote, I presume.

Mr VAN VORHES stated that his colleague, Mr. VANCE, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It is in reference to the vote that is now being taken.

Mr. PAGE. Wait until the vote is announced.

Mr. SPRINGER. It pertains to the announcement of the vote.

Mr. BLAINE. How can you make a parliamentary inquiry about the announcement of a vote?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will know when I make it.

Mr. BLAINE. It is not in order. I object to it. There is nothing in order but the announcement of the vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. The point of order is in order.

Mr. BLAINE. The announcement of the vote is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman mistakes his position on this floor. He is not now in the chair. The Speaker is in the chair, and I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is customary here, and was often practiced while the gentleman from Maine was Speaker, to address to the Chair parliamentary inquiries.

Mr. BLAINE. During the roll-call? Never!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll-call has been completed.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the vote should be announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine knows it is not proper, and under the rules hardly decent, to confer with the Chair in that peculiar style.

Mr. BLAINE. I know very well—[the Speaker pro tempore at the same time beating with his gavel]—I know very well this is done to gain time. The vote should be announced. There is no quorum, and this is to gain time and get a quorum. I demand the vote be announced.

Mr. SPRINGER. I deny the right of the gentleman from Maine to impugn my motives.

Mr. BLAINE. The clerks have prepared the vote, and I demand it be announced. The Chair will announce it when it is handed to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He cannot announce it before it is handed to him.

Mr. BLAINE. The Clerk has it ready. I demand that the vote be announced.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BLAINE. I demand that the vote be announced.

[The Speaker pro tempore during these remarks kept beating with his gavel.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand that the gentleman from Maine take his seat and be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Maine does not preserve order, and take his seat, the Chair will call, under the rules, the help of the officers of the House to enforce order. [Cries on the democratic side of "That is it!" "That is it!" and applause.]

The gentleman from Maine, and every member of the House, will be seated.

Mr. BLAINE. I will be seated with pleasure when the rest are seated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine said the Chair should have announced the vote before. The Chair had not the vote in his hand at the time the imputation was made. It was intended to go out to the country as an imputation of unfairness upon the part of the Chair. The Chair will now proceed to announce in a proper and formal way the vote on this question, and all the statements to the contrary are positively and infamously false.

Mr. BLAINE. That is not very parliamentary language on the part of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the yeas are 121 and the nays are 23.

Mr. PAGE. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the vote just taken no quorum has appeared.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.] The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. PAGE. Is anything in order except a motion to adjourn, or a motion for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands his business. A quorum not having appeared on the last vote there are two things in order; a motion for a call of the House, or a motion to adjourn. Non constat that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] may not make the one or the other of these motions.

Mr. PAGE. I have just made one of them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman from California for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have risen to a question of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Nothing is in order but a motion to adjourn or for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine is not the Speaker of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. I am a member of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The parliamentary inquiry I wish to put, if the gentleman from Maine will allow me, is this: Though a quorum has not appeared on the roll-call, several gentlemen have risen in the House and shown their presence by stating that they were paired with other gentlemen. I may mention the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] as one; and there are several other gentlemen who have announced pairs. By making these announcements these gentlemen have shown their presence in this House.

Mr. BLAINE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide one question of order at a time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] was stating a point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. My parliamentary inquiry is this: Will the Chair take cognizance of the presence of those gentlemen who by rising and announcing pairs have shown that they are here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois is a very pertinent and proper one. In answer to the gentleman the Chair will state that in deciding as to the presence of a quorum he cannot go outside of the record of the roll-call.

Mr. BLAINE. Now for the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is one of the motions which it is alone proper to make. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois to make the one or the other.

Mr. PAGE. And now I move that the House adjourn, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE. I rise to a point of order. I desire to have read from the Digest, as exhibiting the point of order I make, the clause I have marked which is inclosed in brackets.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is not in order on a private-bill day to call up and consider a motion to reconsider a vote on a public bill, if objected to, except after a postponement by a majority vote of the private business.

Mr. BLAINE. The Chair overruled that point when made before. I asked him to give reasons for doing so and he declined. He could not because the letter of the rule is very express that this motion is not in order at all to-day. It is private-bill day and this is a public measure. It is not here properly. It is here in defiance of the rule, by a ruling of the Chair for which he would give no reason and which he made right in the teeth of the letter of the rule. That is my point. [Applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to speak to this point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the reconsideration of a vote on a "public bill" that is referred to in the rule which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] has caused to be read by the Clerk. The measure under consideration is not a public bill. It is a resolution of a private nature, in the interest of the nomination of the gentleman from Maine for President of the United States, [applause and hisses,] and properly comes in on private-bill day.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] raised a point of order and had a rule read which in the opinion of the Chair is not applicable at this present stage of the business. It is sufficient for the Chair to say that even the present occupant of the Chair may make rulings without giving reasons for them; otherwise the whole business of the House might be taken up in hearing points of order.

Mr. BLAINE. I have never seen——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Chair calls the gentleman from Maine to order now he gives no reason for it, for it is apparent that he is out of order in interrupting the Chair. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Chair decline to hear a statement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman knows the rules very well, and he knows that he cannot interrupt the Chair while making a ruling, but he can appeal from the decision of the Chair when made.

Mr. PAGE. There is a motion pending to adjourn on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] intercepted the motion to adjourn by a point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Chair will hear me on the point of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. You have spoken.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not spoken to it.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want simply to know whether this is the American Congress——

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I want to know.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Or a school in which we are merely pupils of the schoolmaster from Maine?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BLAINE. It is the most surprising American Congress that ever assembled. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON.]

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent to have read a resolution which I propose to offer when it shall be in order.

Mr. PAGE. I have made a motion to adjourn upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the business of the Chair in this regard. Pending the motion to adjourn, the gentleman rises to ask unanimous consent to have a resolution read. Is there objection to hearing it?

Mr. PAGE. I do not object to hearing the resolution read, but I have the floor on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. The reading of the resolution will not deprive the gentleman of any of his rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that, and the gentleman from California must understand that the Chair does not intend to intercept his motion.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask to have read the resolution, and I repeat that I propose to offer it as soon as it is in order.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That all the evidence taken by the Judiciary Committee under the authority of the resolutions of Mr. LUTTRELL and Mr. TARBOX be printed, and that the dispatch signed Josiah Caldwell be also printed as a part of the record in the case; and said committee shall examine any witnesses that may be called who may have heard said Caldwell make the same or contradictory statements from those contained in said dispatch; and the evidence of such witnesses shall also be printed with the other evidence taken by said committee.

Mr. HOAR. I object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 4, nays 151, not voting 134; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, McDill, Pratt, and Sampson—4.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, Hopkins, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, L. A. Mackey, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, O'Brien, Parsons, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Poppleton, Powell, Rainey, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stenger, Stone, Tarbox, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Erastus Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, James Wilson, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—151.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Conger, Cowan, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Goodin, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hoskins, House, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kimball, King, Lap-ham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lord, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, Metcalfe, Miller, Money, Monroe, Morgan, Mutchler, Nash, New, Norton, Odell, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, John F. Philips, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Purman, James B. Reilly, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Stowell, Swann, Teese, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alphens S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—134.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The Clerk informs the Chair that he cannot hear the responses of members. The Chair will direct to be read the rule in relation to the presence of persons on the floor of the House. The Chair is determined to break up this system of claquerism in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

No person, except members of the Senate, their secretary, heads of Departments, the President's private secretary, foreign ministers, the governor for the time being of any State, Senators and Representatives elect, judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the Court of Claims, and such persons as have by name received the thanks of Congress, shall be admitted within the Hall of the House of Representatives or any of the rooms upon the same floor or opening into the same: Provided, That ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim pending before Congress, and shall so register themselves, may also be admitted within the Hall of the House; and no person except those herein specified shall at any time be admitted to the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will enforce this rule. Every person not included within this rule will leave the Hall, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will assist the Doorkeeper in enforcing the rule. Any disorder in the galleries will result in the clearing of the galleries also. The roll-call will be suspended for the enforcement of this rule.

After order was restored, the Clerk resumed and concluded the calling of the roll.

Mr. DURAND. I desire to announce that my colleagues, Mr. CONGER and General WILLIAMS, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on laying on the table the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken; and upon a viva voce vote the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. That call is too late.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not. I desire, however, to request that gentlemen will allow to be offered and voted upon the amendment that was talked of yesterday between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON.] That will settle this matter in a few minutes. I understood the gentleman from Virginia to express his willingness to allow that amendment to be offered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] accept as an amendment the resolution read for information offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON?]

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no authority to accept any amendment. The amendment suggested yesterday to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] and to which he said he had no sort of objection, and only some other gentleman objected to it—I think everybody would feel that it would be good faith and fairness all round to allow that amendment to be voted on. I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] that he allow that amendment to be voted upon in the very language proposed yesterday. I will read from the RECORD, if I may be allowed to do so, what occurred on yesterday in regard to that:

Mr. HUNTON. I will detain the House but a minute. I desire to say that we have no sort of objection to publishing the dispatch to which allusion has been made for what it is worth and the proceedings of the committee yesterday morning.

Mr. BLAINE. Then just insert in the resolution "including the proceedings before the committee and the dispatch of Josiah Caldwell."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Virginia accedes to the proposition. Who is there to object?

Whereupon my colleague [Mr. SOUTHARD] objected. Now that arrangement which was suggested by the gentleman from Maine, and which it was understood was acceded to by the gentleman from Virginia, is all that is asked for on this side of the House, as I understand. If that proposition is caried out, just as suggested and accepted, there need be no delay at all. I ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] if he will allow that amendment to be voted on? That is all we desire.

Mr. HUNTON. When that proceeding took place in the House on yesterday, I stated to the House, and I stated the same to the House again this morning, that I had no sort of objection to publishing that telegram for what it was worth. But I did not agree to accept it as an amendment to my resolution, and I do not now accept it. The resolution offered by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON,] it seems to me is a proper resolution, and one that meets the whole case.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now may I ask the gentleman this? He has stated repeatedly—and nobody on this side of the House has contradicted his views—that the telegram asked to be published is not evidence. That is perfectly correct. It is not asked to be published as evidence, but it is asked that it be published in connection with the proceedings of the committee as such.

Now, as I understand the new proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON] it is this: that this telegram shall not only be published as suggested, but that there may be proceedings in the committee to take hearsay testimony, which, as I understand, the committee have almost if not quite unanimously decided they will not take.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is this telegram but hearsay testimony?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not testimony at all; it is not claimed to be testimony.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why publish it then?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is part of the res gestæ, part of the doings of the committee, and not evidence.

Mr. SPRINGER. It must be evidence or something else.

Mr. GARFIELD. You may call it what you please; we do not call it evidence. I will simply say to my friends on the other side that to pass an order of the House now authorizing and directing the committee to receive hearsay evidence, which the committee do not now receive, would be manifestly unfair and unjust, and as a mode of proceedings before the committee would result also in delay.

Mr. MORRISON. A single word.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON.]

Mr. MORRISON. A single word. I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] desires the publication of this dispatch for what it is worth.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. MORRISON. Is it not proper for this committee to show that it is worth nothing? That is the object of the resolution which I had read; that is all it proposes to do. You want to take this telegram for what it is worth. Then you must think that in some sense it answers the purpose of evidence; that it is in some way in favor of the gentleman from Maine. To the extent that it is true he ought to have the benefit of it. If it is not true he ought to get no benefit from it. Then why not allow the committee to take evidence to show that it has no 'ruth in it? That is the whole object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I agree entirely in what the gentleman says that it is perfectly and absolutely right to allow the committee to prove, if they can, that the dispatch is worth nothing. It is not proposed to be offered as evidence; but if they can show that it is spurious, they ought to be enabled to show it; if they can show that it is false, they ought to have power to do so. I agree with the gentleman on that point. All I ask is that we shall not make a rule under which they shall undertake to show that it is false by a violation of all the known rules of evidence, namely, that by mere secondary and hearsay evidence they shall undertake to prove something about this dispatch. Let them prove all they can, but prove it according to the rules of evidence which the committee themselves have adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. The known rules of evidence would exclude the cable.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the position of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to be this: that Mr. Caldwell can give evidence without being under oath, and that he cannot be contradicted by witnesses under oath.

Mr. GARFIELD. Nobody has claimed that this was evidence.

Mr. McMAHON. O, yes; it is claimed to be evidence, and the whole country is called to witness that we have excluded this evidence.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the dispatch is not evidence, on what ground do gentlemen ask to put it in the record?

Mr. GARFIELD. On the same ground that the gentleman's committee put in the cable dispatch in regard to General Schenck. We do not call such a thing evidence, but you did.

Mr. SPRINGER. General Schenck was heard.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; when he was on a sick-bed four hundred miles away from here.

Mr. RANDALL. He was notified of the telegram, and he made his answer.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for, which is the question whether the House will order the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 90, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hooker, House, Hunton, Jenks, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, Lynde, L. A. Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Parsons, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Powell, Randall, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Siemons, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stenger, Stone, Tarbox, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Ward, Erastus Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—127.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bell, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Crapo, Cutler, Danford, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Egbert, Evans, Foster, Garfield, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Hendee, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hopkins, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kimball, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynch, Magoon, McDill, McFarland, Meade, Monroe, Nash, Norton, O'Brien, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, John Reilly, Robinson, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Strait, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walsh, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, Willis, James Wilson, and Woodworth—90.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. George A. Bagley, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Blaine, Bliss, Burleigh, Conger, Cowan, Cox, Crounse, Darrall, Davy, Douglas, Ely, Faulkner, Fort, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Gibson, Goodin, Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Henderson, Holman, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kehr, King, Edmund W. M. Mackey, MacDougall, McCrary, Miller, Money, Morgan, Mutchler, New, Odell, Payne, Platt, Purman, James B. Reilly, William M. Robbins, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Seelye, Stevenson, Stowell, Swann, Teese, Martin I. Townsend, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodburn—72.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the vote,

Mr. DOUGLAS stated that he was paired with Mr. MACDOUGALL, who, if present, would vote "no," while he would vote "ay."

Mr. WILLARD stated that his colleague, Mr. HUBBELL, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. VAN VORHES stated that his colleague, Mr. VANCE, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. BRADLEY stated that his colleague, Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. DURAND stated that his colleagues, Mr. CONGER and Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, were absent by leave of the House.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution of which I gave notice.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all the evidence taken by the Judiciary Committee under the authority of the resolutions of Mr. LUTTRELL and Mr. TARBOX be printed; and that the dispatch signed Josiah Caldwell be also printed as a part of the record in the case; and said committee shall examine any witnesses that may be called, who may have heard said Caldwell make the same or contradictory statements from those contained in said dispatch; and the evidence of such witnesses shall also be printed with the other evidence taken by said committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HURLBUT. Yes; I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. LORD. I move to go on with the Geneva award bill.

Mr. HOAR. This is not objection day, and why not go on with the consideration of the Geneva award bill?

Mr. LORD. I desire that the Geneva award bill shall hold its place, and therefore move its consideration be proceeded with.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the gentleman from New York merely moves to take up the Geneva award bill in order that it may hold its place, as he does not care to antagonize the Private Calendar. My inquiry is whether if we go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, to-morrow the Geneva award bill will not come up with the same rights that it now has?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will so rule, but to make the matter sure, the question of consideration having been raised, the Chair will put it to the House. If there be no objection, the Geneva award bill will go over until to-morrow with all the rights it now has.

Mr. LORD. That is all I ask.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I now move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, in order to accommodate gentlemen on the other side who wish to attend the Cincinnati convention, I ask that during Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week no business or proposition be considered by the House of a political character or nature.

Mr. BUCKNER. What is that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois suggests that Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week be devoted to business not of a political character.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any such business possible?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should like to inquire if that includes the bill on the question of resumption?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object to the postponement of the public business for any political convention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion is not before the House.

HENRY THIERMAN AND WHITE FROST.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3485) for the relief of Henry Thierman and White Frost, and it be recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. KASSON. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr BLACKBURN in the chair.) That is the understanding; but under the rule any proposition recommitted by unanimous consent cannot be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

LIEUTENANT JAMES B. SINCLAIR.

Mr. BANNING. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 1071) for the relief of Lieutenant James B. Sinclair, United States Army, with the recommendation that it be concurred in. It is a unanimous report from that committee, and I hope there will be no objection to taking up the amendment and acting upon it at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend line 2 by striking out the word "directed" and inserting in lieu thereof "authorized."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BANK RECEIVERS.

Mr. COX. I rise to a privileged question. I have a report of a conference committee that ought to be disposed of this evening. It is in relation to bank receivers, and will not occupy any time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference appointed by the two Houses on House bill No. 2411, authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes, after full and free conference, have agreed upon the following report, to wit:

That the House recede from its disagreement to all the Senate amendments except No. 11, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment No. 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Amend the proviso so it will read:

Provided, That such savings-banks now established shall not be required to have a paid-in capital exceeding $100,000.

S. S. COX,
SCOTT WIKE,
JNO. A. KASSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN SHERMAN,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
HENRY COOPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to state, with the very greatest respect to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] that I regard the order of the House allowing the Speaker to appoint during his absence a Speaker for the space of ten days as one of the most important measures in its relation to the privileges of the House that the House has ever adopted. And without suggesting any objection to the conferring of that very extraordinary power on the present Speaker, under present circumstances, it seems to me quite obvious that the person so charged with that delicate and important duty should not act as one of the ordinary members of the House or take part in the ordinary business of the House, but should consider himself as Speaker of the House and governed by the same etiquette in regard to the business as the regular Speaker is. And without in the least reflecting on what the gentleman has done in this instance, for I know this was a matter which came before my honorable friend from New York previous to his appointment as Speaker pro tempore and his action in the present matter is entirely proper, yet I take leave to make that suggestion.

Mr. COX. I concur entirely with the gentleman from Massachusetts in what he has said on the point of delicacy in regard to the future action of the Speaker pro tempore. But, as he has stated, this matter was in my charge. Speaker KERR, before he left, when choosing the committee of conference, placed me at the head of it, and I thought it fairly due to me that I should finish up that business.

Mr. HOAR. I think the gentleman was perfectly right in finishing that business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 40) to re-imburse B. F. West, of Martin's Ferry, Ohio, for internal-revenue stamps stolen from Cambridge, Ohio, post-office.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 715) for the relief of Samuel H. Canfield, postmaster at Seymour, Connecticut; and

A bill (S. No. 816) granting a pension to Laura M. Knowlton.

The message also announced that Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN and Mr. WITHERS had been appointed managers on the part of the Senate of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, in place of Mr. HOWE and Mr. BOGY, excused.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

So the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.)

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BUCKNER. On the last consideration day in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar the committee was considering the bill reported from the Private Land Claims Committee, the bill (H. R. No. 344) to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] had the floor upon that bill. This is the first consideration day we have had since the bill was before the committee, other business having prevented the House from resuming the consideration of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill indicated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] is before the committee; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HANCOCK. When this bill was under consideration some weeks since there was some objection to it, which I supposed at the time arose from the fact that the gentlemen objecting had not probably had an opportunity of looking into its provisions and the law under which it was reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order, so that the gentleman from Texas may have a proper hearing.

Mr. HANCOCK. If the gentlemen who then objected have since examined the bill, and have no further objections to allowing it to be reported favorably to the House, as other gentlemen are desirous of bringing forward other measures, I have no desire to speak merely for the purpose of speaking, and it is very evident that this House has no disposition to hear. [After a pause.] As there is no manifestation of satisfaction with the bill, I do not know that I can with propriety do otherwise than go on and make some remarks on the bill to such ears as I may possibly be able to reach.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think it is due to the honorable gentleman from Texas that he have a respectful hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has appealed to the members of the committee to observe that respectful bearing to the House that will enable the gentleman from Texas to proceed with his remarks with some hope of being heard. It is not in the power of the Chairman to force members of the committee to pay attention.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have not any dramatic exhibitions to make. I desire merely to offer a few plain remarks on the bill now under consideration. It is probably too tame and commonplace a subject to arrest the attention even of those who have heretofore objected to the passage of the bill.

This is a bill relating to certain land titles claimed by citizens of the Territory of New Mexico to which they assert a right in virtue of grants of different characters made to them by the Spanish or Mexican authorities, a right which is recognized by the eighth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I ask that that article may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mexicans now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and which remain for the future within the limits of the United States as defined by the present treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside or to remove at any time to the Mexican republic, retaining the property which they possess in the said territories or disposing thereof and removing the proceeds wherever they please without their being subjected on this account to any contribution, tax, or charge whatever.

Those who shall prefer to remain in the said territories may either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens or acquire those of citizens of the United States. But they shall be under the obligation to make their election within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, and those who shall remain in the said territory after the expiration of that year without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans shall be considered to have elected to become citizens of the United States.

In the said territories property of every kind now belonging to Mexicans not established there shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract shall enjoy with respect to it guarantees equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States.

Mr. HANCOCK. By that section of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo it will be observed that the rights of property of every character, whether it is real, personal, or mixed, whether a title in fee or of less grade to realty, are protected to the inhabitants of the country then being ceded to the United States to the same extent as the same property or right or interest of whatever character would be protected and carried into a perfect title under the laws of Mexico.

It has been objected in the first place that there is no necessity for the party wishing to perfect his title to come before Congress for the purpose of having any confirmation of his title. That to a degree may be correct. It may be that there is no absolute necessity for his doing so; but, if not, it subjects him to very great inconvenience, and in many instances great hardships, and possibly might result in the utter destruction of his right, if he be left alone dependent on the provision of the treaty referred to, unless under the laws of the United States he obtained title to his land, although it may have been a perfect title under the laws of Mexico or of Spain, as he may have obtained the title under one or the other of these governments. If his title should be assailed or his right of possession in any way interfered with so that he is compelled to enter the courts of the country, he would be compelled to prove his title as well as establish his right under it by proving the law under which it was obtained, and as they would be laws of a foreign country it might be difficult or utterly impossible for him to prove the execution of the title by reason of the disappearance of witnesses and for other reasons, and there are many other like difficulties that the party would incur if he were brought into court in proving a perfect title. Hence it has been usual, not only under the treaty made with France in reference to Louisiana and to Spain in regard to Florida, but also under this treaty with Mexico as to lands in California, New Mexico, and Arizona, to provide some means by which the party holding even a perfect title shall be able to have that perfect title recognized and established, so that it becomes a title under the laws of the Government of the United States, without compelling him to go through the devious and circuitous passages that he would have to go through if he were dependent simply upon the treaty for his right.

But it is not only perfect titles alone that are embraced by the eighth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. Every character of right, whether perfect or imperfect, whether in fee or inchoate, is equally protected by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and the United States is to carry it ont in the manner in which the parties had a right to have it carried out under the laws of Mexico or Spain, and of course in this case under the laws of Mexico, as at the time of the treaty the government of Mexico had entire and absolute jurisdiction.

This is a character of title that addresses itself to the political authorities of the country, and the political authorities alone, in the absence of any political action vested in the courts as power over titles of this character.

It has been said the uniform practice of the Government and of all governments from the time of William the Conqueror up to the present time to leave such title dependent on recognition by the legislative branch of the Government. Until the legislative branch of the Government has acted the parties have no standing in court; yet in point of fact it might be a title which has a perfect equity; every duty incumbent on the grantee had been complied with on his part, and he stands in the position to demand, and upon his demand a perfect title in fee would have been awarded to him by the former government under which he lived; yet, as he had not got such a title, he must necessarily be dependent on the legislative branch of the Government for the protection of the title left in this inchoate state by the former government.

This is the condition of quite a number of titles reported on by the surveyor-general in this instance. Some of them are probably titles which would be regarded as complete and legal titles, such as those known as pueblo grants, which are not met under our land system, and it is proper that they too, for the purpose of putting the parties in the condition of enjoying the rights of property as guaranteed to them under the treaty, should receive such legislation as has been extended to them, and that their titles should be perfected in such form as to put the holders of them in such a position as to readily present their titles in court for protection and defense.

This being the position, then, in which parties are placed by the treaty, and the character of property that is comprehended by that treaty, it becomes necessary on the part of the legislative branch of the Government to make provision for ascertaining not alone the character of the titles, but also the particular pieces of land that should be rightfully embraced within their limits. In fulfillment of that duty, Congress passed a law July 22, 1854, to which I invite the attention of members who wish to understand this question, providing for the appointment of an officer termed the "surveyor-general of New Mexico." Section 8 of that act specifies the duties which that officer shall perform with reference to the character of property embraced in the eighth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and is in these words:

That it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico; and for this purpose may issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises. He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the territory to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo of 1848, denoting the various grades of title, with his decision as to the validity or invalidity of each of the same under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States; and shall also make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each, stating the number of inhabitants in the said pueblos, respectively, and the nature of their titles to the land, such report to be made according to the form which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which report shall be laid before Congress for such action thereon as may be deemed just and proper, with a view to confirm bona fide grants and give full effect to the treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico; and, until the final action of Congress on such claims, all lands covered thereby shall be reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government, and shall not be subject to the donations granted by the previous provisions of this act.

By reversing the order of the different provisions of this section, and commencing at the last clause of the section, we find that all the lands in the Territory of New Mexico are tied up beyond the reach of individuals for any purpose, placed out of the control of the Commissioner of the General Land Office or of any other officer of the Government, until the question now under consideration shall be finally settled, until the claims set up by the citizens of that Territory, under grants from Spain or Mexico, shall have been passed upon. Hence the necessity of either passing upon those titles and confirming or rejecting them, or, if we are not able to confirm them or reject them, then disapproving of the report of the surveyor-general and sending the matter back for further investigation, in order that there may be an end to the uncertainty that overhangs the property of the Government there, and that the lands of the Territory may be put in a condition to be appropriated by citizens who may go or have gone there since the treaty, and who are probably going there from year to year, as is usually the case in all our western Territories.

We must either act upon these grants in compliance with the law to which I have just referred, or we must repeal that law and leave the citizens who claim rights under grants or cessions or titles of any character from Spain and Mexico to protect themselves as best they may after we shall have refused—and a failure to perform is a refusal—to carry out the stipulations contained in the eighth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Referring to the commencement of this section in regard to the duties of the surveyor-general, we find that while he is called a surveyor-general he is, in point of fact, a judicial officer. He is constituted a judicial tribunal, with all the necessary attributes of a tribunal to enable him to investigate the character of these titles and to determine their merits with reference to the laws under which they have been granted, with full power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to hear testimony, and to come to a determination upon this subject as would any other judicial tribunal.

But his action is not binding at all, as will be seen by reference to the next clause of the section, although it might be prima facie correct, like the decision of any other judicial tribunal. He does not present his decision either to Congress or to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be accepted as a determination of the rights of the parties who appear before him. It is his duty to report to the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it is to examine the report made to him of the various titles that have been considered by the surveyor-general; and in the next paragraph of the section it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to report to Congress the various titles acted upon by the surveyor-general and which he conceives should receive the confirmation of Congress as titles that have been rightfully granted, or as evidence of such rights to lands, to enable Congress to perfect the titles in the parties.

This is nearly in the same line of action that Congress has taken upon titles to land claimed by parties in the various territories which we have obtained under treaties with other governments, as well as the titles set up by individuals in California and heretofore in New Mexico. It is not that this is action of Congress in ratification of valid titles, but it is the perfecting of evidence of a right to land by giving the parties that which carries out the spirit and gives force and effect to the provisions of the eighth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; a duty devolved upon this Government when we accepted that as one of the terms of the settlement of the war of 1846–'48, and charged ourselves with the duty of carrying out the obligation to those citizens within that Territory in the same manner that Mexico would have done had the Territory remained a part and parcel of the Mexican republic.

Mr. LAWRENCE. How much land does this bill involve?

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not know; but a very considerable number of acres.

Mr. GUNTER. It involves about two million five hundred thousand acres.

Mr. HANCOCK. I think the gentleman is mistaken, unless he has made a calculation.

Mr. GUNTER. That is what I understood from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. HANCOCK. I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to that point, and I will refer to it in proper time.

Mr. GUNTER. It is not all in one claim, not in favor of any one individual, but of several thousand claims.

Mr. HANCOCK. How many thousands do you say?

Mr. ELKINS. There are 23,000 claims on the property now.

Mr. HANCOCK. I will state in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] who makes a very pertinent inquiry, that some of these grants are nearly two hundred years old; and some of them are for very large tracts of land. Under the government of Spain and of Mexico every settlement of individuals in the form of a town, called a pueblo, was entitled to large grants of land. Under the government of Mexico, after the revolution of 1823, every town was entitled to a grant of four leagues of land, embracing the town and the surrounding suburbs.

Mr. LAWRENCE. About how many of these grants are Mexican and how many Spanish?

Mr. HANCOCK. I am not able at once to answer that question; but there is a list here which will show the proportion of Spanish and the proportion of Mexican titles. I think the larger number, and those embracing the largest district of country, were made prior to the revolution. I have not made a calculation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have heard it said that there is a class of these grants known as Amarjo grants, many of which are alleged to be fraudulent. I do not know the facts myself.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have not met with any grant of that kind here. There are a good many pueblo grants. I have not made the calculation to which the gentleman calls my attention, but others have; and estimating the population to be what it is stated to be, if the lands embraced in this bill were divided up equally and sold it would not amount to one hundred acres apiece.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Has the Commissioner of the General Land Office examined this, and have we his opinion upon it?

Mr. HANCOCK. Not so far as I know.

Mr. GUNTER. With the consent of the gentleman, I will state that I understand the Secretary of the Interior has investigated all these claims which have been acted upon by the surveyor-general or commissioner—for he was acting in the attitude of commissioner—and that he has approved of the various claims reported here and asked to be confirmed; has recommended them to the House to be approved by its action. That is my understanding.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman will allow me to say that the report was made by the surveyor-general, and the Secretary of the Interior transmits the report to Congress. That is all there is about it.

Mr. GUNTER. My understanding is that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Interior or commission to approve the action which had been taken; that he did approve it and made the report to Congress.

Mr. HANCOCK. I will state further, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, that this bill seems to conform to the character of grants made by Mexico and by Spain in prohibiting the confirmation of a larger amount than eleven leagues in any one grant subsequent to August 18, 1823, the time of the passage of what is known as the national colonization law. From that time this was the maximum amount which could be granted to any one individual.

The necessity for legislative action arises not alone from the treaty stipulations, but from the fact that no provision has been made by which the parties interested in these titles could establish them by any action under our laws. It is a subject exclusively within the control of Congress under that clause of the Constitution which provides that—

> Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States.

One of the needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories and the property, too, belonging to citizens of the United States is found in this very act to which I refer, the act of July 22, 1854, as necessary to enable the parties who set up a right under grants or concessions of any character received from Spain or Mexico to come before the tribunal which we established and make good the claims which they assert to these lands.

After we have established our own tribunal and have subjected these parties to the trouble and expense of coming before it and bringing the evidences of their title, and after twenty-eight years have passed by without their having obtained the adjudication of their rights, it would seem a little remarkable that we ourselves should say that we yet hesitate, unless there can be shown some evidence of want of fidelity on the part of the officer. No statement based upon any fact, so far as I know, has been made that the officer acting in the capacity of surveyor-general of New Mexico has not performed the duty with ability and fidelity. Nor have I heard any one impute to the Secretary of the Interior want of fidelity in the discharge of his duty in presenting this report with his recommendation to Congress, unless the remark of my colleague [Mr. REAGAN] should be construed into a reflection upon that officer. So far as I have seen anything coming from him, he seems to have acted with his usual care and circumspection as to the subject-matter which it was his duty to present to Congress; and I will assume, until the contrary is shown, that both the surveyor-general and the Secretary of the Interior have acted not only within the scope of their jurisdiction, but faithfully and honestly.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish it to be understood that I have reflected upon the integrity of the action of the surveyor-general or any one else. What I did was to question the authority of that officer to do what is asserted here he has done and what I deny he had the right to do. I never imputed anything else.

Mr. HANCOCK. I did not understand what you meant to deny.

Mr. REAGAN. I denied that he had any judicial power, that he had the right to pass upon titles.

Mr. HANCOCK. I suppose if the surveyor-general had been called a judge my colleague would have recognized him as a judicial officer, since it is made his duty to bring these parties before him, to swear witnesses, and to pass upon the sufficiency of title.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to interrupt my colleague.

Mr. HANCOCK. You do not interrupt me.

Mr. REAGAN. I trust I understand what is meant by a judicial officer without reference to the name he may have, and I am obliged to my colleague for the suggestion that I may not know only by name what a judge is. I know this officer has to summon witnesses and report the facts to Congress; but I also know he has no power to vest or divest any title out of or into any one, and therefore that he lacks judicial authority.

Mr. HANCOCK. Here are the powers conferred upon the surveyor-general:

That it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands—

To ascertain their origin and nature. Mark that language—

under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico.

How can he do that unless he passes upon the laws of Spain and Mexico?

And for this purpose may issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises. He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the territory to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo of 1848, denoting the various grades of titles—

I presume my colleague could enumerate more than a dozen different grades of title emanating from Mexico and old Spain. He has to denote the various grades, and to do that requires critical research, extending over a period of two hundred years—

Denoting the various grades of titles, with his decision as to the validity or invalidity of each of the same under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States.

It seems to me that makes it pretty clear this officer, the surveyor-general, has precisely the functions which I have attributed to him.

Mr. PIPER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HANCOCK. I believe I will not be further interrupted.

Mr. PIPER. But one question. It says to ascertain the extent. Did he ascertain the extent of any one of these fifty-three claims?

Mr. HANCOCK. That is what we are coming to. There is nothing novel in this proceeding, and I am a little astonished my colleague should find so much to object to. In a portion of the territory embraced by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, we have had to deal with this same question. If I am not mistaken my colleague was a member of the Legislature in 1850, when a law similar to this was passed to investigate titles in that portion of the country between the Rio Grande and the Nueces River, formerly constituting part of the state of Tamaulipas, over which there was controversy for a great while and which has not yet been determined. I do not know whether my colleague was a member of that Legislature or not.

Mr. REAGAN. I was not in the Legislature of 1850, or of 1853, or 1854 when that law was passed.

Mr. HANCOCK. My colleague cannot but be familiar with the provision of that law, which is similar to the one under consideration, with the difference that they were termed commissioners, and there were more of them, there being three. The necessity was similar to that in this instance. It did not obtain as to land titles confirmed by the Republic of Texas, because under the land laws as well as the constitution of that republic parties holding titles, whether from Mexico or Spain, should deposit them in the archives of the general land office of the republic within a certain time, which protected them from being appropriated by subsequent claimants and gave them a standing in court by reason of the fact they had been archived as part of the records relating to the lands of the republic, showing what belonged to individuals and what remained still unappropriated, forming part of the public domain. Holders of land which had been a portion of Tamaulipas, and in fact occupants all along the Rio Grande, having never recognized the government of the Republic of Texas, and that government not having the power to enforce its authority, did not so deposit their titles. The time having gone by, there was no recognition of their right to the land granted by Spain or Mexico. Some of the grants embraced as much as sixty leagues. In order that justice might be done, commissioners were appointed to go to that country, receive the evidence relating to these titles to enable them to determine their character, and to report the facts to the General Land Office. If the officer representing the State of Texas, the district attorney, was satisfied of the report, the claimant did not have to rely upon his own title at all, and received a patent, and to-day, and at this time, day by day, patents are being issued for that land, some of which had been granted one hundred and fifty years ago. If the prosecuting attorney for the State of Texas was dissatisfied he could carry it up to the supreme court of the State of Texas, where a good many of those titles are still pending. Until final adjudication the land is tied up just as this land is tied up, and the same necessity exists here that there should be a settlement, in order that, as in that instance, the State may know what belongs to the public domain, and the claimant may know what land he may appropriate in virtue of his rightful claim and remain secure in the enjoyment of its possession. And the reason for issuing the patent there is identical with the reason existing here. Upon this point, as it may probably be more satisfactory, I will ask to have read from the fourteenth volume of Opinions of Attorneys-General what I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill herewith reported also provides for the issuing of a patent in each case. It is not assumed that a patent is at all necessary in order to confer or confirm title in these cases, for we are aware that our Supreme Court has decided that confirmation by act of Congress and approved survey under it are sufficient evidence of title without any patent; but we believe it due to these claimants, whose original title papers have heretofore been surrendered to the Government, that they should not be put to the trouble of providing each for himself or herself a copy of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of the act of Congress of July, 1854, of the act confirming such title and the survey made under it, in order to feel assured that the land, which in some of these cases has been in possession of these claimants or their ancestors for one hundred years, is really their property.

As American citizens, they are entitled to a simple evidence of title, and such as is given to our citizens who acquire real estate from the Government by the various modes provided by our laws. * * * In some of the acts heretofore passed in reference to lands under said treaty with Mexico patents have been required to be issued, while in others this has been overlooked; hence we provide furthermore in this bill that in all cases in which confirmation has been had without the issuing of patents, such patents shall be issued, thus placing all claims under said treaty upon an equal basis.

Mr. HANCOCK. I desire to say a word simply in application to the titles embraced within this bill of the reasoning set out in this passage from the fourteenth volume of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General which has just been read. The simple act of confirmation, going no further, would be but doing half justice. You would still leave the party interested in the title so confirmed, if he should be driven into the courts for the protection of his rights of any grade or character, to bring into the court as evidence not only his title confirmed, but all the proceedings had upon it, and evidence also of the survey made; whereas by giving to him that which he is entitled to under the treaty, a title, as he might have obtained it from the government of Mexico, you put him, as the treaty stipulates he shall be put, upon the same footing with any other citizen of the United States who holds a right to realty with a patent that presupposes the regularity of all the necessary preceding steps, and abridge the burden that otherwise would devolve upon him of bringing in this immense mass of evidence in order to establish the right to the land which would be concentrated in a simple bit of parchment or paper called usually a patent to land. This is what he is entitled to, and this is what has usually been done. But in some instances, not being expressly provided, it has been omitted, and the parties have come back subsequently and claimed it was right and proper it should be given.

Now, I can see nothing whatever that excites my distrust of any irregularity or unfairness, or job, or scheme, or steal. Most of these titles are a hundred to a hundred and fifty and some of them nearly two hundred years old. They have been in possession of the parties, especially the city of Santa Fé, which claims but four leagues of land, with a population, I understand, of some six thousand, and the only title they have, the only title any of these Mexican towns or cities have usually is the one which emanates from the town authorities, it having been confirmed to the town or city corporation in the first instance.

Mr. GUNTER. I wish to ask the gentleman one question. Have these titles to lands, which have been investigated by the surveyor-general and favorably reported on, as the gentleman has intimated, been usually recognized by the citizens there as valid titles?

Mr. HANCOCK. I cannot answer that, except historically. I am not a citizen of New Mexico.

Mr. GUNTER. You were speaking with regard to that point.

Mr. HANCOCK. I was speaking with regard to what I ascertained from the report. Unquestionably, however, they have been recognized historically; for Santa Fé is rather a historical place.

Mr. REAGAN. If my colleague [Mr. HANCOCK] will allow me, I may say in answer to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GUNTER] that a reference to the reports themselves shows that in many cases which came before the surveyor-general there were contests between different parties for the title to these lands.

Mr. GUNTER. My understanding is different. It is that as a general thing these titles are recognized, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends or reports them here for confirmation.

Mr. REAGAN. I think that very likely. Most of them are old titles and recognized as titles. But what I mean to say is that they are not titles in particular claimants that are sent here, because the records themselves show in many cases that there are two sets of claimants. It is not a question of the right of the grant, but a question between two sets of claimants.

Mr. GUNTER. That may be in some cases, but it is not generally the case.

Mr. HANCOCK. I cannot yield further to the gentlemen.

I know that the experience of my colleague [Mr. REAGAN] in Mexican titles has not been a pleasant one. For the last quarter of a century he has been fighting them, and, so far as I know, he has never whipped once. But finding some of them coming in here from New Mexico, he seems to have nerved himself up for a fresh encounter, with a determination of whipping something if he could not whip the Mexican titles at home.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to my friend indulging in humor, but I would rather that it should not be at the expense of truth.

Mr. HANCOCK. Let me call my colleague's attention to this provision of the bill:

Provided, That such confirmation shall only be construed as a quitclaim, or relinquishment of all title or claim on the part of the United States to any of the lands embraced in either of the said claims, and shall not affect the adverse rights of any person or persons to the same or any part thereof.

That was drawn with direct reference to the apprehension that my colleague seems to have that some persons may be injured if there are adverse claims to these lands.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask my colleague if he will allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. In relation to any unpleasant experience I may have had with the eleven-league grants, it is true that ever since I was quite a young man I have as earnestly as I could, sometimes successfully and sometimes unsuccessfully, fought these land frauds, and it was from seeing the enormous amount of fraud in these grants which I have seen that I desire to examine what is in this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not wish to be understood as detracting in any degree from the action of my colleague in his warfare against fraud. I know he has waged war against it, but his practiced hand ought to wield a blade against foes more worthy of his steel than the poor Mexicans, for it is the last complaint ever made on the part of the Anglo-American that the Mexican is disposed to practice any fraud in reference to land titles.

Mr. REAGAN. It was never against the Mexican that I fought; it was against those who practiced fraud in the name of the Mexicans.

Mr. HANCOCK. I am sorry I cannot please my colleague; I would like to do so; but I will not pursue the subject, for if I shall go a little further I might let out family secrets; a great many exist with which my colleague and myself are not immediately connected, but in which we were witnesses. I know this, that wherever the Mexican or the Indian or the Mongolian race, like every other foreigner, come in contact with the Yankee, they come out second best. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes as a unanimous report from the Committee on Private Land Claims, and it is in exact accordance with the precedents heretofore set by Congress in reference to these very New Mexican claims. Similar titles have been heretofore confirmed under similar laws and under precisely the same circumstances as these now recommended by the Committee on Private Land Claims. We ask that Congress shall confirm these claims. They are confirmed by numbers running up from forty-nine to one hundred and nine, and that was made an objection to the bill by the great objector of the House, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who, I regret to say, is not now present. I undertake to say, and I can prove that this legislation is in accordance with the action of Congress in regard to the territory which now constitutes the States of Louisiana, Florida, Missouri, and Arkansas. We are under treaty obligations to give these people titles from the United States. In Louisiana and in my own State commissioners were appointed with the same powers given under the act of 1854 to the surveyor-general, who is a quasi-judicial officer, to determine certain facts for Congress to act upon. But there was this difference, and it is a marked one: in Missouri and in Florida and in Louisiana there was no case where there had not been a survey made under the Spanish law. Now, in New Mexico there had been no survey and the grants involved large tracts of land. There never was a survey made in the Territory of New Mexico by the Spanish or the New Mexican authorities, hence the distinguished lawyer who drew up the act of 1854, who is better acquainted with Spanish law than any other man of the day, proposed to authorize the surveyor-general of New Mexico to determine this question, and Congress passed such a law and subsequently extended that law to the Territories of Arizona and Colorado.

Now, sir, what are the objections to this bill? This officer, invested with authority by law to determine these questions as against the United States, comes here and presents from year to year his various reports on this subject, one of which I hold in my hand. He gives the claims, the evidence, and all the facts, having had witnesses called up before him, all of which is printed in Spanish and English, and at the end of his report he states what his conclusion is, and asks Congress to act upon it. He recommends a particular claim as a just claim, according to the usages, customs, and laws of Mexico and Spain. So it is with all these claims; several of them are rejected and reported as disproved. This bill only attempts the confirmation of those claims that this officer, authorized by law to investigate and determine upon these claims, says to Congress he believes should be confirmed.

It is a matter of just as much importance to the Government as it is to these claimants, for the Government ought to know where its lands are. Under the law of 1854 no lands in New Mexico can be sold by the Government until these claims are pointed out and the lines are run. Hence, if the validity of a grant is established, the importance of having a survey of that grant; and this bill provides for that survey; that is all there is of it.

Gentlemen speak about interference between claims. So far as that is concerned, if there is a claim on the part of each of two parties, this bill does not give priority to one claimant over the other. This bill only provides a relinquishment on the part of the United States of all claims to any of the land, and these parties, if there should be a conflict growing out of these reports or surveys, are left to settle the matter between themselves in the courts. It is precisely in accordance with an act of a previous Congress confirming forty-nine claims.

Many of these claims have been presented for years to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. They have been presented to Congress for years, as I know of my own knowledge in regard to the last Congress. They have been presented to the Committee on Private Land Claims; I do not know that there has been any positive action in regard to them. But these claims have accumulated year by year until there is now a necessity that something should be done, and this bill is brought in to carry out the law of 1854.

The gentleman from California [Mr. PIPER] says why not let these claims go before the courts and be determined? That is a question that might properly have been asked when the original law was under consideration. But Congress vested in this surveyor-general the power to pass upon these claims, though not to pass upon them absolutely. Congress may reject any particular claim; Congress may say that it is void, that the report in its favor was obtained by perjury or subornation of witnesses. But shall we, upon the mere presumption that this officer is a corrupt man or has not discharged his duty, upon vague suspicion either as to the number of the claims or to any other fact connected with them, without a particle of evidence before us—shall we say that this officer, appointed under the law to do what he has done, has not acted properly, and that we will send these cases or any of them back? What will you do when you have sent the case back? Suppose you refuse to adopt the report of the committee; upon what testimony do you propose to act?

Does my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] say that he knows any of those claims to be fraudulent or that there is any testimony going to show that there is any fraud practiced or wrong done to anybody? Have any parties appeared before the Committee on Private Land Claims or before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, from New Mexico, protesting that any one or all of these claims are fraudulent or that this officer has exceeded his authority? Has anything of that sort been done? If not, can you presume fraud? Have you not vested this officer with authority, as my friend from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] said, with quasi-judicial authority? It does seem to me that the idea that because there may be fraud in some of these cases or because there are two or three million acres involved—I believe there are about 1,400,000 acres, according to my estimate. My friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] asked the question as to the amount of land involved in this bill. I would say to him that I would not give one quarter-section of land in his great State of Ohio for any grant that there is in this whole number of claims.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Do not some of these grants include mineral lands and other valuable lands?

Mr. BUCKNER. That may be. If the gentleman knows that these parties are not entitled to these lands, or that any claimant is not entitled to his particular claim, then I say it ought not to be confirmed. But I ask that if there was any ground for saying that Congress should not confirm these claims, there would be somebody somewhere interested in coming before Congress and making that fact known. We should not, however, upon mere vague, indefinite suspicion of wrong or fraud, refuse to confirm any of these claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. I will hear him.

Mr. BLOUNT. How much land is involved in this bill?

Mr. BUCKNER. According to my estimate there is involved 1,400,000 acres, and the bill is for the benefit of 24,000 people. Now, you can make your calculation, assuming this Mexican land to be worth five cents an acre, what a large donation will be made by Congress should this bill pass. On that subject allow me to say that the town of Santa Fé, with a population of seven thousand, is covered by one of these grants. Every man in that town who owns a foot of land within the grant is interested in obtaining a title which will be sufficient in a court of justice without requiring him to plead the treaty and prove that he has a title according to the Mexican law. That is one object of this bill.

But there is another reason for the bill. I have already stated that New Mexico differs from all the other Territories of this country which we have obtained by cession from Spain or France in this, that in New Mexico there has not been a survey of a single grant, and there are hundreds of grants there about which there is no question at all, and the parties claiming possession under the grants have had possession for two hundred years. There is not an instance of a survey of a grant, not one.

The land was attempted to be identified by being on a certain creek or between certain ranges of mountains, or around a certain lake. Now, this measure is designed as much for the benefit of the Government as for these parties. Not only have these claimants the right to demand that the Government shall be true to its treaty obligations with Mexico, but it is the interest of the Government of the United States that this land should be separated from the public domain so that our public officers may know where to sell and where not to sell. Hence the importance of this survey. The bill provides that the grants thus reported shall be surveyed; and then the question of the propriety of the survey may come up in the Land Office, if there should be any wrong done to anybody. But it is impossible that any wrong can be done.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. BUCKNER] a question. Do I understand him to say that the boundaries of these grants are so indefinite and uncertain that the location of the respective claims cannot be determined?

Mr. BUCKNER. I say that the exact boundaries cannot be determined.

Mr. BLAND. When the boundaries are so uncertain that they cannot be determined would not the grant be void for uncertainty? Where a grant cannot be determined by metes and bounds, how can we confirm such a grant?

Mr. BUCKNER. When I say that the exact boundaries cannot be determined, I do not mean to say that you cannot ascertain with some accuracy where the land lies. It may not be with exact accuracy; but the very object of the survey contemplated by this bill is to settle the location of these grants. We cannot say that a grant begins at a particular point, marked by a certain tree or a certain water-course, but we can know that it includes two thousand acres between certain hills or between two lakes. The object of the bill is to identify this land and vest the title in the parties interested. If there are two or more claimants for the same land, this bill will not give any one of them priority over the others; that must depend on the question who has the prior grant. But the Government must determine where this land is. I say that the surveyor-general is the officer who has been selected for this purpose; he has been authorized to take testimony, and, if necessary, go upon the land. Having made his examination, he decides that these claims are good. I do not mean to say that this officer is the purest man in the world. I know nothing of him. But I do say that it is trifling with this Congress, after this officer has so far as we know done his duty, and when there is no allegation of anything wrong, for men to get up here and say upon vague, indefinite suspicion that his action should not be confirmed. That is what I object to.

Nor will it do to say that some of these claims are fraudulent. We know nothing about that. It is a principle of law that fraud is not to be presumed; it must be proved. I say that the very fact that these claims have been brought here, and that nobody comes here from New Mexico or anywhere else protesting against them, shows that they are not fraudulent. If there are any parties interested in objecting to this confirmation, they should be here to lay their remonstrances before Congress or before the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Not a word of remonstrance or protest is heard from these parties; yet, because the claim is a large one, because it covers hundreds of thousands of acres, (though the land is not worth five cents an acre probably,) Congress is asked—to do what? To change the law and provide for taking the question before the courts. Why, sir, they have been anxious to do that. They have been anxious for some means by which they could obtain a judicial adjudication of their title. This law puts in the possession of the Government all their muniments of title which are now in the archives at Santa Fé. The Government holds those evidences of title, refusing to enable the parties to identify their lands or to establish their rights upon the flimsy pretense that there may be fraud or that these Mexicans or somebody else have sworn to something that is false.

Why, sir, Congress has always acted upon the principle on which this bill proceeds. In the State of Missouri we had first a commission of three members; afterward the recorder of land titles reported to Congress for confirmation more claims than any other body. Afterward, in 1835 or 1836, we had another board of commissioners, and they reported a large number of claims which before that time were said to be fraudulent. They came up here and Congress confirmed them upon the report of those officers.

I do not pretend to say that the method which has been adopted was the best for the settlement of these claims. That is not the question. Congress may have erred. But the law as applicable to New Mexico has now been upon the statute-book for upward of twenty years; and by amendment it has been extended to Arizona and Colorado. The surveyors-general of these different Territories have been authorized to make this examination and report to Congress. And when the properly-authorized officers, examining the case upon the ground with all the evidence before them, have made their report in favor of these claims, it does not matter whether they contain ten arpents or twenty thousand. The principle is the same whether the quantity of land in question is small or large, whether the parties interested are the seven thousand people of Santa Fé or only a few dozen persons.

The principle is the same. Unless there is evidence before this Congress that there has been wrong-doing, unless you can point to some specific case of violation of law or wrong-doing, I say Congress is bound to confirm these claims.

But suppose you do not do it, what then? Are you going to leave these people in that condition when you are under solemn treaty obligation to give them all the rights of American citizens and to protect them in their lands?

How will you do it? Change the law, say some gentlemen. Are they to go before the courts? I say, so far as our experience has gone, so far as the action of Congress and the Government is concerned, except in California, these questions have never been submitted to the courts. They have been submitted to boards, to commissioners, sometimes one, sometimes five, sometimes three. They have brought in their reports and given their opinion. Then, on the testimony and on the reports, Congress has invariably confirmed them when reported upon favorably. Thousands and thousands of acres in my State and in Louisiana and in Florida have been so confirmed. They have rejected some of course. I say Congress ought to reject in all cases where there is evidence to prove there is fraud.

I do object to the idea presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] that, because this is a large amount of land, because we have not the names given, (as the gentleman from Indiana has suggested,) because the land has to be confirmed by numbers, and not by exact designation, because all that is so, therefore, we must necessarily assume those titles are fraudulent, and ought not to be confirmed. Now, I hold in my hand a statement which I believe to be correct.

Mr. GUNTER. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly.

Mr. GUNTER. Are not these land claims presented to the House by the Commissioner of the General Land Office by numbers?

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly. I say on that subject there can be no trouble on that score. These numbers refer to the numbers in the Land Office. Every man acquainted with the mode of conveying lands in many portions of the country knows lands are conveyed by the mere number of the survey. So it is here. These surveys confirm them by number. The name is not given as in cases confirmed in Missouri when the name of the particular party was given or those claiming under him. Why? Simply because when New Mexico was first settled a large number of grants were to pueblos and towns. I believe nineteen or twenty towns are included, with a population of fifteen or twenty thousand claiming under those grants. They have no other title which they could support before a court without great expense.

I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] if you have an original grant and a survey the parties need not come to Congress, but can defend themselves before the courts. But here there are no surveys. It is absolutely important the lands owned by individuals should be separated from the public domain as well for these parties as for the Government itself.

Mr. LEAVENWORTH. Is this bill unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. BUCKNER. It is.

Mr. LEAVENWORTH. Did the committee investigate these titles?

Mr. BUCKNER. They investigated them as far as they could. We had the report in each particular case; we had the evidence in each particular case, and acted understandingly. Some papers were in Spanish, and not many of us (I can speak for myself) are familiar with that language, but they were always accompanied with translations. All the papers were examined, as well as the report of the officer in each case.

Mr. LEAVENWORTH. Has any remonstrance been sent to the committee from New Mexico?

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir. As I have before said, if there is any remonstrance, it has not come to the attention of Congress. There is no remonstrance, filed in the General Land Office. None has come before the Committee on Private Land Claims, where they would have gone, and where they ought to have gone, if there had been anything wrong about these claims.

I do not care to assert all these claims are honest and bona fide, and ought in justice and equity to be allowed. I know nothing about them; but when I see the Government of the United States intrusting certain authority and power to a certain officer, who performs the duty imposed upon him, and reports to Congress a certain statement of facts, giving his conclusions as to what should be done, I do say, unless something can be shown to the contrary, we are bound to respect his opinion and we are bound to confirm his decision; we are bound to be guided by his advice, unless something to the contrary can be clearly shown.

Mr. PIPER. Has the surveyor-general reported the exact number of acres embraced in any one case? Does the gentleman say that any one of these claims has been accurately surveyed?

Mr. BUCKNER. The very object of the bill is to provide for surveys. The fact is, these grants from the Mexican and Spanish governments were in some cases for two thousand, and in others for ten thousand, and so on, being perfectly indefinite as to exact quantity; and the very object of the bill is that the grants shall be surveyed. If any question arises as to whether the survey has been too much or too little, it can be settled when the survey is returned. Then is the time to bring up the question whether it is within that grant or not.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask my colleague another question; whether it would not be better to first survey these lands, if it is possible to survey them by any metes and bounds given in the grant, and then apply to Congress for confirmation, so that we may know what we are confirming and what we are not confirming?

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman's question on that point would have been a very good one in the Congress of 1854, that passed this act. That would have been the proper time to present that view.

Mr. PIPER. That very act itself included a provision that the surveyor-general shall ascertain the extent of these claims. Let the gentleman look at the law, and he will find it there. He has not ascertained the extent of one of them, by the gentleman's own admission.

Mr. BUCKNER. He has not ascertained by survey——

Mr. PIPER. Of not one of them.

Mr. BUCKNER. As I have already stated, he has not ascertained by survey definitely any claims, and the very object of this bill is to enable him to do that.

Mr. PIPER. What is it to ascertain the extent of the claims? It is to know the number of acres of which they are composed.

Mr. BUCKNER. I think it a very important matter to ascertain whether a party has a proper claim or not. And that is what he decides there; that they have a grant. And this bill provides that it shall be located according to the best evidence.

Mr. PIPER. When the surveyor-general ascertained that these parties had a grant he should have ascertained the extent of it.

Mr. BUCKNER. The great difficulty with my friend on this question of land claims in New Mexico is that in his country, as in my State, the land was originally granted by surveys. There is no instance in the State of Missouri where the land was not originally granted by survey. That was the first thing that was done, and the party was then put in possession. But here is a very different sort of case. There was no survey in New Mexico; not one to start with. In all the territories of New Mexico and Arizona and a part of Colorado, there was not a survey made under the Spanish or Mexican governments, and hence the first thing to be decided is: is there a real grant binding on the Government of the United States in virtue of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. When you ascertain there was such a grant, you can ascertain the amount of it. If that is left indefinite the surveyor-general is authorized to go and make a survey. And I say that is no new thing in this House. It was done in the act by which you confirmed forty-nine claims some years ago. But my friend objects because we did not go at this thing according to California fashion. He thinks, therefore, it is all wrong.

Mr. BLAND. If my colleague will yield to me, I will say that I think he is mistaken about California. I happened to live there a good while myself, and hence my opposition to these grants. The lands in that State were covered by indefinite grants just like this, and they gave the people of that State more trouble than anything else, and set them back years, and they are not out of litigation yet. Hence my objection to confirming titles or passing upon titles the validity of which this House knows nothing about, and leaving it to some surveyor or some man to run off that whole Territory under a single grant. I protest against it on account of the injustice California suffered in this respect.

Mr. BUCKNER. They had courts in California to decide those questions, and there was there a great deal of fraud and a great deal of difficulty in finding it out. Here Congress thought it best to direct the surveyor-general to find out what the courts did in California. There is generally a great deal of difficulty about land claims; and whether there be any fraud or not, as my friend from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] said, we have our land in it and ought to do what the circumstances of the case require. The objection urged by my colleague is rather to the law under which we are now proceeding, the law of 1854. That law was drawn up by Judah P. Benjamin, who was more familiar perhaps with civil and Spanish law than any other man that was ever in Congress. He, as chairman of the Private Land Claims Committee of the Senate, introduced this law, and we are now acting under it.

